The last Concert of the Festival Choral Society, on March 29, was devoted to Mendelssohn's "Elijah," and the continued popularity of the work was attested by the crowded state of the building, which was in marked contrast with the thin attendance at some of the previous Concerts of the series. The principal vocalists were Madame Nordica, Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Mr. Watkin Mills. Madame Nordica especially impressed the audience by her dramatic rendering of "Hear ye, Israel"; Miss Hilda Wilson acquitted herself of the principal contralto music in an earnest and conscientious manner; Mr. Edward Lloyd sang the tenor music with great fervour and refinement, especially stirring the enthusiasm of the audience in "Then shall the righteous"; whilst Mr. Mills was more than usually successful in the music of the Prophet. The choruses generally were admirably rendered and the performance of the band would have been equally praiseworthy but for the occasional over-zeal of the cornets. Mr. Perkins did full justice to the organ accompaniments, and Mr. Stockley's conducting left nothing to be desired.

Lyric music last month was unusually abundant. On the 2nd ult. the Carl Rosa Light Opera Company commenced a short engagement here with Planquette's "Paul Jones," in which the principal parts were played by Miss Camille D'Arville as Yvonne and Mr. Michael Dwyer as the buccaneer hero. The following week Gilbert and Sullivan's "Yeomen of the Guard" was introduced, for the first time in Birmingham, by one of Mr. D'Oyley Carte's companies, with Miss Margaret Cockburn, Miss Elsie Cameron, Miss Haidee Crofton, Mr. Charles Conyers, Mr. George Thorne, and Mr. David Fisher in the principal parts. Both these novelties were well received, and Sullivan's work drew crowded houses during the ten days over which its run extended.

On Good Friday, the Midland Musical Society, encouraged by its experience on the previous anniversary, again gave a performance of Gounod's "Redemption" at popular prices, and was rewarded with an overflowing attendance. The chorus was a tolerably powerful one, though somewhat wanting in refinement and precision, and the band was fairly efficient; but for the full effect of the work, of course, larger resources were needed. Miss Lilian Mills, who undertook the principal soprano music, gave the solo "From Thy love as a Father" with much expressiveness; Miss Florence Bourne was especially effective in the solo "While my watch I am keeping"; Mr. J. Hartland gave a satisfactory account of the principal tenor music, and valuable aid was rendered in the other solo portions by Mr. Percy Taunton, Mr. G. Harris, and Mr. J. Snape. The organ accompaniments were admirably rendered by Mr. C. W. Perkins.

MUSIC IN BLACKBURN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

AN Organ Recital was given on the evening of Tuesday, the 9th ult., in Chapel Street Congregational Church, by Mr. Kendrick Pyne, the Organist of Manchester Cathedral and Town Hall. The organ at this place of worship has recently been enlarged and several new stops have been added to it; Mr. Pyne's clever playing showed off to the full the power and sweetness of the instrument. Six vocal selections filled up the evening's programme, Mr. Thornborough, the Organist at the Church, singing "How vain is man" ("Judas Maccabæus"), and Mr. Higginson "Revenge, Timotheus cries" ("Alexander's Feast").

On Thursday, the 11th ult., the Blackburn Philharmonic Society drew its season to a close with a very successful miscellaneous Concert in the Exchange Hall. The principal attraction was Mr. Edward de Jong, the eminent flautist, who played a couple of Fantasias—on a German air by Boehm and on Neapolitan airs by Paggi. The Conductor of the Society, Mr. Tattersall, played as a pianoforte solo one of Mendelssohn's "Lieder ohne Worte" (No. 19, in A flat) and Weber's "Il moto continuo" Sonata (Op. 24). He also gave, as a solo on the harmonium, a selection from "Guillaume Tell." The chief performers were Miss Horner, whose sympathetic voice was heard to full advantage; Miss Mercer, Miss D. Duckworth, Miss Horne, Mr. Bury, and Mr. Whitaker. The choir did its work well, the magnificent chorus "O gladsome Light" (from "The Golden Legend") being splendidly given. Wesley's "Praise of Music" and the part-songs "Comin' thro' the rye" and "Home, sweet home," were also well sung. The Society will commence at once the rehearsals of Rossini's "Moses in Egypt" for the opening Concert next season.

On Friday, the 12th ult., a Concert of Chamber Music was given in the rooms of the Literary Club. The programme included two songs in English; a French song, with violoncello obbligato; solos for the violin, viola, violoncello, and the pianoforte; a duet for the violoncello and pianoforte; and a couple of trios for the three instruments. Miss F. B. Taylor was the vocalist; Mrs. J. H. Stones, violinist; Mr. Carl Fuchs, violoncellist; and Mr. I. D. Bird, pianist.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE Dublin Musical Society (re-constituted 1889) started bravely on its new career on March 28, with a fine performance of Gounod's "Mors et Vita." The Concert took place, as usual, in the Concert Hall of the Royal University, which was crowded in every part.

Although four years have elapsed since its first production at Birmingham, "Mors et Vita" is new to Dublin, except for a church performance of it in 1887, under Dr. Joseph Smith. The Dublin Musical Society has, in commencing its new life, placed the music-loving citizens of Dublin under an obligation by presenting to them, on a complete scale, this noble creation of the French master, a worthy successor to his celebrated "Redemption." The principal singers engaged were Miss Anna Williams, Madame Belle Cole, Mr. Iver McKay, and Mr. John Horan, jun., at whose hands the beautiful quartets with which the work abounds received full justice. The choir of the Society has in no way degenerated from its high standard of former times, but appeared reinforced and reinvigorated in all its divisions; and, having some congenial work to do, did it well. The band showed an improved power in the upper strings, but its brass was somewhat excessive in strength if not in quantity. Mr. Joseph Robinson, on resuming his accustomed place as Conductor, was warmly received. Mr. Levey and Signor Papini led the band, and Mr. Horan, sen., was Organist.

On March 30 the Dublin Orchestral Union gave the first Concert of its tenth season at the Antient Concert Rooms, under the direction of Mr. W. Telford, Mus. Bac. The programme included Mendelssohn's Overture to "A Midsummer Night's Dream," Gounod's Ballet Music to "Faust," and Beethoven's Pianoforte Concerto in C minor, which last, with Mrs. Miley (née Rosenthal) at the solo instrument, was equally creditable to soloist and orchestra. The Union now numbers fifty performers, and deserves support as being the only avowed exponent of symphony music in Dublin.

The Chamber Music Recitals at the Royal Dublin Society have come to a close for the season, and their discontinuance will be regretted by many. Some changes in the personnel were necessitated by the indisposition of Mr. Lauer, viola, and Signor Esposito, pianist, whose respective places were taken by Mr. Stein and Mdlle. Van Eyk. Mr. G. Bell also replaced Mr. Newman as second violin, the other executants remaining as before—Signor Papini, first violin, and Mr. Rudersdorff, violoncello. On the 1st ult., in addition to Haydn's Quartet (Op. 77, No. 2) and Grieg's Sonata in C minor (Op. 45), for pianoforte and violin, a highly interesting Septet by Saint-Saëns, in E flat, for pianoforte, trumpet, two violins, violoncello, and bass, was performed, the pianoforte parts on this day being ably performed by Mrs. Joseph Robinson. On the 8th and 15th ult. the Recital opened with Mendelssohn's Quartet in D major (Op. 44, No. 1). Mdlle. Van Eyk played the "Waldstein" to general satisfaction, and Rubinstein's Trio in F and Schumann's Quintet in E flat were also given.

Signor Papini's benefit Concert took place at the Antient Concert Hall, on the 13th ult., and Mr. Levey's at the Gaiety Theatre, on the 15th ult. At the former, Beethoven's Septet in E flat was introduced for the second time this season, the executants being Signor Papini (violin), Mr. Stein (viola), Mr. Rudersdorff (violoncello), Mr. May (contra-basso), Mr. Conroy (clarinet), Mr. Brasfort (horn), and Dr. Littledale (bassoon). Messrs. Joseph Robinson, Roeder, and Collinson acted as accompanists, and some of our best vocalists gave their valuable aid. At the latter Concert the entertainment was varied by a performance of Celiier's Operetta "In the Sulks," in which Miss Helen Conway, Mr. J. F. Jones, and Mr. Malcolmson sustained the characters with much ability. The band, reinforced from the Orchestral Union, gave some selections; and solos, vocal and instrumental, filled up the programme.

The Dublin Amateur Operatic Society gave four further performances of Wallace's "Maritana" in the Queen's Theatre, all of which were well attended.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE Edinburgh Amateur Orchestral Society gave a third Concert, on the 8th ult., under the conductorship of Mr. Carl Hamilton. The Overtures to "Der Freischütz" and to "Semiramide," Sterndale Bennett's G minor Symphony, Mendelssohn's Rondo Brillante for pianoforte and orchestra, and a few songs formed the programme.

Mr. Moonie's Male Voice Choir made its first appearance in public on the 10th ult. The principal performances were Mendelssohn's "Fest Gesang" and "To the Sons of Art." A variety of songs, part-songs, and instrumental solos followed.

On the 11th ult. a private Concert was given by Mr. Waddell, at which his pupils performed Beethoven's C minor Symphony, the Largo from Bach's Concerto in D, Grieg's Suite, and a number of overtures and solos.

Some members of the Carl Rosa Opera Company, including Miss Fanny Moody, Miss Lily Moody, Mr. John Child, and Mr. Charles Manners, gave an evening Concert on the 15th ult. to a large audience in the Music Hall. The vocal numbers were varied by violin solos by Herr Slapoffski. Mr. R. Buchanan accompanied.

Brahms's Requiem was performed on the evening of the 16th ult., followed by Gounod's Motet "Gallia," Brahms's Quartet in G minor, and Mendelssohn's 98th Psalm. This Concert was given by a private choir, under the conductorship of Mr. Kirkhope, for the benefit of the Summerbank Home for Children.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW AND THE WEST OF SCOTLAND.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE Glasgow Choral Union brought its season to a close on the evening of the 4th ult., when the programme was solely devoted to chamber music. This was a novelty of no mean import in the annals of the premier Choral Society in the West of Scotland, and the experiment was so successful that, in all probability, it will be repeated. Dr. Joachim and party have for many years paid an annual visit to Edinburgh, but Glasgow has, hitherto, been passed by—a sort of tacit reproach against the musical tastes of the local concert-goers, which can easily enough be remedied. The interest in the new venture was very great, every corner of St. Andrew's Hall was occupied, and the enthusiasm accorded Dr. Joachim and his coadjutors—Messrs. Piatti, Ries, A. Gibson, and Miss Fanny Davies—reached a point rarely witnessed amongst "fashionable" folks. Touching the programme—not a strong one, by the way—it will suffice to say that it comprised Mozart's Quartet in C major (No. 6), the Andante and Variations from the "Kreutzer" Sonata, Schumann's Pianoforte Quintet, and solos by Miss Davies, Mr. Piatti, and the accomplished Hungarian violinist himself, who was heard in the well-worn "Il Trillo del Diavolo." The young Birmingham pianist fairly divided the honours of the evening with Dr. Joachim, achieving also in the Quintet a success which seemed to surprise even her warmest admirers. After the Concert the Glasgow Society of Musicians entertained Messrs. Joachim, Piatti, Ries, Gibson, Dr. Underwood, the American Consul, &c. The company, over which Mr. Julius Seligmann presided, numbered 170, and it was enlivened—let it be told with bated breath—by the efforts of a conjuror, who bewildered, to their own special delight, both the greatest violin and violoncello players of the present age.

The Paisley Choral Union has long held an honourable position amongst kindred societies in the West, alike as regards its vocal resources, the esprit de corps of the members, and the enterprise of the management. Early in the season Mr. James Barr, the energetic Conductor, had looked approvingly at "Callirhoë," and he had no hesitation in placing Dr. Bridge's Cantata in rehearsal. A large measure of interest centred in the performance of the work, which took place on Friday evening, the 5th ult. Many amateurs from Glasgow, &c., found their way to the George A. Clark Hall on this occasion, and it ought at once to be said that the latest musical setting of the old Greek legend met with a flattering reception. The Westminster organist may revel at times in harmonic conundrums, but his escapades command, nevertheless, interest, his dramatic vein is surprisingly vigorous, melodic grace pervades the Cantata, and the orchestration is often laid out on picturesque lines. At this time of day, however, the contents of the work need no detail in these pages. It is enough to record that the Birmingham Cantata was admirably cared for by the Paisley choristers, and more particularly in the difficult number at the end of Part I., where the frenzied crowds are depicted as giving way to the miseries of the plague. The lengthy and graphic duet in this division was in the adequate charge of Miss Emily Spada and Mr. Iver McKay, and in the fine scene in Part III. the new American soprano's declamatory powers stood her in good stead. Mr. W. H. Cole led a band of about forty, numbering many capable players, who contributed in no small degree to the success of this, the first performance of "Callirhoë" in Scotland. The Cantata was preceded by Mr. Hamish MacCunn's "Bonnie Kilmeny" (an early work from the pen of the young Greenockian), to whose attractive strains the choir and band did every justice.

Another example of Mr. MacCunn's ability was recently given by the South Side Choral Society (Glasgow). This was his setting of Campbell's fine poem "Lord Ullin's Daughter." It cannot be said that the performance was successful; the desire was praiseworthy, but the means at the command of the Conductor, Mr. C. Alison Ker, were not adequate. Mr. George Taggart had somewhat better material at his call on the evening of the 9th ult., when "Callirhoë" drew a great many interested amateurs to the City Hall, Glasgow. Only a fairly good performance can be recorded; still, the efforts of the Bridgeton Choral Society showed both earnest endeavour and the spirit of the management in taking up the Cantata.

Space, it is to be feared, can only afford brief reference to one or two other Concerts given hereabouts during the past month. Amongst these mention may be made of that by the Glasgow St. Cecilia Choral Society, which revived Henry Smart's "Bride of Dunkerron"; a performance of "The Messiah" by the Dumbarton Choral Union, wherein Mr. Andrew Black, the rising baritone, achieved a gratifying success; and the annual appearance of the Kyrle Choir, in aid of the funds of that deserving organisation. Glasgow folks turn out well to the Concerts given by Mr. C. Hall Woolnoth's Society, and on this occasion fresh interest surrounded the doings of the amateurs. The Conductor had set Longfellow's "The Skeleton in Armour" to music, had named his workmanship a "Choral Ballad," and dedicated it to his choir. The "Ballad" is, without doubt, a promising effort, showing, as was to have been expected, strong sympathy with the modern school of thought, as also melodic fancy of an agreeable type. The pianoforte accompaniment, so well played by Mrs. Woolnoth, is a strong feature in the work, and the writing for the voices is often dramatic. Both the "Ballad" and Gounod's "Troisième Messe Solennelle," with which the Concert opened, were carefully sung, the soprani being, once more, far and away the best section of the choir. An agreeable evening was given at the Bath Hotel, Glasgow, under the auspices of "The Glee and Catch Club," an interesting body of amateurs summoned not long ago to enthusiastic action by Dr. W. A. Barrett. Over the fragrant weed some really excellent part-singing was heard, thanks to the intelligence of the members of the Club and their capable Conductor, Mr. Allan W. Young.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

AT its twelfth and final Concert of the present season, held on the 2nd ult., the Philharmonic Society gave a fine performance of Mr. Cowen's "Ruth." The performance was given under the direction of the composer, and it need not be said that Mr. Cowen had a very warm greeting on making his appearance to conduct his music. The principal vocalists were Miss Anna Williams (Ruth), Miss Hope Glen (Naomi), Mr. Edward Lloyd (Boaz), Mr. Watkin Mills (An Elder), and Mrs. Andersen (Orpah). The choruses were unusually well sung, special and careful study having been bestowed upon them. Mr. Best was at the organ.

For the usual Lenten Oratorio performances at St. Peter's Pro-Cathedral, Bottesini's Oratorio "The Garden of Olivet" was given on March 28 and the 4th ult., under the direction of Mr. Burstall, the Cathedral Organist. The choir numbered upwards of seventy voices, the accompaniments being played on the organ by Mr. Charles Collins.

Mr. Bernard Stavenhagen gave a most successful Pianoforte Recital in the Philharmonic Hall, on the afternoon of March 30, when a very large and enthusiastic audience assembled. As befitting the chief exponent of Liszt's music, Mr. Stavenhagen's programme was largely devoted to the compositions of his renowned master, who was represented by the Sonata in B minor, "Chant Polonais" (Chopin), Etuden, E major and G sharp minor (Paganini), and "Rhapsodie Hongroise" (No. 13). The other pieces were Beethoven's A major Sonata (Op. 110), Schumann's "Papillons," and Haydn's Variations in F minor. Mr. Stavenhagen, who was heard in Liverpool before at one of the now defunct Hallé Concerts, made a great impression by his wonderful playing at this Recital.

The second holder of the Liverpool Scholarship at the Royal College of Music is a singer, Miss Pattie Hughes, of Anfield, Liverpool, who was selected out of the six candidates left for the final tests in London. There were two singers, two violinists, one pianist, and one organist sent up by the local examiners in Liverpool. Miss Pattie Hughes is well known as a singer hereabouts, and much interest is felt in her future career, for her voice and style justify bright hopes. The Scholarship is derived from the interest of a sum of £3,000 contributed in Liverpool, and is tenable for three years, with a possible extension to five years. The first holder was Miss Jenkins, a pianist.

At the Meeting of the North-Western Section of the National Society of Professional Musicians, held in Liverpool on the 13th ult., some good music was given, notably Mr. Cowen's Quartet in C minor, which has now been thrice performed in Liverpool in a short space of time. Miss Margaret Webster played the pianoforte part most artistically, being assisted by Mr. Theodore Lawson (violin) and Mr. Lucas (viola). Among the original music contributed by members may be specially mentioned the beautiful "Romance" for violin, composed by Dr. W. H. Hunt, and played by Mr. Theodore Lawson.

A benefit performance of "The Messiah" was given on behalf of Mr. James Sanders by the "Stowell-Brown Guild," in Myrtle Street Chapel, on the 11th ult., Mr. W. H. Jude presiding at the organ. No one has done more for the promotion of choral singing in Liverpool than Mr. Sanders, who fully deserved the public appreciation of his labours which was extended to him upon this occasion.

Mr. W. H. Jude, who has lately emerged from a too long retirement, has given some enjoyable Concerts, at which his own clever solo performances have been supplemented by his newly-formed Concert Company, which is a strong one, and includes Mrs. Andersen, Miss Janet Russell, Mr. T. Barlow, and Mr. E. Grime.

The Liverpool Musical Association terminated the season by a "Musical Evening," held in the Association Hall, Mount Pleasant, on Saturday evening, the 13th ult. The programme was miscellaneous, the solo vocalists including Madame Laura Haworth, Mr. Fred. Owens, and Mr. J. A. Muir. The able and popular Conductor of the Society, Mr. J. T. Swift, also appeared as a vocalist, besides contributing in other ways to the success of the Concert.

The usual free performance of "The Messiah" was given in St. George's Hall, on Good Friday afternoon, when the audience was mainly, if not entirely, composed of the poorer classes, for whom the performance is intended. The principal vocalists were Madame Isabel George, Miss Annie Richardson, Mr. James Leyland, and Mr. Bantock Pierpoint. Mr. Hudson, of Southport, was at the organ, and Mr. Argent conducted.

The music heard in Liverpool on Good Friday included a Concert by the Carl Rosa Opera Company in the Court Theatre, and a Concert in the Shakespeare Theatre by Mr. Cantor's Concert Company, assisted by Mr. Barton McGuckin. Rossini's "Stabat Mater" was performed on this occasion. The musical season is now practically over.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE scattered remnants of our musical season have been gathered up during the past month, and now all will be quiet till chill October evenings again drive us indoors and force us to seek the solace and refreshment of sweet sounds. The Pianoforte Recitals of Sir Charles Hallé—whose seventieth birthday should evoke some warm acknowledgment of his claims upon us—have been interleaved by the clever performances of Mr. Stavenhagen, who gave us opportunity of weighing, as accurately as we may hope to do (now that the composer has left us) the fugitive charms of many brilliant and delicate passages, but of lamenting the want of sustained and consistent purpose in Liszt's Sonata in B minor, and enabled us to estimate the value of much most difficult modern music. Especially were the Paganini "Studies," as arranged by Liszt, manipulated with wonderful skill and nicety of shading. Mr. Stavenhagen's next visit to Manchester will be looked forward to with great interest, and certainly will be more liberally rewarded. But we hope that he will not again promise us a great Sonata like Beethoven's Op. 110, and, without a word of explanation, let us down to the hackneyed so-called "Moonlight," which, by the way, was interpreted somewhat mechanically.

The suburban Choral Societies have, like the more central institutions, been winding up their campaigns and summoning their friends to listen to the results of their perseverance during the winter. To those Societies we are very greatly indebted for continued and increasing research among unfamiliar works. The Athenæum Musical Society, the Vocal Society (under Dr. Watson), and other like associations of earnest amateurs, are doing thoroughly good service; and a praiseworthy example of friendly feeling to a local musician has been shown by Mr. R. H. Wilson, Mus. Bac., in connection with the Broughton Musical Society, in reviving Dr. Hiles's Cantata "The Crusaders," which was selected for the Chicago Festival of last summer as the representative English work. In every respect Mr. Wilson's undertaking was so successful that he designs immediately to give another performance with the aid of the South Manchester Vocal Society, which, also, he conducts.

But, as it is impossible for the smaller Societies to grapple with the expense of anything like a complete band, they necessarily confine themselves to the presentation of a thoroughly polished choral rendering of the works they undertake. Hence we welcome, with grateful acknowledgment, such novelties as have, during the past season, been vouchsafed us under Sir Charles Hallé's baton. His orchestral programmes are always liberally interspersed with works which students eagerly desire to hear; and, since Christmas, the choral nights have been equally interesting. As a most timely and happy proof of the wisdom of a bold and enterprising policy, the Free Trade Hall has, on each occasion, whether for Dr. Mackenzie's "Rose of Sharon," for Verdi's "Requiem," or for Rubinstein's "Paradise Lost," been so densely crowded as entirely, and for ever, to destroy the fear lest well-chosen novelties should fail to draw remunerative audiences. Apart altogether from the obvious duty of keeping the musical experience of the public on a level with the advance of the age, and quite irrespective of any personal estimate of the enduring worth of new works, musicians have a right to expect from every concert-giver such opportunity as he may be able to afford of judging of the progress of Art in its many channels and developments. It is to be hoped that as much energy will now be shown in our choral as has long been evinced in our purely orchestral undertakings. The English will never lose their love of the full massive effects of combined voices and instruments, and will never fail to honour and reward due exertion made to supply them with adequate interpretation of works thus specially adapted to their taste and peculiarly suited to their idea of what is loftiest and purest in poetic embodiment and aspiration. It is strange that, among the many efforts made to attract lovers of music on the closing evening of the week, and with the evidence of serious and thoughtful intention offered by the gatherings at the Town Hall, to listen to Mr. Pyne's able Organ Recitals, no one has essayed, on an adequate scale, the performance of Oratorio. Everything points to the success of such an undertaking if spiritedly designed and vigorously managed.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

A FINE performance of "The Golden Legend" was given, on the 1st ult., by the Tonic Sol-fa Association. The work had only been once previously heard in the town and its comparative novelty, together with the expected excellence of the performance, attracted a large audience to the Music Hall. Under the direction of Mr. H. Coward, Sir Arthur Sullivan's masterpiece was rendered in almost faultless style. The vigorous, yet refined, singing and perfect intonation of the chorus call forth the highest meed of praise. The "Christe Eleison" and the ever-popular Evening Hymn were perhaps the best efforts of the choristers. The elaborate orchestral accompaniments were well given under the leadership of Mr. John Peck. The quartet of principals comprised Miss Jessie Moorhouse (Elsie), Miss S. A. Gill (Ursula), Mr. C. Blagbro' (Prince Henry), and Mr. S. Johnson (Lucifer).

On the 5th ult. the Brincliffe Orchestral Society gave a Concert in the Music Hall, playing Mozart's Symphony in C (Op. 36), Overture to "Titus," a selection from "Martha," &c. Mr. Schollhammer conducted.

Mr. A. R. Gaul's "Joan of Arc" was given for the first time in Sheffield on the 8th ult., by the Uppertorpe Musical Society. The Society mentioned possesses an excellent body of chorus-singers who, under the direction of Mr. J. Beaumont, easily surmounted the not very formidable difficulties of Mr. Gaul's Cantata. The tunefulness of the work, together with its creditable rendering, greatly pleased the audience. The martial choruses were given with spirit, while phrasing and the necessary gradations of tone were not wanting. The principals were selected from the ranks of the Society.

Mr. E. H. Lemare, F.C.O., gave an Organ Recital in the Albert Hall on the 16th ult. Miss Eleanor Rees and Mr. Herbert Reeves were the vocalists, and Mr. J. A. Rodgers, pianist. Mr. Lemare played Bach's Toccata and Fugue in D minor, an admirable selection from "Carmen," the Overture to "Der Freischütz," a movement from Widor's No. 5 Organ Symphony, and a Gavotte composed by himself, a pleasing little piece admirably suited to the organ. Miss Eleanor Rees, who was in fine voice, was recalled after each of her three songs, a similar compliment being paid to Mr. Herbert Reeves.

Sir J. Stainer's Cantata "The Crucifixion" was performed on Good Friday in St. Philip's Church. The choral portions were admirably rendered, and the heartiness with which the vast congregation joined in the hymns, which are introduced into the work proved the utility of the congregational rehearsals which had been held. This beautiful setting of the Story of the Cross was much enjoyed. Mr. J. Beaumont presided at the organ.

MUSIC IN WALES.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE Cwmrydorian Glee Society at Newport held its first annual Soirée on Monday, the 1st ult., the chairman being Mr. J. G. Ellis, the President of the Society. An interesting and varied programme of vocal and instrumental music was performed, which gave great satisfaction. Mr. Ben Owen conducted.

The members of the Blaenavon Choral Union gave two performances of Haydn's "Creation" on Thursday and Friday, March 28 and 29, at the Blaenavon Town Hall, under the conductorship of the veteran Mr. Thomas James, late of Dowlais. The hall was very nicely decorated, the names of the great composers being displayed in the most conspicuous places. The chorus consisted of about 250 voices, specially selected from the various choirs in the town, and the solos were in the hands of Miss Adeline Paget, Mr. Dyved Lewis, and Mr. Egbert Roberts, all of whom gave a just and musicianlike rendering of the music that fell to their share. The choral singing was excellent, and, taken altogether, the performances were a great success, it being admitted on all sides that a more excellent rendering of the "Creation" had never been given here. It is intended to devote the proceeds to the musical tuition of certain young persons in the town, who have not themselves the means wherewith to obtain the necessary tuition for the development of their undoubted talent.

On Thursday, the 4th ult., a new organ was opened at St. Andrew's Church, Cardiff. It is a fine instrument, built by Messrs. H. Willis and Sons, with three rows of keys, thirty-nine stops, and eight composition pedals. Mr. T. E. Aylward was the Organist, and performed a selection of music by Mendelssohn, S. S. Wesley, Henry Smart, and others. A sermon was preached by the Rev. C. J. Thompson, Vicar of St. John's, to a crowded congregation. Describing music as the wondrous interpreter of the soul of man, and recalling the power and beauty of some well-known pieces of sacred music, such as "O rest in the Lord" and the Hallelujah Chorus from "The Messiah," he went on to say that all church architecture and art was the chief symbol in the land of the strength and eternity of God, and the organ was the soul of the Church, and he asked them to look upon music as not only an adjunct of worship, but a lofty standard to raise them to higher and holier things.

At St. David's Roman Catholic Church, on March 24, was performed, for the first time in Swansea, Dr. Stainer's "Crucifixion," with some of the Roman Catholic hymns adapted. The choir of the church were the vocalists throughout. At the same place, on Sunday evening, the 7th ult., was performed Rossini's "Stabat Mater," on which occasion the choir were assisted by a few amateur vocalists and, in addition to the organ, an orchestra of fifteen led by Mr. J. Squire. Before the performance commenced, the Rev. Canon Wilson from the pulpit delivered a few pertinent and interesting remarks on the hymn from a literary, religious, and musical point of view, containing information on the subject generally, likely to tend to a better and more intelligent appreciation of the composition by those of the congregation who had no previous knowledge of it. The work was very well rendered throughout, a special word of praise being due to Miss Minnie Robinson, a rising young singer with a pure soprano voice, to whom was given the "Fac ut portem," which she sang very well, although it was evidently too low. On Easter Sunday the Mass was Hummel in B flat, with orchestral accompaniment. The performance was one of the most satisfactory we have heard at this church, the result of frequent and careful rehearsals. A noticeable feature in the service was a violoncello solo, with organ accompaniment, introduced as an offertory. It was splendidly rendered by Mr. W. H. Squire, A.R.C.M., both style and tone being irreproachable. The Organist of the Church is Mr. W. F. Hulley, whose talents are too well known to require any special notice here.

At Trinity Church, Swansea, the choir performed Dr. Stainer's "Daughter of Jairus," on Thursday evening, the 11th ult. There were one or two numbers that produced a favourable impression, notably the "Wailing" chorus, for female voices, and the last chorus, which was sung with a fair amount of spirit. Mr. C. M. Bill was the Organist and Choirmaster.

On the 11th ult. the Newport Philharmonic Society closed a very successful season with a performance of Mendelssohn's "Elijah," the solos being taken by Miss Emily Spada, Miss Eleanor Rees, Mr. Henry Piercy, and Mr. Robert Grice. The orchestra was led by Mr. Woodward, and the Conductor was Mr. E. Bernard Newman, honorary Conductor to the Society. The manner in which the choir rendered the choruses speaks well for their training.

MUSIC IN THE RIVIERA.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

A WINTER passed on the Riviera—the favourite resort of Englishmen—is suggestive of many sad considerations to the musician and the music-lover. Nice, having on its west Cannes, and on its east Mentone, Monte Carlo, and Beaulieu, can boast of the longest "season" over all seaside watering places, summer and winter resorts. Visitors seem to take the Riviera by storm towards October, and fashionable people are still to be met with towards the latter end of April and the beginning of May. The "Patres conscripti" and the members of the committee for "les fêtes de Nice" do much in the way of providing all sorts of amusements for their visitors, but they seem to have an eye to all classes and not to the chosen few.

Subjoined is a list of all that has been done as regards music during the past seven months; let an impartial judge see and decide whether it is not time to put an end to this state of things.

Music—in the higher sense of the word—can be heard only in two places, that is at the Theatre of Nice and at the Cercle des Etrangers at Monte Carlo. Though there is still much room for improvement in the performances given at the Théâtre Municipal, yet, seeing the moderate amount of the subscription and the great expense of the management—all the members of the chorus, orchestra, and corps de ballet having to be recruited abroad—it would be unfair to say much against it. The répertoire is good; it contains as its stock-operas "Les Huguenots," "La Juive," "Le Prophète," "La Favorita," "Guillaume Tell," "Faust," &c., to which this year have been added such novelties of undisputed worth as "Herodiade," "Le Cid," "Manon," and "Le Roi d'Ys."

The Cercle des Etrangers at Monte Carlo gives two Concerts daily in its sumptuous concert-room, and during the winter two operatic performances weekly, with an excellent caste from Paris. Everybody is admitted gratis to the Concerts, which, with the exception of the two series of twenty Concerts each, called respectively the "Classical" and the "International" Concerts, are of the very lightest kind. The programmes are made up of pot-pourris of melodies from French and Italian operas, waltzes, galops, and like things, performed by a good orchestra under the direction of Mr. A. Steck. The "Classical" and "International" Concerts are well spoken of here and abroad, and we are told that the musical arrangements cost the administration of the Cercle a sum very little short of twelve thousand pounds a year. But the money so freely spent does not seem to be productive of satisfactory results.

There seems to be a large amount of carelessness somewhere, as evinced by the artistic results of this expenditure. We are not told why this should be, nor do we know how the machine works, but certainly something must be out of gear. The programmes ought to be better arranged, the performances might be more accurate, more attention could be profitably paid to secure better execution of the works given, and a more satisfactory selection of soloists might be made. The lack, however, of other places where classical music given on standard lines can be heard, causes these series to be considered excellent. They are very well attended, and hundreds of persons willingly put themselves to the inconvenience and expense of coming from Cannes, Nice, and Mentone only for these performances.

The Casino of Nice has a theatre of its own, but it is entirely devoted to the representation of operettas, not worthy of serious criticism. The "Orchestra of the Dames Viennoises," which has been playing at the Casino, may be classed in the same category. A feeble attempt has, however, been made by the managers of that institution to start a series of chamber music séances, with a quartet consisting of Mr. Smit (violin), Mr. Oudshoorn (violinello), and two indifferent players upon the second violin and alto. Though Mr. Smit and Mr. Oudshoorn are artists of remarkable ability, the dulness of the programmes, the lack of variety, the absence of a thoroughly good singer or pianist (such as always appears at the Monday and Saturday Popular Concerts in London), and many other things, made this enterprise—at least for the past season—almost another failure.

Cannes has a theatre which, for a time, was visited once a week by an operetta troupe from the Casino de Nice, and which gave delectable performances of the transcendent musical beauties of "Giroflé Girofla" and "Josephine vendue par ses sœurs," to the most select colony of Englishmen. The Cercle Nautique also treated its members to six séances of musique de chambre, more of the character of Ballad Concerts than of Classical Concerts. Their intelligent and clever Conductor, Signor Galli, was, however, lucky enough to secure for a séance Mr. Thompson, the celebrated Belgian violinist, and for the last Concert but one of the series, Madame Marie Waldska, a clever pianist, who was staying for a few days in Nice, delighted the audience with some extracts from the works of Chopin, rendered in a style as perfectly artistic as even Londoners would be content to hear.

Mentone, whose numerous hotels and villas annually accommodate several thousand persons of the wealthiest class, has no music at all, and the trains that go from there to Monte Carlo on the days of the Classical Concerts are as crowded as those of the London Metropolitan Railway on Bank Holidays.

If we reckon the great numbers of Russian, German, American, and French families who visit the place, there are for six months of the year more persons of the upper and refined classes in the Riviera than there are, perhaps, in Paris during the winter or in London during the "season." But it is sad to think that so little is done—and that little so badly—for music of a higher character. It may be hoped that in the future some enterprising and intelligent Englishman will take the matter in hand.

MUSIC IN AMERICA.

New York, April 13, 1889.

THE musical season here is nearly at an end. The termination of the present month will see its labours brought to a close. The record of the season will be much the same as it was last year. Art has been benefited, but no one has made any money. Last year the only profitable series of Concerts were those of Josef Hofmann. This year nothing has paid except the Von Bülow Recitals. When the celebrated pianist was here twelve years ago he complained, and with some reason too, that the Americans did not appreciate him. He will have no such complaint to make this time. In fact, he told your correspondent a day or two ago that he had been surprised and delighted at the intelligent attention of his audiences.

Dr. von Bülow made his first appearance, on his return, at a Charity Concert at the Metropolitan Opera House on March 27, conducting an orchestra of eighty, picked from the Philharmonic and Symphony Societies. He gave magnificent readings of Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini" Overture, Brahms's Fourth Symphony, Beethoven's Eighth Symphony, and the "Tannhäuser" Overture. Madame Fursch-Madi, the only soloist, sang Arias from Saint-Saëns's "Samson and Delilah," and Massenet's "Herodiade." Dr. von Bülow's Pianoforte Recitals in this city began on the 1st ult., and were continued on the 2nd, 4th, 5th, 9th, 11th, and 12th. The first four Recitals were devoted to the Beethoven cycle, embracing all the more important pianoforte works of the master written between 1795 and his death. The other three Recitals were devoted to miscellaneous programmes, though the second (11th ult.) was composed of Beethoven's works. It is unnecessary to say anything about Dr. von Bülow's playing. He remains the same great interpreter as of old. His Recitals took place in the Broadway Theatre, owing to the fact that he played on a Knabe pianoforte, and the Knabes have no hall. The theatre proved to be well adapted to the purpose. Every seat in the house was sold for the entire series of Recitals before they began, and a large percentage of the audience carried the music with them and followed the player closely.

On March 28 at the Metropolitan Opera House the Oratorio Society, under the bâton of Walter Damrosch, produced Edward Grell's "Missa Solemnis," written for four quartets and chorus, a capella. The work created a profound sensation. It is undoubtedly one of the most beautiful pieces of choral writing that have ever been sung in America. Some of its beauty was lost from the impossibility of distributing the chorus in four sections, as required by the composer, but impracticable in the Opera House. If the composer's idea could have been carried out, his splendid antiphonal treatment of many passages would have shown to much greater advantage. The mass is an extraordinarily fine piece of writing. The composer was a master of counterpoint, and his interweaving of the voice parts is superb. His study of Palestrina is shown in the natural and easy development of his harmonies, which seem to issue without effort from the combination of his melodies. As a piece of choral writing there is nothing better in the work than the "Et resurrexit," with its noble setting of the clause "Cujus regni non erit finis." The Benedictus, written for two quartets, is a lovely number, but the gem of the Mass is the "Christe eleison," written for the four quartets. It is an exceptionally beautiful and elevated piece of music.

The approaching Michigan Grand Musical Festival at Detroit, May 30, 31, and June 1, will be the greatest event of the kind that State has ever enjoyed. The festival forces engaged for the occasion include Miss Emma Juch, Madame Lilli Kalisch-Lehmann, leading soprano of the Metropolitan Opera House, New York; Madame Térésa Herbert-Foerster, Miss Helène von Doehnhoff, Mr. Charles A. Knorr, Signor Jules Perotti, Mr. Jos. Lynde, and Mr. Emil Fischer. In addition to this array of vocalists the following instrumentalists will appear: Miss Adèle Aus Der Ohe, pianist; Mr. Max Bendix, solo violinist of the Theodore Thomas orchestra; and Mr. Victor Herbert, solo violoncellist of the Thomas orchestra. A festival orchestra of fifty musicians, selected from the Symphony orchestras of New York and Boston, under the direction of the distinguished director and Conductor, Mr. Carl Zerrahn. The chorus, about 200 voices, will be under the direction of Professor E. T. Remick, of Detroit.

The Arion Society of Milwaukee will give Cowen's "Sleeping Beauty" on May 9. Mr. and Mrs. Henschel and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will appear.

The Cincinnati College of Music Choir gave a good Concert on April 4. Costa's "Chorus of Angels," Schubert's "Ave Maria," Bargiel's "Dragon Flies," and Lassen's "Spanish Gypsy Girl" were excellently performed.

The May Festival in Pittsburgh has now reached a point of absolute certainty, so far as human foresight can tell. There is no doubt at all of the completion of the new Exposition building in time for the great event. The subscription for the 100 boxes—which takes the place of a guarantee fund—is progressing most cheerily.

The first annual meeting of the New York State Music Teachers' Association will be held at Hudson on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, June 25, 26, and 27.

Indianapolis is also to have a May festival this year. The chorus is now hard at work.

The Apollo Club of Chicago performed Schumann's "Manfred" and Sullivan's "Golden Legend" with great success last month, and will give "Elijah" on April 30, with Mr. and Mrs. Henschel as the principal soloists.

At St. James's Church (Chicago) Musical Service on Wednesday, March 27, Stainer's "Crucifixion" was performed, under the direction of Mr. William Smedley. The choir numbered forty voices.

A pleasing Concert was given in Bishop Fallows' Church, corner of Winchester Avenue and Monroe Street, Chicago, on March 19, under the direction of Mr. H. S. Perkins. Stainer's Cantata "The Daughter of Jairus" was presented. There was also an interesting miscellaneous programme.

The third Concert of the season by the Cecilia Society of Boston, under Mr. B. J. Lang's direction, at the Music Hall, on March 29, had as its attraction Dvorák's "Stabat Mater." The reception given to the work by the audience showed a good appreciation of its merits, and the performance, as a whole, was highly creditable.

At Cleveland, Ohio, the Organ Recitals of Mr. F. Norman Adams have been greatly appreciated. The sixth of the series took place on April 1 before a more than ordinarily large audience, at Trinity Church. His programme at that occasion comprised selections from the works of Batiste, Guilman, Bach, and Beethoven. Mr. Adams was very ably assisted by Mrs. J. B. Foster and Miss Florence Ely. Mrs. Foster sang Gaul's "Come, ye blessed," with effect, and the duet, "My faith looks up to Thee," by Goldbeck, was very acceptably sung by both ladies. On each Saturday evening in Lent Mr. Adams has given some "Organ Meditations," ending with an Improvisation, which have been much enjoyed. The scheme of the music sung in church during Lent shows a commendable adherence to Anglican customs, brought by Mr. Adams from his English home.

One of the most excellent Pianoforte Recitals which has ever taken place in Baltimore was given on March 27, at the Peabody Institute, by Miss Amy Hare, of London. Her touch is decided, yet without a trace of harshness. Her programme was exceedingly well chosen for a single Recital, commencing with the Beethoven Sonata Appassionata, her performance of which won the audience and established her claim as an artist. It was followed by the beautiful Spinning Song, from Wagner's "Flying Dutchman," transcribed by Liszt. This exhibited Miss Hare's facile execution, as the Rubinstein Valse Caprice and the Raff Rigaudon showed her power. Two selections from Chopin, the Prelude (Op. 28, No. 15) and Valse (Op. 64, No. 2) showed her mastery of the school of sentiment. Raff's Caprice (Op. 95) closed brilliantly the Recital, after which Miss Hare was heartily congratulated by many musical friends she had won by her excellent playing.

THE first Subscription Concert of the third series given in connection with the Hyde Park Academy of Music took place at Steinway Hall, on the 11th ult. The choral portion of the programme was, perhaps, a trifle less ambitious than usual, but not, on the whole, less interesting. Mr. H. F. Frost's ladies' choir sang with welcome taste and intelligence, preserving a faultless intonation and delicate precision in such choruses as Schubert's "God in Nature," Mackenzie's graceful, tripping "Come, sisters, come," and the Handmaidens' Chorus from Randegger's "Fridolin." A capital performance was also given of Mendelssohn's Motet "O Lord, Thou hast searched me out," the solos being sung by Miss Malden, Miss Day, Miss de Hochepeid Larpent, and Mrs. Fyson. These ladies were, with one exception, heard separately in various pieces; while another pupil, Miss Janet Latham, displayed in her solos an exceedingly good voice and style. Two young violinists—Miss Kate Willis and Miss Jessie Grimson—evinced decided promise in the Largo and Finale from Bach's D minor Concerto for two violins, wherein they were neatly accompanied by Mrs. Thoulless; and talent likewise distinctly marked the pianoforte playing of Miss Cherry Enriquez, a daughter of the popular contralto, Madame Enriquez. As usual, some of the professors assisted, Miss Mary Willis singing, with much grace and charm of vocalisation, Linley's "O bid your faithful Ariel fly"; Mr. Charles Fry reciting in his customary finished style Calverly's "Shelter," and "A tragedy in five acts"; while Miss Mary Carmichael accompanied at the pianoforte with unflinching taste and skill.

THE St. Mark's Choral Society gave an excellent performance of Mendelssohn's "Athalie" at their Concert in St. Mark's Vestry Hall, Battersea Rise, on the 24th ult. The members of the choir sang throughout with precision and steadiness, reflecting great credit on their able trainer, Mr. Herbert Bray. The solo parts were sung by Madame Edwardes, Miss Annie Godwin, and Madame Schlüter, the last-named lady possessing a rich contralto voice and displaying an excellent method. The lyrical version of the drama was recited by Mr. Charles Fry, whose delivery of the accompanied recitation was received with hearty applause. The accompaniments were judiciously played throughout by Miss Grace Smith (pianoforte) and Mr. E. P. Atkins (organ). In the second part, which was miscellaneous, mention should be made of the effective rendering by the choir of Gaul's "Silent Land" and Mackenzie's "Three Merry Dwarfs"; Madame Edwardes and Madame Schlüter both received well-merited encores, as did also Mr. Charles Fry for his well-known humorous recitation "The Charity Dinner."

ON Tuesday evening, the 9th ult., a special service was held in St. Paul's Church, Vicarage Gate, Kensington, at which the "Passion Music" by Graun was performed as the Anthem. The choir of the church was assisted by the members of the Richmond Choral Society, and accompanied by an orchestra of about twenty strings and organ. The congregation took their part most heartily in the well known chorals, in which they were specially invited to join. The solo music was entrusted to the Misses Coward and Fusselle and Messrs. Edwin Bryant and R. Coward. Mr. W. A. Easton was leader of the orchestra and Mr. Thomas Pettit presided at the organ. The choruses were well sung, and the whole performance was conducted by Mr. J. Maude Crament, Mus. Bac., Oxon., Organist and Choirmaster of the church. This is the third Oratorio given with orchestral accompaniment in the church during the past three months, the other two having been "St. Paul" and the "Creation."

A CONCERT of sacred music was given at Prince's Hall on the 17th ult., at which Mr. J. H. Bonawitz's "Requiem" and a selection of miscellaneous pieces were performed. The solos were undertaken by Miss Alice Steel, Miss Louise Bourne, Mr. Charles Karlyle, and Mr. Max Heinrich, who proved quite equal to their somewhat exacting task. There was a competent orchestra, but the choir did not particularly distinguish itself. Mr. Bonawitz conducted and was warmly applauded at the close by a large audience. In the miscellaneous part the ladies' choir (trained by Mr. Charles Karlyle) sang a difficult "Ave Maria," by Lachner, fairly well. Another "Ave Maria," for soprano solo, by Luzzi, was neatly sung by Miss Alice Steel, who joined Messrs. Karlyle and Heinrich in a Trio by Astorga. But the best vocal effort of the evening was Mr. Heinrich's rendering of "With joy the impatient husbandman," from "The Seasons."

A CONCERT was given at the Holborn Town Hall, on the 2nd ult., by Miss Edith Higgs, assisted by Miss Bertha Moore, Miss Eleanor Rees, Mr. Edwin Bryant, Mr. George Sydenham, Mr. Egbert Roberts, and the Grosvenor Quartet as vocalists. Miss Higgs, who sang "Heaven and earth" (Pinsuti) and "Down the old lane" (Lisle), had a very hearty reception. Miss Bertha Moore was specially successful in Watson's "All in a garden fair," and Mr. Bryant's delivery of Blumenthal's "Evening Song" was deservedly encores. Mr. Sydenham's songs were also well received. One of the chief successes of the evening was made by Miss Dorothea Walenn, whose facile execution and expressive rendering of her violin solos merited high commendation. Mr. Charles Fry recited pathetically Dickens's "Death of Jo," and was heartily applauded for his characteristic interpretation of the "Charity Dinner."

ON the 4th, 11th, and 19th ult. performances of Bach's music of the Passion according to St. Matthew have been given in the church of St. Peter's, Eaton Square, under the direction of the Organist, Mr. W. de Manby Sergison. The excellence of the training of the choir has been shown in the accuracy and sweetness of expression with which the choruses have been sung, a fact the more worthy of note because they are extremely difficult and have been given without a Conductor. The solos have also been well and reverently delivered by Messrs. Gregory Hast (Narrator), Charles Ackerman, and other pupils of the Organist. The Narrator's part was accompanied on the pianoforte and the rest of the work upon the organ by Mr. Sergison, who was most successful in reproducing, as far as possible, the chief of the instrumental effects of the score.

ON Good Friday evening, at St. Agnes', Kennington Park, the Passion music from "The Messiah" was sung, the solos being taken by Madame Worrell and Messrs. Toms and Martin. On Easter Day, Gounod's "Messe Solennelle" ("St. Cecilia") was used at the Holy Communion, Mr. W. W. Hedgcock at the organ being assisted by an efficient orchestra. The Rev. J. B. Powell's effective setting of "Salve Festa Dies" was sung as processional, and Handel's "Worthy is the Lamb" at the offertory. The solos in the "Messe Solennelle" were well rendered by Mrs. H. Tate and Messrs. Cox and R. Bayley. In the evening the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis were sung to settings of Gregorian tones by Mr. Hedgcock, and Macfarren's "This is the day" was the Anthem.

MISS ETHEL BAUER and Master Harold Bauer added further laurels to their store at the "Musical Afternoon" which they gave at Prince's Hall, on March 26. They "scored" more especially by their capital interpretation of the Sonatas for pianoforte and violin by Brahms (Op. 100) and Grieg (Op. 45), works calculated to put their powers to a well-nigh crucial test. Miss Bauer's admirable mécanisme was further advantageously exhibited in Bach's Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue; but her playing in Grieg's G minor Ballade was somewhat lacking in poetry and sentiment.

Master Bauer played his violin solos exceedingly well, and was twice recalled after Wieniawski's "Faust." Some vocal pieces were contributed by Miss Marguerite Hall, who was accompanied by Mr. Frantzen.

THE Victoria Musical Society gave a most enjoyable Concert at the Portman Rooms, on the 9th ult. This Society is in connection with the Early Closing Association, and owes no little of its prosperity to the liberality of its president, Arthur J. Marshall, Esq. The chief part of the programme was a new Cantata, entitled "The Fishers," written by Mr. Henry Rose, and composed by Mr. J. M. Coward, who has endowed the nineteen numbers of the work with some graceful and melodious music. The chief parts were undertaken by Miss Jessie Griffin, Miss Lucille Saunders, Messrs. Lawrence Kellie, Herbert Powell, and Wilberforce Franklin, the composer conducting. The performance was excellent.

THE members of the Christ Church Choral Society, North Brixton, gave their first Concert at the Parochial Hall, Cancell Road, on Thursday, the 4th ult. The first part consisted of Cowen's Cantata "The Rose Maiden." The choruses, under the direction of Mr. Frank N. Abernethy, were rendered with admirable precision and effect. The soloists were Misses Fenn and France and Messrs. Page and Wadmore. Miss Tapley presided at the pianoforte and Mr. Griffiths at the harmonium. The Cantata was followed by a miscellaneous selection, consisting of choruses by the choir, solos by the above-named singers, and a recitation by Miss E. Glenton-Kerr.

MR. GEORGE BIRD, the compiler of the well-known Collection of Chants which bears his name, has just completed sixty years of service as Organist of the Parish Church, Walthamstow. He was appointed to the post on March 26, 1829, after playing on probation with other candidates from the previous Advent Sunday, November 30, 1828. He has officiated under three vicars, and assisted at the consecration of the first three of the churches which have been added to the district. The changes he has seen would form a remarkable record, not only in the growth of the population, but also in the increased cultivation of music in the metropolis and its suburbs.

ON the evening of Palm Sunday, the 14th ult., Stainer's "Crucifixion" was performed at the Church of St. Jude, Peckham. The tenor and bass solos were effectively rendered by Messrs. James Shepherd and Charles E. Wheeler. The choruses were admirably delivered by the choir, which was augmented by the members of the St. Jude's Choral Society. The members of the congregation were provided with the words of the chorals, in which they joined. Mr. F. M. Taylor presided at the organ, and Mr. George Kett, Organist and Choirmaster of the Church, conducted. The Cantata was repeated on Good Friday evening.

STAINER'S "Crucifixion" was sung at St. Columba's (Church of Scotland), Pont Street, on Tuesday evenings, the 9th and 16th ult. The tenor and bass solos were well rendered by Mr. Gregory Hast and Mr. Arthur Taylor respectively, and the choir of the church (numbering thirty boys and men), under Mr. John Lowe, the Organist and Choirmaster, gave proof of careful training. Mr. H. A. Evans, Organist of Eccleston Square Congregational Church, assisted at the organ. The Cantata was preceded on each evening by Barnby's setting of the Miserere and tenor solos (sung by Mr. Hast) from "The Messiah" Passion music.

A SUCCESSFUL Concert was given by the students of the advanced classes at the Mary Datchelor School, Camberwell, on March 29. The pianoforte playing was particularly good, and the vocal efforts of the students showed careful training and intelligent study. Two recitations, admirably given, added to the interest of the programme. In the interval visitors were free to inspect the work of the Art Classes and the School Museum. The two Datchelor Musical Scholarships, which are awarded annually, have been won by Miss Grace Keeble (pupil of Miss Fitch), for pianoforte playing, and by Miss Marion Kitching (pupil of Miss Bessie Cox), for singing.

A CONCERT was given on the 5th ult., in the General Meeting Room at Euston Station (kindly lent for the occasion by the Directors of the London and North-Western Railway Company), for the benefit of Mr. W. J. Postle, lately a clerk in the service of the company, who, although but a young man, has become blind. The performers included Madame Eleanor Farnol, Miss Greta Williams, Miss Langdon Broadbent, Miss Nellie Pettican, Mr. W. T. Barker (harp solos), Mr. H. A. Chapman (flute), Mr. Frank Arnold (violin), Mr. Frank Moir, Mr. E. Houghton, and the Euston Glee Club. Mr. J. B. Knott and Mr. Kilbey ably conducted.

THE third and last Subscription Concert of the St. John's Choral Society, Lewisham, took place at the St. John's Church Room, on Friday evening, the 12th ult. The programme consisted of Rossini's "Stabat Mater" and a miscellaneous selection of sacred music. The principal vocalists were Miss Kate Fusselle, Miss Minnie Kirton, Mr. John Probert, and Mr. Egbert Roberts. The room was as usual crowded, and the Concert proved eminently successful. Mr. F. Leeds presided at the piano-forte, Mr. Edwin Samson at the American organ, and Mr. F. A. Bridge conducted.

An interesting miscellaneous Concert was given by Mr. Arthur Walenn, at the Athenæum, Camden Road, on the 9th ult., assisted by Madame Belle Cole, Miss Olga Islar, and Messrs. Bridson, Izard, and Meyer, besides the talented juvenile members of the family. The programme included Mozart's Quartet for strings, in C major (No. 6), cleverly rendered by the Walenn family. Madame Cole was in splendid voice and fairly charmed her audience. Special mention may be made of the débutante, Miss Islar (of the Hanover Opera House), a pupil of Viardot, who met with a highly flattering reception.

ON Thursday, the 11th ult., a Lecture, entitled "Church Music, Ancient and Modern," was given by Mr. C. Herring, at St. Anne's Hall, Thorburn Square. Illustrations were supplied by the Choir and Choral Society of the Church, under the direction of Mr. F. W. Norris, Organist of the Church; the choruses, from the works of Farrant, Boyce, Handel, Palestrina, Clarke-Whitfield, Gadsby, Stainer, Mendelssohn, &c., being well rendered. The solos were effectively rendered by Miss Fisher, Mr. L. Herring, and Mr. F. W. Cheesman. The Lecture was much appreciated.

THE Highbury New Park School of Music gave its third Students' Concert at the Highbury Athenæum, on Friday, the 5th ult., before a large audience. The programme was exceptionally long, as twenty-five solo performers (students only) took part in the Concert; but still the various instrumental and vocal pieces were listened to with unflinching interest to the very last. It was evident that the students had made marked progress since their last Concert in July of last year, and it is to be hoped that continuous steady and earnest work will in time bring them to a high standard of proficiency.

MISS ELLA THOMSON gave her second annual Evening Concert at the Masonic Hall, Camberwell, on the 8th ult. The programme was attractive and well carried out. The contributions of the bénéficiaire were "The Angel Came" (Cowen) and "In an old garden" (Hope Temple), both songs being rendered with clear enunciation and refined expression. The other performers were Miss Edith Luke, Miss Florence Thomson, Miss Barsdorf, Mr. Budd, and Mr. Fitzgibbon. Miss E. Hastings Warren accompanied and Mr. F. J. Williams conducted.

ON Tuesday, the 16th ult., Stainer's "Crucifixion" was given at St. Jude's Church, East Brixton. The solos were sung by Mr. Arthur Harvey and Mr. M. Budge, assisted by Miss Edith Hurst and Miss Emily Newman in the quartet "God so loved the world." Mr. W. T. Stewart (Organist of St. Jude's Church) presided at the organ, and Mr. Herbert E. Budge (Choirmaster) conducted. At the conclusion of the performance a short Organ Recital was given by Mr. Brownlow Baker, Mus. Bac., Organist of Holy Trinity, Newington.

ON Wednesday, the 3rd ult., at St. Mark's Church, Notting Hill, selections were given from Sullivan's "Prodigal Son." The solos were sung by Messrs. Albon Nash and Jas. W. Sanderson; Mr. Warren Tear, Organist and Choirmaster of the Church, presiding at the organ. On Wednesday, the 17th ult., Stainer's "Crucifixion" was performed, with the same soloists in the principal parts. Mr. Hamilton Robinson, Organist and Choirmaster of St. Stephen's, Gloucester Road, accompanied, and Mr. Warren Tear conducted.

THE last Entertainment of the twenty-second season was given on Tuesday evening, the 16th ult., at Brompton Hospital, when Rossini's "Stabat Mater" was performed under the direction of Mr. William Carter, assisted by Miss Winifred Parker, Miss Rose Williams, Mr. Valentine Smith, and Mr. Bailey, with forty members of Mr. Carter's Albert Hall Choir, all of whom exerted themselves to the utmost. The whole performance was listened to with much interest by the patients. Mr. William Carter was assisted in his duties as Conductor by Mr. Churchill Sibley.

At a Concert given at Turnham Green, on the 11th ult., Mr. F. Louis Schneider played, on the viola d'amour, a "Meditation," composed by himself. The viola d'amour is by "Henocq" (Paris, 1767), and is in its original state; it contains seven upper and seven sympathetic strings (fourteen in all). In addition to Mr. Schneider's compositions, an interesting programme of vocal and instrumental pieces was given by Mrs. Wade Share, Mrs. Duché, Madame Antoinette Sterling, Messrs. Reginald Groome, Greenwood, and Alfred Izard.

A SUCCESSFUL performance of Sterndale Bennett's "Woman of Samaria" was given by the Gordon Choral Society in the Gordon Hall, on Monday evening, the 1st ult. The choir did efficient service, and sang most of the chorus numbers in an excellent manner. The solos were undertaken by Miss Laura Brown, Miss Lucie Johnstone, Mr. H. Hicks, and Mr. David Hughes. The second part of the programme was miscellaneous, the choir singing two part-songs very tastefully. Mr. R. D. Metcalfe conducted.

THE monthly meeting of the London Association of Correctors of the Press was held on Monday, the 1st ult., at Gabb's Restaurant, Broadway, Ludgate Hill. After the usual business was concluded, a musical entertainment was given under the direction of Mr. A. J. Greenish, Mus. Bac., Cantab., assisted by Mr. Bertram Fletcher, B.A. (who played some violin solos), Mr. G. Snow, Mr. S. Parkins Buck, Mr. J. E. Timms, and Master Percy Hill. A cordial vote of thanks was accorded to Mr. Greenish for his kindness on this and other occasions.

DR. BRADFORD's eleventh Organ Recital took place in the Chapel of the Royal Naval School, New Cross, on the 8th ult., the programme including his new Organ Sonata in C minor (Op. 47), written for this Recital. The rest of the programme comprised organ music by Mozart, Smart, and others, with vocal music (sung by the choir, assisted by the choir of St. Mark's, Myddelton Square) by Gounod, Garrett, Goss, Bunnett, and others. Mr. E. J. Wareham and Mr. William Nell were the vocalists.

ON Monday, the 15th ult., a Concert was given by the Science and Art Schools Orchestral Society, in the Lecture Theatre, South Kensington Museum, under the conductorship of Dr. F. J. Karn. The orchestral pieces included, among others, Haydn's Symphony in D (No. 4) and the Overture to Auber's "Masaniello." Miss Katie Bristow and Mr. Robert Hilton were the vocalists, and Mr. Percy Ould the solo violinist. This, the first Concert given by the Society, was a distinct success.

ON the 13th ult. Miss Ethel and Master Harold Bauer gave a Pianoforte and Violin Recital at the Bow and Bromley Institute. The programme included Beethoven's Violin and Pianoforte Sonata in F (Op. 24), Mendelssohn's Variations Serieuses, the Wagner-Liszt March from "Tannhäuser" for pianoforte, the Adagio from Spohr's Ninth Concerto, and Wieniawski's Airs Russes for violin. A crowded audience evinced the most enthusiastic appreciation of the performances of these highly gifted young English artists.

THE Passion music from Benedict's "St. Peter" was successfully rendered at St. Saviour's Church, Hans Place, on Passion Sunday, Palm Sunday, and Good Friday, after the seven o'clock services, by the church choir. The soloists were Mr. C. E. Jones, Mr. F. J. Ascough, Mr. Catton, and Master Sherwood, and the music was rendered in a most impressive manner. The choruses were well sung by the choir. Organ accompaniments were played by Mr. Rowland G. Godfrey, the Organist. There was no Conductor.

The first assembly of Graduates of Trinity College, Toronto, took place on the 26th ult., too late for detailed notice this month, at the Holborn Restaurant, when a goodly number of the holders of the degrees and their friends dined together. Loaring, F.C.O., presided at the organ.

A SPECIAL Service will be held on the evening of Ascension Day (30th inst.) at Westminster Abbey, when Mendelssohn's "Elijah" will be performed. The special Sunday evening choir will be supplemented by 250 members of the Finsbury Choral Association, and assisted by a complete orchestra, the whole force being directed by Dr. Bridge. We are asked to state that there are no more vacancies in the choir for this occasion.

MENDELSSOHN'S Psalms—"Lord, how long," and "As the hart pants"—with Dr. Hall's setting of The Lord's Prayer (a portion of his degree exercise), were sung at St. John's, Waterloo Road, on Sunday afternoon, the 14th ult., by the choir of the church, accompanied by and under the direction of the Organist, Mr. J. MR. J. A. KAPPEY, Bandmaster of the 1st Division Royal Marines, Chatham, has been presented with an exquisite inkstand, blotting-book, and envelope case, as a token of the high esteem and regard in which he is held by his fellow bandmasters in the service. REVIEWS.

Songs. Composed by L. van Beethoven. The English version by the Rev. Dr. Troutbeck. Volume II.

[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THE work now before us—a volume of the vocal masterpieces of Beethoven, published at a price which, before the days of cheap music, would have been willingly paid for an ordinary song—is an undoubted proof not only that an art once considered a luxury has now become a necessity, but that high-class compositions are eagerly sought for by those persons who were previously branded as the upholders of what was termed the "popular" style. Novello's "Vocal Albums" have done much towards educating the people to a knowledge of the gems of song which for years had been scattered so far and wide as to be almost inaccessible to the general public; and we have little doubt that this—the latest addition to the series—will be warmly and universally welcomed. A few of Beethoven's songs are well known to the majority of intelligent amateurs; but there are a number of charming specimens of the composer's genius contained in this selection which, to some hearers, will, we are certain, have all the freshness of novelty, as well as the attraction of intrinsic beauty, especially when a good vocalist and a sympathetic pianist combine in their interpretation. Amongst these we may place the lovely musical poem "To the Beloved at a Distance"—divided into six songs, and known as the "Liederkreis"—which, although familiar to students, is so rarely heard, either in public or private, as to convince us that its publication in this volume will come as a revelation to the many now in search of the neglected treasures of the great composers. It is perhaps almost needless, where all is so good, to select a few songs for special praise; but we cannot resist the temptation of naming "Longing," "The Happiness of Friendship," "To Hope," "The Kiss," "The Quail's call," and "A Song in absence," rather because, in passing through the volume, we were conscious of lingering over the exceptional beauties of these numbers, than from any feeling of a desire to guide others in their choice. We may say, in conclusion, that the English version, by Dr. Troutbeck, is not only an admirable translation of the original German text, but that it bears throughout the utmost sympathy with the composer's setting of the words.

Damon and Phintias. A Dramatic Cantata for Male Voices and Orchestra. The music by Ebenezer Prout. (Op. 25.) [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THE story of Damon and Phintias, the latter also called Pythias and Phytias, has been dealt with before for the purposes of the stage, but the present is the first attempt to convert the subject into a Cantata. In the process of this conversion, Mr. R. W. Bloor, the author of the libretto, has also changed the position of the characters, besides returning to the proper classical name for one of his characters. In the old story it was Damon who was condemned to death, but is granted a respite of three days on condition that his friend agrees to suffer for him if he does not return. In Mr. Bloor's version it is Phintias who stands in the position of the self-denying friend. This change, though it may be in perfect conformity with the design of the author of the libretto is as likely to lead to as much misunderstanding as the change of names from Damon and Pythias by which the majority of people have been accustomed to recognise the heroes of the beautiful story. By many the alteration will be counted as an affectation, the display of which might have been spared. The libretto contains no very striking imagery or diction, but it has served to inspire the composer to write some interesting music, and therefore the merit it possesses will be eclipsed by the purpose it serves. Mr. Prout has divided his music into two parts, the first taking place in the Palace of Dionysius, the second in the city of Syracuse. There are solos for Dionysius (bass), Damon (tenor), and Phintias (baritone), all of which are effectively written. The great strength of the work however lies in the choruses. For these the Cantata will doubtless become popular among the various societies or choirs of male voices. It was written for the Eglesfield Musical Society in Oxford, and the composer has dedicated the result of his labour to the body whose needs called it into action.

Musicians of all Times: A Concise Dictionary of Musical Biography. Compiled by David Baptie.

[J. Curwen and Sons.]

IN the preface, or as it is quaintly called, the "foreword," the compiler states his aim in producing the work. He calls it an "outline" dictionary of musicians of all ages and countries, and in all departments of the art, on a very much larger scale than has ever been attempted hitherto, as the work contains nearly 12,000 names. Small as is the space given to each musician, it has generally been contrived to compress into it—(1) the period, (2) the country to which he belongs, and (3) the department in which he has worked. This exactly describes the book, which is a monument of patient and conscientious labour. The information given is for the most part trustworthy, and in many cases is brought up to date. The musician who wishes to remind himself of the period and the country of any musician will find the book remarkably handy and correct. That it is not absolutely perfect is no discredit to the compiler, who appears to have taken all possible pains to be accurate. The sources of information are not always complete, yet our author seems to have used every effort to make his statements logical where probability was against the reasonableness of accepted accounts. Where conflicting assertions could not be verified, the information given is marked as questionable. On the whole, the book is good, and if it contain a number of names whose holders have done little or nothing for art, their insertion in the pages may be accounted for probably by the conscientious desire of the compiler to omit no one who had done something in the way of adding to the stores of musical works, rather than from a desire to swell the lists for the sake of making a book.

Six Two-Part Songs. For Solo Voices (or Female Chorus), with accompaniment for the Pianoforte. Compiled by Charles Wood. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THE announcement on the title-page that these songs have an "accompaniment for the pianoforte" by no means indicates their character; for, as a rule, the instrumental is as important as the vocal portion of the composition, and the due rendering of each, therefore, demands as much care and artistic feeling from the pianist as the singers. In all cases the words have been selected from the best poets. Milton's "Now the bright morning star," which commences the volume, has a melodious subject, the effect being much enhanced by a light staccato accompaniment, the figure of which is preserved throughout. Herrick's "To Daffodils" flows on in true sympathy with the poetry, a quiet pianoforte part and simple harmonies giving proof that the composer has no desire to display his musical acquirements at the expense of the author. "La Fileuse" (poetry by Julian Fane) commences with a whirling accompaniment of semiquavers in triplets, the contrast where the wheel is stilled for the night being extremely effective. "Evening" (words by John Fletcher) is wedded to a charming pastoral subject, the changes of key and time being throughout in true sympathy with the poetry. Of the two remaining pieces—"Young and old," to Walter Scott's words, and "Under the greenwood tree" (Shakespeare)—we need only say that they are fully worthy of their companions, the latter, especially, being certain to become a favourite, if sung with the true feeling of the poet. The refinement of these Part-songs may perhaps be more felt when sung by solo voices; but they are in every respect admirably adapted for a well-trained female chorus.

Selected Pianoforte Studies. By Carl Czerny. Arranged in systematic order, with Critically Revised Text, Fingering, Marks of Expression, and with Preface by Heinrich Germer. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THIS excellent selection of Exercises—published also in Copenhagen and Leipzig—will be found most valuable to all who train their pupils upon a well-defined plan. The editor, in his preface, truly says that "to simply reprint the old editions of Czerny's Studies would not be in accordance with the spirit of the time"; but it was no doubt a difficult task to issue them in a classified order, as the materials were contained in various volumes published at different times, and often used by masters rather more in consequence of their popularity than of their usefulness in the several stages of a student's development. The work before us is divided into four volumes, the first containing "Fifty Small Studies for the Upper Elementary Grade" and "Thirty-two for the Lower Middle Grade"; the second, "School of Velocity for the Middle Grade" and "Special Studies for the Middle Grade"; the third, "School of Velocity for the Upper Middle Grade" and "Thirty-six Octave Studies for the Middle and Upper Grade"; and the fourth, "School of Legato and Staccato for the Advancing Upper Grade" and "The Art of Developing the Fingers for the Upper Grade." All the Exercises chosen are admirably adapted for their purpose, and much care has been taken with the fingering, in many cases a thorough revision of the old system being employed, and with very happy results.

Twenty-one Hymns with Tunes. Written and composed by Lady Blount.

[London Music Publishing Company, and of the Authoress, Rond Hill Crescent, Brighton.]

THE music of these hymns is of the simplest kind, such as would be likely to make a ready and easy impression upon the minds of those whose sympathies it was desired to enlist. There are no complicated harmonies in the arrangements, and therefore the melodies are fitted with conformable accompaniments. The words are distinguished by seriousness of purpose rather than by a very elevated poetical aim; but if they succeed in awakening a like earnestness the best part of their intention will doubtless be achieved.

Original Compositions for the Organ, No. 109 (Introduction and Variations). B. Haynes.

[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THIS is an elaborate and exceedingly clever piece. The introduction itself is very imposing and effective, and at its close the pedals give out a ground bass upon which a series of variations, gradually increasing in difficulty and ingenuity, is founded. By way of variety, the theme then appears in the treble, and later still it is subjected to variations on its own account. The final peroration is admirably worked up, and we cannot do better than heartily recommend Mr. Haynes's composition to the notice of those who are called upon to give Recitals.

FOREIGN NOTES.

THE Victoria Jubilee Church, which is dedicated to St. George, and is situate in the Rue des Bassins, in the fashionable quarter of the Arc de Triomphe in Paris, was consecrated for divine worship on Friday, the 5th ult., by the Right Reverend Lord Bishop Wilkinson, D.D., Coadjutor to the Bishop of London. The service, at which their Excellencies Lord and Lady Lytton, the Lady Wallace, and many English clergy were present, was fully choral, the prayers being intoned by the Chaplain, the Rev. G. Washington, M.A., and the sermon being preached by the Bishop. The Te Deum was sung to Dr. Steggall's setting in A, the Anthem was "Come, Holy Ghost," by Attwood, and Merbecke's music was sung to the Nicene Creed. An efficient choir has already been brought together, and full Cathedral services will be conducted every Sunday in this new and beautiful church, which will now take its stand as the finest specimen of Anglican architecture in Paris. The Anthem on Palm Sunday was Elvey's "Daughters of Jerusalem," and on Easter Day, Stainer's "They have taken away my Lord."

During the forthcoming Paris Exhibition a series of operas, composed during the period of the Great Revolution, is to be given at the Grand Théâtre de l'Exposition, under the auspices of MM. Lacôme, Paravey, and Danbé. "Le Théâtre pendant la Revolution," under which title these interesting historical performances are to be known, will comprise the following works—viz., "Le Barbier de Seville" (Paisiello, 1788), "Raoul de Créqui" (Dalayrac, 1789), "La Soirée orageuse" (Dalayrac, 1790), "Nicodème dans la lune" (Cousin Jacques, 1791), "Les Visitandines" (Devienne, 1792), "La Patrie carrée" (Gaveaux, 1793), "Les Vrais sans-Culottes ou l'hospitalité républicaine" (C. Lemoine, 1794). The performances will take place once a week, and the series will be repeated three times in the course of the Exhibition.

Henri Litolf's opera "Les Templiers," with a German adaptation of the libretto by Herr Ferdinand Gumbert, has just met with a conspicuous success at the Brunswick Opera. The interesting work of the veteran French composer is constructed on the lines of the old Grand Opéra, and was first brought out at the La Monnaie, of Brussels, in 1886.

The annual meeting of the Society of German Musicians will be held this year at Wiesbaden, from the 27th to the 30th of next month. The following works will obtain a hearing in the course of the proceedings—viz., Brahms's "Deutsches Requiem," Berlioz's "L'enfance du Christ," Wagner's "Liebesmahl der Apostel," a Symphonic Fantasia entitled "Aus Italien," by Richard Strauss, and Variations for violin and orchestra, by Dr. Joachim.

The sketch of the libretto for an historical opera, from the pen of Richard Wagner, and emanating from the years 1841 and 1843, has just been published for the first time in the Bayreuther Blätter. It is entitled "Die Sarazenen," and is alluded to by Wagner himself in his semi-autobiographical "Mittheilung an meine Freunde."

The first movement of a hitherto unknown Piano-forte Concerto by Beethoven was introduced to the Viennese public at the last Philharmonic Concert of the season, on the 7th ult., by Herr Josef Labor. The movement (in D major) was not long since discovered, in private possession, by Dr. Guido Adler, of the German University of Prague, there being no doubt of its authenticity, and of the fact that it emanates from the period of 1788-1793, the influence of Mozart being throughout in the ascendant.

A correspondent writes to us from Berlin: "The Royal Opera here produced its first novelty of the season, on April 9, in Emil Naumann's posthumous opera 'Loreley,' the libretto by the well-reputed poet, Otto Roquette, the charming singer of 'Waldmeister's Brautfahrt.' The result was a succès d'estime, due to the reputation, chiefly as a musical author, achieved by its composer, and in a not inconsiderable measure also to the admirable scenic effects suggested by the work, and taken full advantage of by the management. The singers, including Frau Sucher as the heroine, moreover, did their best to ensure an ephemeral success for an otherwise weak and unprofitable production."

A new opera, "Don Manuel," by Richard Heuberger, has just been performed with much success at the Leipzig Stadt-Theater. The composer is a thoroughgoing disciple of the Bayreuth reformer, and his present work is said to be constructed musically somewhat upon the lines of "Tristan und Isolde."

Capellmeister Fischer, of Gotha, has written an opera entitled "Iolantha," which is to be first performed during next autumn at the Coburg Hof-Theater.

"The Polish painter, M. Kwiadowski," says the Neue Zeitschrift für Musik, "has painted a picture the subject of which is Chopin's Polonaise (Op. 61)—i.e., the circumstances of its origin, 'as related by Chopin himself.' This 'Fantaisie-Polonaise,' on account of its extraordinary technical difficulties and enigmatical purport, is not often performed. It is a phantasy in a pathological sense, the fancy of one fever-stricken, before whose eyes weird and alluring figures are flitting past in rapid succession. Liszt, the enthusiastic admirer of Chopin, in speaking of this composition, considers the work to appertain to the sphere of pathology rather than to that of art."

A three days' music Festival is announced to be held at Hamburg in September next, and preparations are already on foot at the hospitable Hanse town in order to render the undertaking a complete success.

The Emperor William II. has, it is stated, signified his intention to be present at two of the forthcoming Bayreuth performances of Wagnerian opera, to be inaugurated on July 21 next.

Upon the highly successful completion, at the beginning of last month, of the fourth performance of the entire "Nibelungen" Tetralogy at St. Petersburg, Herr Angelo Neumann proceeded with his company to Moscow, where the representations of Wagner's gigantic work were resumed on the 6th ult., with equally satisfactory results.

At a Concert recently given at Leipzig, a talented English singer, Mrs. Legge, was highly appreciated by the audience in songs by Brahms, Tschaiakowsky, Wagner, &c., the local press being likewise full of praise of the lady's sympathetic voice and artistic qualities.

The name of the young English pianist whose performance was so much appreciated at a recent Concert in Homburg, is Howgrave, and not Hongrave, as inadvertently stated in our last issue.

M. Massenet is engaged upon the composition of a new opera entitled "Esclarmonde," the libretto of which, from the pen of MM. Blau and Gramont, is founded upon an old French romance.

Hector Berlioz's opera "Béatrice et Bénédict" is just now being successfully produced, with the original dialogue converted into recitatives by Herr Felix Mottl, both at Carlsruhe and Baden-Baden. The same composer's "Benvenuto Cellini" is about to be produced by the Imperial Opera of Vienna, an increasing interest in Berlioz's operatic works being manifest in German musical circles generally.

Marie Joachim, a daughter of the great violinist, has just made a successful début in the rôle of Elizabeth, in Wagner's "Tannhäuser," the result of which has been a permanent engagement of the young artist at the Elberfeld Stadt-Theater.

Arrigo Boito, the composer of the successful opera "Mefistofele," and author of the "book" of Verdi's "Otello," has just completed a new operatic libretto entitled "Farnese," to be set to music by Signor Polumbo.

M. Gounod has been officially requested to set to music the Cantata "Quatre-vingt-neuf," for the composition of which a competition had been instituted, without, however, yielding a satisfactory result. The veteran French master has accepted the task, and the Cantata is to be performed on the occasion of the distribution of prizes to be awarded by the Exhibition authorities.

The Belgian composer, M. Tinel, of Mecheln, has just completed a new national Oratorio, entitled "Genoveva of Brabant," the first performance of which, probably at Brussels, is looked forward to with some interest.

A memorial tablet has just been affixed to the house, Piazza Roma, No. 1, at Cremona, where for many years Antonio Stradivarius constructed his famous violins, and in which also he died on December 18, 1737.

In commemoration of the centenary of the death of Padre Martini, the famous musical savant, the municipality of Bologna has undertaken the publication of the extensive correspondence carried on between the Padre and a number of his distinguished contemporaries, including sovereigns, princes, and artists of various countries. The first volume of this important publication, comprising the years 1732-1755, has just been issued by N. Zanichelli, of Bologna.

The death is announced, at Dresden, on March 30, of Moritz Fürstenau, the eminent flute-player, custodian of the Royal Musical Library at Dresden, and author of some highly meritorious works concerning the history of the Dresden Hof-Theater. Fürstenau was a member of the orchestra at the period of Wagner's conductorship at the Hof-Theater at Dresden, and was among the earliest admirers of the Bayreuth master's genius. It was Anton Fürstenau, the father of Moritz, likewise a virtuoso on the flute, who accompanied Carl Maria von Weber on his fatal visit to London. The deceased artist had attained his sixty-fifth year.

Paul René Baillot, an excellent pianist and violinist, for many years professor of the pianoforte at the Paris Conservatoire, and a highly esteemed teacher, died at the French capital on March 28, aged seventy-six. He was the son of Pierre Baillot, the celebrated violinist, and author, in conjunction with Rode and Kreutzer, of the famous "Méthode de Violon," adopted by the Conservatoire.

Louis Messemakes, pianist and composer, one of the earliest pupils of Liszt, died recently at Ixelles-les-Bruxelles, aged seventy-nine.

The doyen amongst Spanish music publishers, Andres Vidal, born in 1807, at Barcelona, died last month at Madrid.

Francesco Federico Monari-Rocca, an excellent operatic baritone, well known to London amateurs, died recently at Bucharest, at the age of seventy-two.

An exhaustive catalogue of the important musical section of the Municipal Library of Breslau, compiled by Dr. Emil Bohn, is shortly to be published.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ACCENTUATION.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—I wish the attention of our Church composers could be called to a serious error in setting the Te Deum in one place; also the Nicene Creed. Beginning with the general statement that the chief accent of a syllable should fall on the first count of a measure, we see this violated over and over again in the word "Sabaoth." The accent is almost invariably on the first syllable when set to music. It is a Hebrew word, not even translated. Gesenius, in his Hebrew Grammar (§ xv. 2), says, "In most words the tone is on the last syllable, more seldom on the penultima. On the third syllable from the end (antepenultima) the chief tone never stands."

I have examined every place in the Hebrew Bible where the word occurs, and I do not find the word in any place with the long vowel point. The strong accent is always on the second syllable, thus, "tse-BA-oth."

I have been looking at some recent Te Deum music of English and a few prominent American composers to see the usage. Out of forty-eight I find only fifteen placing the second syllable on the chief note. Composers, too, are not consistent with themselves. In one Te Deum they will enforce the second syllable, and in another the first. It may seem a small matter to criticise, but I think if one word may be mispronounced in singing, why not another?

In the Nicene Creed occurs a theological error in setting to music. The truth, "God of God, Light of Light, Very God of Very God," as usually treated, makes the Saviour above the Father; thus,  &c. If "of" has any meaning at all there, it stands for "from"—God from God, and the whole phrase should be so accented; thus,

 &c. I find some composers rather make a compromise, notably Field and Tours, by giving an equal accent, as it were, to all; but still, theologically, it would be more correct to emphasise the "of," as explaining the previous section, "Only begotten Son of God."

A CLERGYMAN OF THE AMERICAN CHURCH.

Rectory of Trinity Church, Lowville,
Lewis Co., N.Y.

THE LATE SIR FREDERICK OUSELEY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—In these days of scholarships in memory of eminent musicians I hoped to have seen ere now some public suggestion as to worthily commemorating the valuable services to musical education and to Church music rendered by the distinguished Oxford professor recently deceased.

It will naturally occur to many of his admirers that by his foundation of St. Michael's College, near Tenbury, to which he gave his heart and his fortune, he has himself raised a noble monument—which it is earnestly to be hoped will be permanent—of the unselfishness and charity which were his characteristics.

But I think it must have also occurred to his musical friends that the existence of that interesting establishment ought not to preclude commemoration in the form adopted in this country in the case of some other great musicians, both native and foreign, including recent professors of music at the University of Cambridge. And it seems to some of us desirable that the authorities at Oxford should be approached regarding foundation and endowment at that University of a bursary or scholarship for special benefit of students exhibiting marked proficiency in branches of the art in which Sir Frederick was such a master—namely, in canon, counterpoint, and fugue.

It will be generally acknowledged that, after thirty-four years of eminent services to his University, during which period he was enabled so greatly to raise the standard and the worth of degrees in the faculty of which he was professor, he has earned a claim for the most permanent and beneficial form of memorial that can be raised in his honour. And in advancing a movement in this direction, which ought not only to be academic, but national, his friends and others, while striving to perpetuate the memory of one who since his undergraduate days at Christ Church has been a renowned ecclesiastical composer, and who possessed masterly ability as an organist, would feel that they were not only promoting lasting remembrance of a distinguished musician, but of a sound Churchman, of a true gentleman by birth and education, and of a genial and faithful friend, whose sterling qualities of head and of heart have for so many years secured general esteem for the name of Frederick Arthur Gore Ouseley.—Yours faithfully,

HERBERT OAKELEY.

Cologne, April 20.

[We quite endorse Sir Herbert Oakeley's views on the subject of commemorating the deceased Professor so much beloved in life by the foundation of a Scholarship at Oxford, the result of a national subscription. But it is possible that the memorial which would have been most gratifying to Sir Frederick would be effected by enlarging the scope of the educational scheme carried on at St. Michael's, Tenbury, by a further endowment of the College, for the establishment of which Sir Frederick spent so much of his personal energy and his private means.—Ed. M. T.]

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

ABINGDON.—During Lent two performances of Stainer's Crucifixion have been given in St. Michael's Church by the choir. The solos were taken by Messrs. Ivey, Skelhorn, and Hellier, and the whole was rendered under the direction of Mr. J. A. Munday, the Organist and Choirmaster.

ALNWICK.—At a special service held in the Parish Church, on Monday, the 13th ult., a fine rendering of Stainer's Crucifixion was given by the choir of the church, under the direction of Mr. C. Stanley Wise. The singing in both solos and choruses attained a high level of excellence, and the work was followed attentively throughout by a large and devout congregation. The soloists were Master A. Wilcox, Messrs. Cunningham, Orange, J. Orange, and White.

ASHTON-UNDER-LYNE.—Handel's Oratorio Jephtha was performed by the Philharmonic Society in the Skating Rink, on the 3rd ult. The principal singers were Miss Agnes Wilson, Miss Dews, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Mr. Tufnell. The performance was highly appreciated by a large audience. Mr. Irvine Dearnaley, Organist of the Parish Church and Director of the Manchester Gentlemen's Glee Club, conducted.

BERKHAMPTSTEAD.—Stainer's setting of the Communion Service, and the Christus of Mendelssohn, were performed in Berkhamstead Church, on the 15th ult., by the Church Choral Society, under the conductorship of the Rev. C. J. Langley, M.A. The singers gave evidence of the most careful training and intelligent appreciation of the force and meaning of the various passages. The Priest's part in the "Miserere mei Deus" was sung by the Rev. W. G. Elnor. The solos in the Christus were taken by Master Pitkin, Messrs. Loxley, Ward, C. Timson, and T. Hunt. Mr. Gatward, the Organist of the Church, played the accompaniments, and he also gave Mendelssohn's Fugue in D minor at the conclusion of the service.

BLOFIELD.—An Organ Recital was given in the Parish Church, on the 23rd ult., by Dr. Frank Bates, Organist of Norwich Cathedral, being the occasion of the opening of the new organ by Messrs. Norman Bros. and Beard, of Norwich. The programme was well rendered to a large and appreciative congregation.

BRIGHTON.—The Sacred Harmonic Society commenced its forty-fourth season on March 23, with an excellent performance of Gounod's Messe Solennelle and Haydn's Creation, Parts 1 and 2. The principal performers were Miss Linda Rivers, Mr. James Gawthrop, and Mr. Andrew Black, the latter of whom took the place of the late Mr. Vaughan Edwards, whose illness terminated fatally only a day or two before the Concert. The works were rendered throughout in masterly style, the Mass especially producing a marked impression upon the audience. The orchestra consisted of forty-eight performers, under the leadership of Mr. W. Baker. Mr. P. Starnes presided at the organ, and Mr. Robert Taylor conducted. — At the Church of St. Michael and All Angels, Stainer's Crucifixion was performed on each of the first three Sundays in Lent, and on Palm Sunday the first part of Haydn's "Passion"; the whole of the "Seven last words" being given at a very solemn service on Good Friday evening, the principal soloists being Miss Maud Bond, Miss Edith Hands, Mr. A. Maurice, and Mr. Douglas Lott. The accompaniments were efficiently rendered by a small orchestra, under the direction of Mr. R. Taylor, Choirmaster of the Church, Miss Ellen Jarman presiding at the organ. On Easter Day, Weber's Mass in G was given in the same complete manner, with Miss E. Frowd as principal soprano. These services, in addition to special preachers, have drawn together large congregations. — Three interesting Lectures have been given at the School of Music, by Mr. Henry Davey, upon Musicians of the Nineteenth Century, the first being devoted to Beethoven, Weber, and Spohr; the second to Schubert, Mendelssohn, Chopin, and Schumann; the third dealing with Wagner and the living composers, Grieg, Rubinstein, Dvorák, Verdi, Sgambati, Gounod, Chaminade, Corder, Mackenzie, and Sullivan, thus representing composers of all nationalities. The illustrations were well rendered by the students of the School. — The Musical Fraternity held the last Smoking Concert of the season at the Old Ship Assembly Rooms, on Saturday, March 30. Dr. Alfred King occupied the chair, and several compositions were given for the first time at this as at the previous Concerts of the Fraternity. Among the performers were Mr. F. Corder, Dr. F. Sawyer, Messrs. R. Taylor, George Perren, C. T. West, Crapps, Baker, H. Davey, and many other prominent members of the profession who have banded themselves together as a musical brotherhood with the most beneficial results, both socially and musically.

BURNLEY.—A very good performance of Gaul's Cantata Ruth was given in Bethesda Chapel, on the 7th ult. The solos were entrusted to Misses Horner and Wilkinson, and Messrs. Berry and Arnold. The choir acquitted themselves very creditably, the accompaniments were very well given on the organ by Mr. E. Dunkerley, and Mr. Pollard was an efficient Conductor. — A miscellaneous Concert, under the auspices of the Co-operative Society, was given in the Mechanics' Institution, on the 13th ult. Miss Fredericka Taylor sang Stanford's "There is a bower of roses" and Handel's "Oh, had I Jubal's lyre," in an artistic manner. Mr. Seymour Jackson met with his usual success. Messrs. de Jong and S. Speelman, jun., contributed solos on the flute and violin respectively, and Mr. Higson was a careful accompanist. — The Easter Services at the Parish Church consisted of full Morning Communion and Evening Offices. The music selected was Stainer in B flat. The Introit in the Communion Service was Mendelssohn's "O come every one that thirsteth," and the Anthem in the evening was Wesley's "Blessed be the God and Father." The whole of the music was given by the choir in their usual efficient manner. — At Holy Trinity, Mr. Watson had selected Best in D for the Communion Service, and Trimmell's "The Lord is King," in which, as also in some well-known hymns, the Choir appeared to the best advantage.

CATERHAM.—A successful Concert was given in the Lecture Hall, Harestone Valley, on Wednesday, the 3rd ult., by the Caterham Valley Choral Society. The first part of the programme consisted of Alfred R. Gaul's historical Cantata Joan of Arc. The solos were taken by Miss Selina Quick, Mr. Charles Rose, and Mr. Harold Savery. The choruses were given with great spirit and showed signs of careful training. In the second part Miss Harland gave a recitation with great feeling and pathos. Miss M. Winter was at the pianoforte and Mr. F. Higgins at the harmonium. Mr. C. Hunt was the Conductor.

CIRENCESTER.—The Choral Society gave their Annual Concert in the Corn Hall, on the 23rd ult., when a selection from Handel's Samson and Rossini's Stabat Mater was performed. The principals were Miss Kate Fusselle, Miss L. Franklin Higgs, Mr. John Probert, and Mr. Egbert Roberts. Mr. E. G. Woodward was leader of the band, with Mr. Edward Brind, Conductor.

COCKERMOUTH.—The Harmonic Society (under the bâton of Mr. P. T. Framer, of Keswick), numbering 130 voices, gave an able rendering of Haydn's Creation in the Drill Hall, on Tuesday evening, the 9th ult. The band, selected from Sir Charles Halle's orchestra, was ably led by Mr. F. W. Schofield. The principals were Miss Conway (of Manchester), Mr. E. Kemp (of Lichfield Cathedral), and Mr. J. Nutton (of Durham Cathedral).

COTON HILL, STAFFORD.—On Wednesday, the 24th ult., Mr. R. E. Parker, Organist of Denstone College, gave an Organ Recital in the beautiful little chapel of the Institution. The programme was selected from the works of Mendelssohn, Guilmant, Bach, Batiste, Tours, and other celebrated composers. The concluding Recital of the season is kindly promised by the Rev. Hylton Stewart, M.A., Precentor of Chester Cathedral.

DEMERARA.—The twelfth Concert of the Musical Society was given on March 12, in the Philharmonic Hall. The first part of the programme opened with Fox's Cantata The Jackdaw of Rheims, words from the "Ingoldsby Legends." The soloists were Miss Ida Pinkerton, Miss Pinkerton, and Messrs. J. Brown and F. A. Sherlock. The choral numbers were admirably rendered. The soloists in the second part were Mesdames Stephenson and Cunningham, Miss Reeder, Mr. Semple, and Mr. Percy Hemery (violinello). A part-song and chorus were also sung. Mr. E. F. Bourne acted as accompanist, and Mr. Colbeck was Conductor.

FOLKESTONE.—On the 23rd ult. an Organ Recital was given at Holy Trinity Church, by Mr. Edgar Pettman, F.C.O., Organist of St. Mary, Kilburn, on the new organ just erected by Messrs. Bishop and Son. The programme included the Processional March (Callirhoe), by Dr. J. F. Bridge, and pieces by Liszt, J. S. Bach, W. S. Bennett, Krebs, E. Pettman, Handel, Schumann, and Mendelssohn.

FROME.—On the evening of Good Friday a Concert of sacred music was given at the Wesley Chapel, under the leadership of Mr. T. Grant, Organist at that place. The programme consisted of Rossini's Stabat Mater and selections from Handel's Messiah. The soloists were Miss E. Walton, Miss Flora Edwards, Mr. S. Boyce Creak, and Mr. D. Harrison.

GREAT MALVERN.—On Thursday evening, March 28, the North Malvern Choral Society gave a performance of The Messiah. The band and chorus numbered 270 performers. Mr. W. Higley conducted. The band was led by Mr. E. Elgar. The solos were sung by Mrs. Mason, Miss Dews, Mr. Kemp, and Mr. H. Brown. Solo trumpet, Mr. McGrath.

HULL.—Handel's Oratorio Samson was performed by the St. Cecilia Musical Society, at the King Street Co-operative Hall, on March 26. The principal vocalists were Miss Chadderton, Miss Ravell, Miss Hartley, Mr. E. Duxbury, Mr. R. M. Sixsmith, and Mr. J. H. Davenport. The choruses were well taken up and admirably sustained, whilst the band, composed of local instrumentalists, performed in a highly satisfactory manner. Mr. J. F. Slater, F.C.O., was the Conductor.

ILFORD.—On Friday evening, the 12th ult., the combined choirs of Ilford and Chigwell Churches performed Stainer's Crucifixion at Ilford Church. Mr. F. Brand conducted, and Mr. Riding, F.C.O., presided at the organ. The chorus parts were impressively rendered by the well trained choir, and the solos were given with good effect by Mr. H. Clinch, Mr. H. S. Dean, and Mr. Patrick. The work was also given, with the same soloists, Conductor, and Organist, at Loughton Parish Church, on the 3rd ult., and at Barking-side on the 9th.—The chorus and band of the Vocal Union (the latter with professional assistance) gave a performance of sacred music in the Reading Room on Good Friday. The programme included Mozart's First Mass, Gounod's "By Babylon's wave," and Haydn's "Insane et vanæ curæ" ("Distracted with care"). Soloists, Madame Eugenia Morgan, Miss Carrie Cunow, Mr. Henry Mason, and Mr. Hilton Carter. Leader, Miss Eva Haynes; Conductor, Mr. A. Storr.

KEIGHLEY.—The Musical Union gave a performance of Macfarren's Oratorio King David in the Mechanics' Institute, on the 9th ult. The chorus numbered 200 and the band fifty-four performers. The soloists were Madame Barter, Miss Meredyth Elliott, Mr. Philip Newbury, and Mr. Herbert Thorndike. Madame Frost played the harp obbligato parts. Mr. R. H. Moore was the Organist and Mr. W. H. Summerscales conducted.

KESWICK, CUMBERLAND.—The Creation was given in the Parish Church on Wednesday evening, the 10th ult., in a most brilliant manner, by the Choral Society, under the conductorship of Mr. P. T. Freeman. The band, selected from Sir Charles Hallé's orchestra, was under the leadership of Mr. F. W. Schofield. The principals were Miss Bessie Holt, Mr. E. Kemp (of Lichfield Cathedral), and Mr. J. Nutton (of Durham Cathedral). The band and chorus numbered 130. The fine organ was happily handled by Mr. Fogg, Organist to Hallé's orchestra at the Free Trade Hall, Manchester.

LEEDS.—On Thursday evening, the 4th ult., Dr. Spark's Oratorio Immanuel was rehearsed for the first time in public. The first part, finished some time ago, has been given in Leeds and in many of the principal towns in England and Scotland. The choral writing all through is good, several of the numbers showing a complete command of all the musical resources necessary to a proper development of the subject. The solos were sung by Miss Annie Hoyle, Miss Chadwick, Mr. Browning, Mr. Jackson, Mr. Briggs, and Mr. Kemp. The chorus singing was in every respect satisfactory. Dr. Spark presided at the grand pianoforte, and the organ obbligato, in the hands of Mr. Marsden, the Organist of Batley Church (a former pupil of Dr. Spark's), was all that could be desired, but the want of an orchestra was much felt.—On the 8th ult. Mr. Alfred Giessing gave a Concert of classical music at the Philosophical Hall. The two Quartets which formed the staple of the programme were Beethoven in C minor (Op. 18, No. 4) and Haydn in G minor (Op. 74, No. 3). A contrast to these superb works was afforded by an Andante from a Quartet (Op. 37), by Emil Hartmann. All three pieces were played by Messrs. A. Eckener, Brookes, J. Gutfeld, and Giessing, with a refinement and a perfection of ensemble which can only be attained by artists possessing unanimity of feeling and constantly playing together. An agreeable relief to the instrumental music was afforded by the capital singing of the Leeds Select Choir, under Mr. Alfred Broughton.

LEICESTER.—The Fourth Saturday Popular Concert (Third Series) was given in the Temperance Hall, on the 13th ult. Mrs. Robert Faire, Miss Evelyn Lewis, and Mr. Musgrove Tufnail were the vocalists, Miss Adelina Dinelli was solo violinist, and Mr. C. H. Allen Gill was solo violinist. There was also a full band of 120 performers, leader, Miss Dinelli. The accompanists for the evening were Mr. J. Garner, Mr. P. Hanford, and Miss Newton. The Concert was under the direction of Mr. J. Addison Adcock.

MAIDSTONE.—The Choral Society (Mr. H. F. Henniker, Mus. Bac., Conductor) concluded its season on the 8th ult., with a performance of Haydn's Oratorio Creation, in the Corn Exchange. The chorus was about a hundred strong, the parts being nicely balanced. There was an orchestra of about thirty performers, led by Mr. F. W. Durnall, and the soloists were Miss Kate Norman, R.A.M., Mr. H. Stubbs (Chapel Royal, Windsor), and Mr. Musgrove Tufnail.

NEWCASTLE.—A performance of Hamish MacCunn's Cantata Bonnie Kilmeny was given on the 5th ult., by Mr. T. Albion Alderson's Amateur Choir. The solos were sung by Miss Strathearn, Mr. T. H. Armstrong, and Mr. T. L. Campion. Misses Cooper, Fogg, Glanville, and Mr. A. P. Alderson were the pianoforte players. Signor Numa Zablaw was the leader of the band, the Rev. J. M. Courtenay the Organist, and Mr. T. Albion Alderson the Conductor.—One of the most important Concerts of the past month was that given by the Amateur Vocal Society, combined with the Northumberland Amateur Orchestral Society, on the 8th ult., under Dr. Wm. Rea, when Prout's dramatic Cantata Alfred and a new Chorus by Dr. Rea, "To Spring," were given. Dr. Rea's work was composed for this Concert and may be spoken of in terms of praise. The piece is short, but it is tuneful and graceful from beginning to end. At the close of the performance the applause was so great that the Chorus had to be repeated.—Mr. George Dodd's excellent Choir gave a selection of Oratorio Gems at Gateshead, on the 9th ult., and also a capital performance of Mendelssohn's Athalie at Newcastle, on the 16th ult.

NICE.—Mr. Arthur Jarratt gave his second Organ Recital at the Church of the Holy Spirit, on March 21. A well rendered programme was thoroughly enjoyed, Lemmens's "Storm Fantasia" being a special feature. The vocalists were Mrs. Jarratt, Miss Olive Barry, and Mr. C. H. Buckman.—The Choral Society's Annual Concert took place on March 25. The programme included Gaul's Holy City and a miscellaneous selection. The performance proved a great success, the members never having sung so well before. At the close the Conductor, Mr. Arthur Jarratt, was presented with a handsome laurel wreath as a mark of appreciation of his able services. The soloists, Mrs. Jarratt, Miss Devine, Miss Barry, Mr. Aspnall, and Mr. C. H. Buckman, were deservedly applauded. Mr. F. C. Fairbanks contributed some pianoforte solos which were greatly appreciated, and was ably supported by Mr. Jarratt in Liszt's "Fantasie Hongroise" for two pianofortes.

PEEL (ISLE OF MAN).—On Thursday evening, the 4th ult., a performance of Stainer's Crucifixion was given in the New Church, under the direction of Miss Wood, A.C.O., the Organist. The tenor solos were allotted to Mr. Barlow, the bass solos being judiciously sung by Dr. Friend and Mr. Corris. Mr. Harry Wood rendered important assistance with his violin, and Miss Wood and her choir are to be congratulated on the general success of their efforts.

RAMSGATE.—The second annual performance of Stainer's Crucifixion took place in St. Paul's Church, on Monday, the 8th ult. The soloists were Messrs. C. F. Rowe, H. Ashdown, and Mr. George Lander, all of whom acquitted themselves in a manner worthy of the highest praise. Mr. W. H. Higgins, of Broadstairs, presided at the harmonium, Miss S. S. Rose at the pianoforte, and Mr. Arthur Larkin at the organ. The choruses were well rendered. Much praise is due to the vicar (Rev. C. E. Eastgate) for the able manner in which he conducted the Oratorio and for his enterprise in promoting these services for the people.

SHREWSBURY.—A meeting was held on the 23rd ult. in connection with the newly-formed Welsh Musical Association, Mr. John Thomas presiding. It was resolved to have a representative in all the principal towns in Wales, with a view to discovering musical talent; that membership should not be restricted to the Welsh nation; and that the first annual meeting be held at Brecon during the Eisteddfod week, at which ten papers are to be read by members of the Society.

SOUTHPORT.—A Concert was given by the Southport Musical Guild in Cambridge Hall, on Thursday, the 11th ult. In the works performed—Handel's Acis and Galatea and Mendelssohn's Athalie—the choruses were admirably rendered. Mr. Hudson was the Conductor. The principals were Miss Hudson, Miss Wilkinson, Mr. Leyland, and Dr. Newsham.

SOUTHWELL.—The Easter Services at Southwell Minster were on a larger scale than usual. The regular choir was augmented by the members of the Choral Society, making a total of about seventy voices. The most telling and effective portion of the Sunday afternoon service was the performance of "Worthy is the Lamb" and "Amen" Choruses. These were given with spirit and precision, evidently the result of excellent training on the part of the Organist, Mr. R. W. Liddle.

STAINES.—On Wednesday, the 2nd ult., the Choral Society gave a performance of The Messiah at the Town Hall. The principal vocalists being Miss Hilda Coward, Miss Dorothy Foster, Mr. H. Stubbs, and Mr. F. C. Bevan. The chorus and orchestra numbered about 130, all members of the Society. Mr. H. Dancy was the Organist and Mr. G. F. Huntley, Mus. Bac., Cantab., the Conductor.

SURBITON.—A special Lenten Service was held in St. Mark's Church on Friday, the 12th ult., at which Bach's Passion Music (St. John) was given by the Harmonic Society. The congregation joined in singing the chorals, and the service, which was the first of its kind ever given here, made a great impression. The difficult choruses, especially "Lord our Redeemer" and "Art Thou not," were sung with remarkable precision. The Conductor was Mr. J. Maude Crament, Mus. Bac., Oxon., Organist of St. Paul's, Kensington. The solo portions of the work were sung by Miss Derry and Master Underhill, Mr. Arthur Coward, Rev. A. H. Murray, Mr. Randolph Coward, and Mr. J. P. Trew, jun. The accompaniments were given on the organ and pianoforte, presided over respectively by Mr. T. Pettit, Organist of St. Peter's, Cranley Gardens, and Mr. J. Scott Röst, Organist of the Church.

SYDNEY, N.S.W.—The production of The Spectre's Bride at the fourteenth Concert of the Philharmonic Society, on February 23, may be fairly considered the most notable achievement in the realms of musical art that has been chronicled in Sydney for many years. The intensely dramatic character of the work performed, and the fact that it is the first entire composition of the great Bohemian musician, Dvořák, that has been produced in the colony, not less than the choral and orchestral difficulties successfully overcome, and the exceptionally fine rendering accorded the solo parts, justify us in valuing very highly this last effort of the Society. It cannot be doubted that M. Kowalski has immensely strengthened the position of the association, for whose improvement he has done so much, by making known the beauties of Dvořák's vivid and imaginative style. The Spectre's Bride made a deep and abiding impression upon the large audience that filled the University Hall. The work was performed by an orchestra of fifty-five, the division being thirty-three strings (the principal violins, Messrs. Alpess and Schmellitschek), ten wood-wind, and twelve brass instruments, with a chorus of about 150 voices. Too much praise cannot be given Mr. S. Deane for his fiery declamation and absolute correctness throughout the baritone part. The other soloists were Miss Frances Saville and Signor Giovanni Dimitresco, and events showed that the Philharmonic Society could not have secured allies more helpful.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—The Vocal Association gave a very successful performance of Israel in Egypt on Monday, the 8th ult. The choruses were well sung; the band, supplemented by some members of the Royal Engineers, did their share of the work creditably, under the leadership of Mr. Frank Arnold. Mr. C. E. Clarke was at the harmonium, Mr. Cuthbert Cronk at the pianoforte, and Mr. N. E. Irons was the Conductor. The soloists were Miss Edith Stow, Miss Martha Davis, Madame Belle Cole, and Mr. Iver McKay.

WERNETH.—On Wednesday, the 17th ult., in the Colosseum, a performance of Haydn's Creation was given. Dr. Marsden conducted. Miss Anna Williams, Mr. Henry Piercy, and Mr. Watkin Mills were the soloists. The chorus-master was Mr. Robert Turner. The performance was alike creditable to the borough and the Vocal Society.

WEST HARTLEPOOL.—The Philharmonic Society gave its third Concert in the Volunteer Armoury, on the 9th ult., before a crowded audience. The works performed were Mendelssohn's 42nd Psalm and Barnett's Cantata Paradise and the Peri. The principals were Miss Julia Jones, Miss L. Dews, Mr. Dalzell, and Mr. Dan Billington. There was a full band and chorus numbering 160 performers, under the conductorship of Mr. J. F. Hard. This Society, which has done much to encourage the taste for good music in the Hartlepoons, is now in a flourishing condition, and its last effort was highly appreciated.

WHITBY.—On Wednesday, the 10th ult., a successful miscellaneous Concert was given in St. Hilda's Hall, by a choir of about forty voices, consisting of part-songs, &c., by Leslie, Hatton, Gounod, Jackson, Reay, Mendelssohn, Gaul, Pearsall, Bishop, &c., interspersed with songs, quartets, &c., by members of the choir. Mr. H. Hallgate contributed two violin solos—Beethoven's Romance in F and a Sonata by Macfarren—both excellently played. Miss Theo. G. Skelton accompanied very efficiently, and Mr. A. E. Hill, Choirmaster of Brunswick Chapel, conducted.

WILLIAN, HERTFORDSHIRE.—Stainer's Crucifixion was sung in this small village church on the evening of Good Friday, and proved in every way a highly successful effort. The choir of men and boys—slightly augmented for the occasion—sang with much feeling and expression. The soloists were Mr. J. Cooper, Mr. S. Bloom, and Mr. L. Denman. The large congregation joined heartily in the singing of the hymns which occur at intervals. At the conclusion of the Service the Rector (the Hon. and Rev. L. W. Denman) gave a suitable address. The organ accompaniments were played by Miss Denman, the honorary Organist of the Church.

WORCESTER.—A very impressive performance of Stainer's Crucifixion was given at the Church of St. John in Bedwardine, on Palm Sunday evening. Evensong had been given an hour earlier, so that the service opened with a sermon on the topic of the day, followed by the music. Copies of the words and hymn-tunes were distributed among the crowded congregation, and the hymns were taken up with great effect by the general body of voices. The solos were taken by Messrs. E. Bowen and C. Johnson, who sang them simply, devotionally, and with great refinement of feeling. The choruses went with great precision and attention to light and shade. Indeed, the dramatic feeling shown by the boys, who had never sung anything of the kind before, was astonishing. There was no Conductor, Mr. Arthur Smith, the Organist of the Church, handling the organ with great skill, and making the most of the two or three passages in which the instrument is specially prominent.

YORK.—The Passion according to St. Matthew, by Bach, was sung in six weekly portions during Lent in the Minster, this being the sixth yearly performance. On the 11th ult., being the day of the funeral of the Rev. Sir Fred. Ouseley, the Dead March in Saul was played by Dr. Naylor after Evensong.—In the Great Hall of the Yorkshire Fine Art Exhibition, on the 20th ult., a very large audience assembled on the occasion of a Concert of sacred music promoted by the Council of the Institution. The band of the York and Lancaster Regiment (Conductor, Mr. A. Neuzerling) played various suitable selections.—The Popular Concert in the Festival Concert Room also attracted a considerable audience. A well-arranged programme of vocal and instrumental pieces was given, the latter played by the band of the 3rd West York Regiment, conducted by Mr. Bartley. The vocalists were Miss Marie Athol, Miss Marie Bellas, Mr. A. Mahoney, and Mr. F. R. Helman. During the evening the band played selections from The Messiah and Stabat Mater, and the Hallelujah Chorus at the close of the programme. Mr. Arthur Sample accompanied the voices.

POINTED FOR CHANTING, WITH CHANTS ADAPTED THERETO, OR SPECIALLY COMPOSED FOR THIS WORK,

BY

SIR HERBERT OAKELEY,

LL.D., Mus. Doc., D.C.L.,

Professor of Music at the University of Edinburgh, and Composer to Her Majesty in Scotland.

EXTRACTS FROM REVIEWS.

"In the matter of church music generally, it would be difficult to find a person of wider experience than Sir Herbert Oakeley, who is believed to be acquainted with every cathedral choir in England, and has had unique opportunities of observation and of comparison of different 'uses.' Being a sound church composer, as well as a practical organist, his dicta on such matters may be accepted as trustworthy. In the course of an admirable preface Sir Herbert says:—

"A continual use of vocal harmony only, or of vocal melody only, is ineffective. Both should be employed in every psalm, for by variety and interchange the fine contrast of the two uses is fully brought out. By such an arrangement the psalms may be chanted to either of the following methods: (1) the choir may sing harmonised verses, the people joining in the unison verses (as indicated in the margin), perhaps the nearest approximation to the original mode in the Temple, in which the majority of the verses was sung by the Levites, with instrumental accompaniments of their brother Levites, the people occasionally responding or joining as the psalm required; or (2) harmonised as well as unison passages may be chanted by all who are able to sing in parts; or (3) the whole congregation may join throughout the unison according to the most ancient use in the Christian Church."

"There is no doubt that the unisonous singing of a vast congregation in those verses, as indicated in this work, would conduce in the highest degree to the grand effect which in all probability was anticipated by the inspired psalmists. What, for instance, short of this method can adequately throw into the bright relief and splendid contrast, evidently intended in Psalm cvii., those grand ascriptions of praise, 'O that men would therefore praise the Lord for His goodness!' Few things in choral praise can be imagined more thrilling than the 'roar' of a congregation, here in unison, especially occurring immediately after the more subdued harmony by the choir of those verses of penitential character, which, with musicianlike craft, the psalmist always makes to precede and to lead up to the four fine climaxes of the words quoted.

"The pointing is not 'syllabic,' but according to sense—the one system killing, the other giving life; and, on the whole, we think the pointing superior to any we have seen.

Various points of interest are referred to in the preface, including the undesirability and futility of a modern 'cacœthes of imaginary bars' before reciting notes, which is denounced as 'detrimental to good chanting, of which, perhaps, the chief point is smoothness in reciting, undisturbed and undistracted except by punctuation.'

"If this work only succeeded in restoring to the people their true portion in chanting the psalms, and in assigning to the choir their special portion, good will have been accomplished by its publication."—Musical Opinion.

"The Psalter will take its place as a valuable aid to the careful, reverent, and efficient rendering of divine service."—John Bull.

The following extracts from letters to Sir HERBERT OAKELEY testify to the practical working of the system of this Psalter:—

From the Rev. J. M. WILSON, Head Master of Clifton College.

"March 24, 1886.

"We introduced your Psalter on Sunday last, having given the whole school, first in section and then collectively, some practice in it. The idea was taken up enthusiastically, and the effect was really very fine. It was truly congregational chanting."

From the Rev. T. E. BROWN, Assistant Master of Clifton College.

"We have had some good and close work with your Psalter, and it has, I assure you, been a labour of love. . . . On the 28th evening the refrain, 'For His mercy endureth for ever,' went gloriously. . . . We may look forward to your Psalter becoming a bond of union among all public schools. . . . Our difficulty at commencing was with the choir, to many of which the usual jerky method fostered by accents and asterisks is quite inevitable. The most charming phenomenon in the mighty acclaim, or 'conclaim,' if you will, of the whole school."

From the Rev. H. J. WISEMAN, Clifton College.

"We owe you a deep debt of gratitude for your Psalter. Our efforts to do justice to your book have from the first been a labour of love, and the result has been little less than a revolution in our chanting. We 'sing unto the Lord a new song.' The Psalms and Canticles have become far more attractive and interesting than ever before, and I do not think it too much to say that they are thoroughly enjoyed by us all. The frequent alternations of unison and harmony have proved a most happy idea: they are always striking and effective, often infinitely moving, where, as is so frequently the case, the chant is in most subtle sympathy with the words."

From the Rev. HERBERT KYNASTON, D.D., Head Master of Cheltenham College.

"... Your system is just that which I have always thought best—especially for congregations such as ours, where, the choir being expected to do all the musical work, the rest are shy of joining in, and so stand silent. But with your Psalter in their hands, they watch for their turn with attention and eagerness, and take it up with spirit and energy enough to rouse the 'sons of Korah.'"

TWELVE VOCAL DUETS FOR SCHOOL USE

MUSIC BY

ALFRED R. GAUL

(Composer of the "Holy City," "Ruth," &c.)

"There are in this series of duets the sweetest things of the kind we have ever met with. No. 4, 'April,' and No. 5, 'May,' are our special favourites, the one being delightfully playful, the other tenderly melodious. Things to be treasured in households where sisters or friends delight in joining voices. The pianoforte accompaniments are well written, and such as an ordinary pianist may successfully undertake."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

EXTRACT FROM THE PREFACE.

THE following collection of "Words of Anthems" is mainly founded on that issued some years ago under the joint Editorship of the Rev. W. Rayson, M.A., Sir John Stainer, M.A., Mus. Doc., and the Rev. J. Troutbeck, D.D.

Not only, however, has it been made more comprehensive, but it has been almost entirely re-arranged on a plan commending itself to many distinguished and experienced church musicians, from whom also many valuable hints and much kind help have been received.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The volume commends itself for use in Cathedrals and Churches where Anthems are commonly sung; but it is also a book for the Musical Library, whose studious owner may depend upon getting a good deal of information from it, assisted by a remarkably complete set of Indexes.

MORNING POST.

It is the most comprehensive book of the kind ever issued, it is also the best arranged. It is easy of reference, and is set forth on an intelligent and intelligible plan. It has a copious series of Indices, so that it presents the means within itself of a right and ready use.

JOHN BULL.

This, which is a standard work, is indispensable in all churches where Anthems form a regular part of the service.

ECCLESIASTICAL GAZETTE.

This volume will be found a great assistance to precentors and organists whose task of making out lists of Anthems usually demands much thought and time. The Index of "Anthems suitable for certain days or seasons" is very exhaustive and of great value. There is a list of composers' names, with short biographical notices. A table of Anthems with Latin words is given, as also one for men's voices only. The volume includes about 1,600 Anthems, together with some 180 more taken from 47 Oratorios and Cantatas, beside the complete words of 42 Oratorios and Cantatas, which makes the total considerably over 2,000. Much credit is due for the many improvements made on former editions to the compiler, Mr. Henry King, of St. Paul's Cathedral.

For orders of 100 copies and upwards of this Book, Messrs. Novello will, if desired, print a special Title Page.

EDITED BY

JOHN STAINER, M.A., Mus. Doc.,

Magd. Coll., Oxford,

AND

W. A. BARRETT, Mus. Bac.,

St. Mary's Hall, Oxford.

PREFACE.

THE call for a third edition of the DICTIONARY OF MUSICAL TERMS has given the Editors an opportunity of correcting several little inaccuracies which had crept into the earlier issues. They cannot but feel gratified at the manner in which it has been received by musicians and the public generally, and they venture to hope that students will always find it a useful storehouse of facts associated with the art, science, and archæology of music.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Even as the work stood before, it met with favour as by a long way the most valuable of its kind available to the English reader. The definitions are clear, and the articles confine themselves to statements of facts, waste no words, and go straight to the mark. Musical amateurs as well as students should have this book by them; it is capable of telling them what they want to know.

MORNING POST.

The Editors may be heartily congratulated upon the success of their labours, and upon the popularity of their work. Notwithstanding the appearance of other books of like character, the Dictionary holds its own for usefulness and value. There is no attempt to conceal the want of knowledge under the mass of verbiage. The subjects are treated in a terse, straightforward, plain, and accurate manner, with a manliness of style which at once convinces the reader of the capacities of the writers. There is, however, a grace and elegance in the English, relieved where possible by touches of humour, which makes the Dictionary fascinating reading, apart from its authoritative statements.

THE WORLD.

The same great qualities must be acknowledged in a work that ranks very high indeed, a work called "A Dictionary of Musical Terms," edited by Dr. Stainer and Barrett, M.B., with a knowledge, a patience, a completeness which render it a valuable book of reference. . . . This book contains so many interesting paragraphs, that I was arrested against my will and prevented from flying through the pages as usual. One quality beside the extreme clearness of the type is the nearly total absence of printing faults.

NEW ORGAN WORK.

FOR THE ORGAN

COMPOSED BY

CHARLES JOSEPH FROST,

Mus. Doc., Cantab., Fell. Coll. Org., Professor of the Organ at the Guildhall School of Music, &c.

For LIST OF CONTENTS, see April MUSICAL TIMES, p. 250.

This work is a set of Voluntaries for Divine Service (many being of sufficient importance for Recital pieces) founded upon or introducing standard English Hymn Tunes; and is being published by subscription.

The price of each Volume of 100 pages is 18s. net; but they will be issued to Subscribers post-free at 9s. for either part, or 24s. 6d. for the three. It will be clearly printed (with an independent stave for the pedals throughout) upon 300 full music sized pages of the ordinary oblong form, in one edition only—viz., the three separate parts. Each part will be stitched together with a cloth back, and have a stiffer wrapper.

Subscriptions may be sent in, or your name only, to the COMPOSER, 88, TYRWHITT ROAD, ST. JOHN'S, LONDON, S.E. In the latter case, a notice will be sent when the work is ready (it is completed and already in the printer's hands), and on the receipt of your remittance will be posted to you.

Names, quoting church appointment, and postal address, should be sent in early, so as to be in time for the List of Subscribers, which will be published in The Musical Times as before. The work will be found a useful one for presentation purposes.

The great success of the two large works for the Organ previously issued, and for which were obtained six hundred and one thousand subscribers respectively, including the leading Organists of the day, has encouraged the issue of the present work.

The majority of the pieces are of only moderate difficulty and length, intricate combinations of the manual and pedal parts being studiously avoided; and in order to facilitate playing, and make the work of the utmost service to young students, fingering and pedal marks are given for almost every note. This will make the work particularly useful for teaching purposes, as the master will be spared considerable trouble in making guiding marks for a pupil, and the latter will be less likely to go astray when practising alone.

The Voluntaries chiefly take the form of Postludes, so as to supply an acknowledged want of a set of concluding Voluntaries for Divine service that will not make unreasonable demands upon the player, and yet at the same time will be solid and effective.

The whole work is set for Organs of two manuals; for it is borne in mind that most instruments in this country have two manuals only, and that while pieces written for two manuals can always be played upon one having three or more, those written for three cannot so easily be played upon two, for which, indeed, they require adaptation and re-arrangement, thus giving an organist something else to manage in addition to the execution of the piece.

It is generally acknowledged that close printing makes the reading of music a more difficult task than when it is more clearly spread out. By allowing the music ample space upon the plates this is to be obviated, as it was in the recent set of Voluntaries, with which the present work will form a companion volume.

Some of the principal features of the work are:—

1. The careful marking of crescendi and diminuendi passages for the Swell pedal; while the pedal part is planned out for the left foot only, to enable the right to produce these effects. Nos. 2, 5, 7, 8, and others will illustrate this; while No. 40 might be easily played by one not trained to use the right foot at all.
2. The marking of L.H. and R.H. where the hands are to play off their respective staves, with dotted lines to show how far.
3. The fingering and pedal marks that are given to almost every note.
4. With the intention that the form of the pieces and the treatment of the themes shall be clearly understood by even the youngest student, the different subjects and the various entries of the theme are always indicated, and other explanatory notes given with regard to the detail and construction of the pieces, so that it will be found a useful work for young students for the study of form, as the explanatory notes will be sufficient to make even the most uninitiated conversant with the form in which the piece is cast.

The Voluntaries are in no sense a set of variations on the themes, but compositions in which they are introduced, and receive various treatment. On this account the interest generally should centre on the original matter, to which the Hymn-tune themes afterwards lend an additional interest. Some of the others are built more upon the themes, which in such cases are frequently present. Their suitability to play immediately before or after the hymn has been sung will be recognised, as well as their appropriateness for certain special seasons where the tunes are associated with special hymns.

In striking out a new and comparatively untrudged path in thus issuing a complete work upon standard English Hymn-Tunes, the Composer hopes that he may strike a sympathetic chord in the hearts of English church organists, and he regrets that he was unable to include a larger number of modern favourites in the collection, as he had originally intended; but the permission to use copyright tunes was only obtained after the work was well in hand, so that he hopes to resume his work at these at an early date, if the present issue meets with favour.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

"Mendelssohn's Organ Sonatas, and those of Bach's Organ compositions, which introduce and treat the old German Chorales, appeal less to the English public than to the Teuton, with whose religious services those Chorales are so closely associated. Only a few of those that are treated in the above-mentioned works are really familiar to English congregations.

"Though the present work stands upon very different lines to those classics, it was prompted by that idea, and the discovery that congregations appreciate Voluntaries introducing a standard Hymn-Tune in which they are accustomed to join."

A circular containing description of each piece and all particulars, together with a Specimen Sheet of the Music, will be forwarded on receipt of Penny stamp.

BENEDICTUS

SIX PIECES FOR VIOLIN

COMPOSED BY

A. C. MACKENZIE.

(Op. 37.)

Full Score, 5s.; Orchestral Parts, 3s. 6d.;
Also, as originally written for Violin Solo with Pianoforte
Accompaniment, 2s.

THE DAILY TELEGRAPH.

As an exceptional case, this movement absolutely gains by the change to which it has been subjected, the impassioned religious melody acquiring force by being played in chorus, and added beauty by a rich accompaniment of strings, horns, and wood-wind. The audience at once pronounced the piece a success, and the composer bowed his thanks for sustained applause from his place in the gallery.

STANDARD.

Dr. Mackenzie's "Benedictus" was originally written for violin, with pianoforte accompaniment. Since then the author has appreciated the capabilities of the music in an orchestral sense, and after several attempts—this composer, like Mendelssohn, never being satisfied at the offset—has written his score for a small orchestra. . . . So charming did this piece prove that the applause was unanimous, and was maintained until the composer had appeared at the end gallery and bowed his acknowledgment.

DAILY NEWS.

The remaining novelty was a brief but charming "Benedictus," originally written by Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, as one of a set of violin pieces which Lady Hallé last summer introduced to London. The pianoforte accompaniment has, however, now been scored for wind orchestra by the composer, and the solo is given to all the violins of the orchestra.

MORNING POST.

There are beautiful harmonies accompanying the phases of melody, and the whole piece, which is replete with dignity and distinguished by originality, forms a most grateful addition to orchestral répertoires.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

The clever musician has since scored it for a small orchestra, assigning the violin solo to the whole of the violins, and providing work for the other strings, flutes, clarinets, bassoons, and horns, in which form it is likely to obtain as much popularity on the platform as the first setting in the salon. It is a beautiful, quietly flowing melody, with such an elegant accompaniment as only a composer of genuine taste and sympathetic nature, having a perfect knowledge of the means of the instruments he introduces, could place upon paper.

THE OBSERVER.

The two leading themes are in themselves beautiful, and their scenic beauty is enhanced by exquisite orchestration, in which the wind instruments above-named, in conjunction with the violas, violoncellos, and double-basses, are happily employed. . . . This "Benedictus" is likely to become popular throughout the musical world.

THE GLOBE.

Dr. A. C. Mackenzie's new "Benedictus" for violins and orchestra (first public performance) is short and comparatively simple, but will add to his fame. . . . The "Benedictus" is a polished gem.

SUNDAY TIMES.

Dr. A. C. Mackenzie's new "Benedictus for Orchestra," a transcription of one of his "Six Pieces for Violin and Piano," Op. 37, is a gem of melody encased in a beautiful instrumental setting.

THE DREAM OF JUBAL

A POEM WITH MUSIC

FOR SOLI, CHORUS, ORCHESTRA, AND ACCOMPANIED RECITATION

WRITTEN BY

JOSEPH BENNETT

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

A. C. MACKENZIE.

VOCAL SCORE, PAPER COVER, 2s. 6d.; PAPER BOARDS, 3s.; CLOTH GILT, 4s.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

A hearing of Dr. Mackenzie's music confirms the impression conveyed by reading it, and establishes the fact that the composer has taken another step towards the perfect illustration of simplicity of form and directness of expression—qualities not less essential in the art of music than in any other. . . . There was no mere pretence of listening; from first to last the piece held the attention of its auditors, and compelled their hearty applause, which culminated at the close in an emphatic and apparently unanimous chorus of approval.

STANDARD.

It is only just to bestow very high commendation on Mr. Bennett, whose libretto is, in poetical fancy and skilful arrangement, quite equal to that of the "Rose of Sharon." . . . It may be said without hesitation, that if it does not enhance Dr. Mackenzie's fame, it deserves a place by the side of his best efforts. . . . The audience was evidently interested in the "Dream of Jubal," for the applause was enthusiastic at every opportunity.

DAILY NEWS.

The text may be accepted as a genuine invention of the librettist. . . . It is in his accompaniments to the dialogue that Dr. Mackenzie is at his greatest. Here all the resources of the orchestra are brought into play, and free use is made of "leading motives," including (in association with the idea of the Divine Power) an extremely happy quotation of the phrase given in the "Hallelujah Chorus" of "The Messiah," to the words "And He shall reign for ever and ever."

MORNING POST.

Few composers living could have written more beautiful music than that with which Dr. Mackenzie accompanies the spoken words. . . . The contrast to the simple gaiety of the scene in the fields is presented in the magnificent Funeral March and Chorus, which stands as the finest number in the work—deep in expression and strikingly original in treatment. . . . There can be no doubt that "The Dream of Jubal" is not only his best work, but it is also the best work of the kind produced by any modern composer.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

Dr. Mackenzie, it must at once be said, has thoroughly caught the spirit of Mr. Joseph Bennett's lines. The impression created upon the attentive listener is, indeed, that of a single mind having imagined and executed both words and music. Of course, this is exactly as it should be. . . . The choral writing is worthy of the composer who penned the magnificent series forming the "Procession of the Ark," in the "Rose of Sharon," whilst the instrumentation is throughout picturesque and vivid, as well as highly interesting to those who wish to go below the surface and critically analyse Dr. Mackenzie's method of workmanship.

ATHENÆUM.

It may be said at once that "The Dream of Jubal" is not a mere pièce d'occasion, which, when once heard, is quickly forgotten and can never be revived. Though composed for a special celebration there is no reason why the work should not survive on its literary and musical merits. We speak advisedly of both, because the libretto, by Mr. Joseph Bennett, is very far above the average in felicity of idea and beauty of expression.

THE WORLD.

The work is not only clever but really poetical, and so far surpasses all the previous efforts of the same author with which I am acquainted. The music altogether is distinguished, musicianlike, impressive; especially so is the first quartet with chorus, "Gloria in Excelsis," and the last, the "Invocation," with two harps.

VANITY FAIR.

For once the poet has been allowed to take his place side by side with the musician, and not, as usual, occupy a merely subordinate position. . . . Mr. Joseph Bennett has produced a work which in every way does him infinite credit—a work full of graceful imagery, tender thoughts, and poetic language. Throughout the orchestration was most charming.

SUNDAY TIMES.

There is in the poem an elegance of diction, a dignity of style, and a force of expression betraying an ardent admirer and capable imitator of Milton. From first to last the reader's lines are in the highest sense poetic. As to the accompanying music, enough that it has all the appropriateness, refinement, and melodic charm Dr. Mackenzie knew how to concentrate upon it. All Dr. Mackenzie's strength and individuality and wealth of resource come to the surface in the three magnificent concerted pieces now alluded to. . . . they attain, indeed, to as lofty an eminence as any English composer has yet reached. . . . In summing up "The Dream of Jubal" we have had no difficulty whatever as regards the estimation of its manifold beauties, poetic and musical.

LIVERPOOL COURIER.

"The Dream of Jubal" is simply a beautiful symphonic poem, accompanied by voices in the best possible manner, and the keenest insight to a judicious use of poetic recitation, combined with solo voices and grand choral features seldom grasped, and almost as rarely attempted by any other composer. During the performance the audience was spell-bound.

LIVERPOOL MERCURY.

There can be no manner of doubt that Dr. Mackenzie has for ever closed the mouths of such people as object to works written to order, and produced one fit to stand shoulder to shoulder and side by side with the noblest in the realm of music. From first to last there is not an episode of note unreplete with interest.

LIVERPOOL DAILY POST.

It is an entirely worthy and noble conception, quite original, and of a fibre which arouses interest at the outset, and holds it enthralled until the last chord is heard.

Any quality of paper may be used, and thus the serious expense of ruled MS. be avoided.

THE INSTRUMENT IS PERFECTLY SIMPLE,
EASY TO WORK,
RELIABLE, AND NEVER GETS OUT OF ORDER.

No Musician should be without one.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.

JUNE 1, 1889.

DR. HUEFFER'S LAST WORK.*

THE circumstances under which this volume of essays makes its appearance render it inappropriate and undesirable for a reviewer to approach his task in a spirit of searching scrutiny. Many of the statements contained therein would probably have been modified or revised had the author lived. The annals of music are full of unexpected vicissitudes, which render it unsafe to dogmatise or predict. Again, the present work is only a slender instalment of the magnum opus projected by the author; and the alternative title is a far more accurate indication of its contents than that which appears on the cover. And finally, a very considerable portion of the whole has already seen the light in the pages of the Quarterly and Fortnightly reviews, and has been commented on at the time of its publication. But while disclaiming the intention of subjecting these pages to minute criticism, we must equally disclaim the intention of adopting the de mortuis method. It is impossible to avoid recognising the very considerable intellectual equipment with which the late musical critic of the Times was provided. It is equally impossible to avoid regretting the lack of sympathy which characterised his method of dealing with opponents. He was a man of very considerable width of culture, and, in some departments, of erudite attainments. The English tongue never became thoroughly plastic in his hands as a medium of expression, but he ultimately attained a facility and a freedom which speak eloquently for his application and industry. He wrote a learned work on the Troubadours, and his introductory essay to the poems of Dante Gabriel Rossetti is an excellent piece of criticism. But the true bent of his mind was towards literature, and herein lay his strength and his weakness as a musical critic: his strength, in so far as it enabled him to appeal to cultivated readers; and his weakness, in that it led him to aspire to distinction as a librettist, and, for the rest, gave the impression that the literary aspects of music were dwelt upon to disguise shortcomings of technical knowledge. As to his libretti, we venture to think that they illustrate the fact that no man can be a poet in a tongue not his own. His flowers of speech will always remain exotic, hot-house growths. Even Dr. Hueffer's literary criticism is at times singularly wanting in perception—as, for example, when he calls Chopin the Keats of music. The present volume is an effort to set forth what has been done in the way of the revival of music as a national art in the present reign, the method adopted being to group dates and facts round certain men of light and leading, giving the precedence to the great foreign masters who have visited our shores during the period in question. As a matter of fact, these foreign masters resolve themselves into three—Wagner, Liszt, and Berlioz. There is next to nothing about Mendelssohn, apart from the citation of the often-quoted letter describing his visit to Buckingham Palace. And, after all, composers can exert their influence very potently without visiting a country at all, teste Brahms, who has never been in England, but whose music, by the sheer dead-weight of its own merit, has gradually won its way into popularity. There is not a word about Schumann, who was a decided Anglomaniac, or Spohr, or Gounod, or Dvorák, or Bizet. One cannot resist the notion that Wagner and Berlioz and Liszt appealed to Dr. Hueffer by their writings as much as by their compositions. They were all three critics as well as composers, and on this account attracted one who was much more a man of letters than a musician. The long chapter, "Berlioz in England"—written, Dr. Hueffer tells us, to fill up some lacunae in Adolphe Jullien's otherwise exhaustive work—makes it clear that the writer is very sceptical as to the influence of Berlioz on the development of English music. "Has his music," he asks, "even now taken firm hold of the masses, as distinguished from the classes, of professional musicians and highly cultured amateurs? I should say not, with the sole exception, perhaps, of 'Faust,' which carries the day in all circumstances by dint of its subject. Has the French master's work left any deep or abiding trace on the minds and the workmanship of English musicians? is another question which must, I think, be answered in the negative." If that be so, then why single out Berlioz in illustration of the fact, as stated in the Preface, that the greater portion of musical work in England during the last half century has been done by foreigners? The true explanation of this inconsistency is, we believe, to be found in the simple fact that Berlioz, Wagner, and Liszt were alike congenial subjects. Even with regard to Wagner, Dr. Hueffer does not pronounce clearly as to the influence he has exerted on native art. He cannot be ignored, but he cannot be imitated. He has, however, cleared the air and "transfused the rigid mould of the classical form with the freedom of poetic spirit." As to Liszt, the results are pronounced to be the barrenest of all. One arrives at the conclusion that the title of this volume is a complete misnomer. But that does not prevent it from being always readable, and in certain parts decidedly interesting. Dr. Hueffer's suggestion as to the establishment of provincial orchestras is valuable and timely. The aim of such institutions as the Guildhall School is defined as the formation of good audiences rather than excellent performers—in other words, as the purification of musical public opinion. Dr. Hueffer's great admiration for Wagner did not prevent him from recognising that the master could be guilty of gross breaches of good taste, and he frankly admits the ill-advised acrimony with which he assailed the Jews. But he seems quite blind to the degrading and humiliating aspect in which Wagner appears in his correspondence with Liszt. The chapter on Berlioz is the best in the book, and contains some shrewd comments on the personality of that eccentric genius.

By JOSEPH BENNETT.

HANDEL, as we have seen, had the start of his enemies in the great and final struggle between one man and the high society of the period. But this availed him little. He had no works of commanding interest ready, nor, at the outset, did he possess a singer capable of taking the town. However, the indomitable master struggled on with "Semiramis," a work by an anonymous composer, his own "Otho," and a pasticcio, entitled "Caius Fabbricius," in which he was able to place the famous Carestini, an Italian soprano, for some time the rival of Farinelli, and even, it is said, preferred to him by no less a judge than Handel himself. The pasticcio, even with Carestini, ran but four nights, and those at the distance of a week apart. Burney says à propos: "Such was the influence of Handel's enemies and Senesino's friends, that it seems to have repressed all curiosity for what was now transacting at the opera-house." The boycott was not the worst feature in the case. By this time the nobility's own opera house in Lincoln's Inn Fields had opened its doors, with Porpora's "Ariadne" as the entertainment, and that master as the Conductor, while, to make matters worse for poor Handel, no less important a member of the Royal Family than the Prince of Wales threw his influence into the scale against him. Not that the Prince disliked our composer, or cared much for the venture of the nobility. It was enough for him that his father took Handel's part; the illustrious occupants of England's palaces being just then at the height of one of their periodic quarrels. Schœlcher devotes a foot-note to this particular crisis: "The Royal Family of England at that time offered a revolting spectacle. King George the Second, like Louis the Fourteenth, exposed to the whole world the indecencies of his amours. Both he and his wife had conceived against their own son Frederic a violent and implacable antipathy, and they, who owed at least to their subjects an example of good manners, did not hesitate to make them witnesses of the scandal of their family quarrels." The London Daily Post extracts the following announcement from the London Gazette of February 27, 1728: "His Majesty having been informed that due regard has not been paid to his order of September 11, 1727, has thought fit to declare that no person whatever who shall go to pay their Court to their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, shall be admitted into his Majesty's presence at any of his royal palaces." But though the adhesion of the Prince of Wales to the anti-Handel faction was a mere move in an amiable family game, it did none the less harm. A rehearsal of "Ariadne" actually took place in the Prince's house, and the whole weight of a popular royal personage was "exploited" in every conceivable way. It is not surprising, under these circumstances, that the nobility's opera opened well. "Ariadne" ran for twenty nights, and was followed by other works, all of which, helped by party spirit, had a fair success.

Meanwhile Handel composed an "Ariadne" of his own, and produced it on January 26, 1734. This was characteristic of him. He was always ready to "follow suit" with his opponent, knowing that, as regards ability, he held the court cards. Nor, in this case, were his calculations at fault, for the "Ariadne" of Handel, unaided by "society," reached exactly the same number of performances as, backed up by the influence of fashion, did the "Ariadne" of Porpora. As may be supposed, the wits of the day made themselves merry over this war à l'outrance, and there was much chatter in the coffee houses, with much waste of ink and paper in Grub Street. Schœlcher quotes one or two examples, which we hope, for the credit of English wit a century and a half ago, are not the best. One is an advertisement: "Do you know what you are about? or a Protestant Alarm to Great Britain, proving our late theatric squabble to be a type of the present contest for the crown, and that the division between Handel and Senesino has more in it than we imagine." Similarly, the London Magazine published a burlesque treaty of peace, winding up thus: "The most high and puissant George Frederic Handel, Prince Palatine of the Haymarket; the most sublime John James Heidegger, Count of the Most Sacred and Holy Roman Empire; and the most noble and illustrious Signor Senesino, little Duke of Tuscany, do engage for themselves, their heirs, and successors, to become guarantees for the due performance and execution of all, every and singular, the articles of this present treaty. Done in the Camp in New Palace Yard before Westminster Hall, this 28th day of November, in the year of our Lord, 1733."

In March, 1734, Handel brought out a pièce d'occasion to celebrate the marriage of the Princess Royal with the Prince of Orange. It was announced in the Daily Journal thus: "We hear that amongst the public diversions, preparing on occasion of the approaching nuptials, there is to be performed at the opera-house in the Haymarket, on Wednesday next, a Serenata called 'Parnasso in Festa.' The fable is, Apollo and the Muses celebrating the marriage of Thetis and Peleus. There is one standing scene, which is Mount Parnassus, on which sit Apollo and the Muses, assisted with other proper characters, emblematically dressed, the whole appearance being extremely magnificent. The music is no less entertaining, being contrived with so great a variety that all sorts of music are properly introduced in single songs, duettos, &c., intermixed with choruses, somewhat in the style of oratorio. People have been waiting with impatience for this piece, the celebrated Mr. Handel having exerted his utmost skill in it." As may be supposed, notwithstanding the "utmost skill," &c., the piece was largely made up of music drawn from other works, the Oratorio of "Athaliah," then new to Londoners, being chiefly favoured. The Serenata was four times performed, and went the way of all its kind.

Handel continued the season with "Arbace," "Sosarme," "Deborah," "Acis and Galatea," and other revivals, the house shutting on July 6, when Handel's agreement with Heidegger expired. Being free, Heidegger let the theatre to the nobility's opera, and his former partner had either to give up the struggle or take another house and renew the strife absolutely single-handed, that is to say, without a business manager. Looking calmly at the situation thus created, it is clear that Handel would have been justified in laying down his arms. The fortune of war was entirely in favour of his enemies. They had the best artists from the first; they captured the master's theatre, and then secured the famous Farinelli, with whose praises all Europe was ringing. But Handel had no thought of yielding. Never did his bull-dog tenacity assert itself more than in this crisis. Come what may, he would have another "round" with his aristocratic foes, and, to this end, promptly secured the theatre (Lincoln's Inn Fields) they had left. Thus the rivals were in the position of foot-ball players who have changed ends. Handel thundered from the abandoned camp of his foes, who, in turn, defied him from his old fastness in the Haymarket. Our master's resolution enraged the aristocracy beyond measure. How long was this beggarly German to defy the British peerage? The honour of their order was thought to be compromised, and Handel's few friends who belonged to it began to leave his side. Schœlcher remarks: "As it became the fashion to despise Mr. Handel, every upstart took care to do so," and then quotes from "Tom Jones" how that Squire Western, "had he lived in town, might have passed for a connoisseur, for he always excepted against the finest compositions of Mr. Handel." Undismayed and resolute as ever the master went on his way.

He opened the theatre in Lincoln's Inn Fields on October 5, 1734, and played "Ariadne" and "Pastor Fido" till December 18, when he removed to the new theatre in Covent Garden, and produced a pasticcio entitled "Orestes." His company at this house included Miss Cecilia Young, afterwards Mrs. Arne, but, otherwise, there was very little change from the troupe of the previous season.

Handel, having made an arrangement with Rich, the lessee of the newly built Covent Garden Theatre, removed his enterprise to that house on December 18, 1734, performed "oratorio" during Lent, and in April produced "Alcina," with which, according to Burney, he "seems to have vanquished his opponents, and to have kept the field a month longer than his rival, Porpora, could make head against him." In this he was assisted by the influence of George II., whose sympathy with our master increased as the Prince of Wales more and more openly sided with the opposition. "Alcina" was given eighteen times between April and July, and always by royal command. But the closing weeks of the season were unfavourably affected by the loss of Carestini, who departed to fulfil an engagement in Venice.

When the house had shut its doors, Handel found himself in a position of much difficulty. He had lost money, while as regarded the future, he knew not where to turn for artists capable of successfully rivalling the splendid company at the nobility's opera. His indecision appears in a letter addressed (on July 28, 1735) to Mr. Charles Jennens, the future librettist of "The Messiah," "Belshazzar," &c.

"Sir,—I received your very agreeable letter with the enclosed oratorio.* I am just going to Tunbridge; yet what I could read of it in haste gave me a great deal of satisfaction. I shall have more leisure time there to read it with all the attention it deserves. There is no certainty of any scheme for next season, but it is probable that something or other may be done, of which I shall take the liberty to give you notice, being extremely obliged to you for the generous concern you show upon this account. The opera of Alcina is a-writing out, and shall be sent according to your direction. It is always a great pleasure to me if I have an opportunity to show the sincere respect with which I have the honour to be, Sir, &c.,—G. F. HANDEL."

The resolution which Handel ultimately arrived at was dictated partly by his own unconquerable spirit; partly, if Burney may be credited, by the circumstance that he could not get together a sufficient company for Italian opera. Once more we see Fate warring against the master's will and driving him into the course which was to lead to so much glory. Unable to play opera, Handel turned his attention to Dryden's Ode "Alexander's Feast," which Newburgh Hamilton adapted for a musical setting. The poem had previously been treated in the same manner by John Hughes, at the instance of Sir Richard Steele, with Clayton as composer. Failure resulted, but this did not deter Handel, especially as Newburgh Hamilton was sanguine of a brilliant result. In his preface the librettist said: "I confess my principal view (in arranging the poem) was not to lose the favourable opportunity of its being set to music by that great master, who has with pleasure undertaken the task, and who only is capable of doing it justice; whose compositions have long shown that they can conquer even the most obstinate partiality, and inspire life into the most senseless words." Warming with his theme, Hamilton burst into poetry and sang:—

Had Dryden lived the welcome day to bless
That clothed his numbers in so fit a dress;
When his majestic poetry was crowned
With all your bright magnificence of sound;
How would his wonder and his transport rise,
Whilst famed Timotheus yields to you the prize.

"Alexander's Feast" was produced at Covent Garden, "in the manner of an oratorio," on February 19, 1736, the chief singers being Signora Strada, Miss Young (afterwards Mrs. Arne), Mr. Beard, and a Mr. Erard. The success of the work was immense, and the London Daily Post, in noticing the first performance, remarked:

"There never was, upon a like occasion, so numerous and splendid an audience at any theatre in London, there being at least 1,300 persons present, and it is judged that the receipt of the house could not amount to less than £450. It met with general applause." "Alexander's Feast," with "Esther" and "Acis and Galatea" just contrived to support the season, which derived further aid from the production (May, 1736) of "Atalanta," an opéra de circonstance, the event celebrated being the marriage of the Prince of Wales with a Princess of Saxe Gotha. "All the theatres," says Burney, "were eager to manifest their zeal in the celebration of so great an event as the royal nuptials," and, of course, Handel could not be behind the rest. The nobility's opera gave "Orfeo," in presence of the Royal Family, on April 29, but Handel's tribute was not paid till May 12. Concerning it the Daily Post of the following morning said: "Last night was performed, at the Theatre Royal, Covent Garden, for the first time, the opera of 'Atalanta,' composed by Mr. Handel on the joyous occasion of the nuptials of their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales. In which was a new set of scenes painted in honour of the happy union, which took up the full length of the stage; the fore part of the scene represented an avenue to the Temple of Hymen, adorned with statues of heathen deities. Next was a triumphal arch, on the summit of which were the arms of their Royal Highnesses. Under the arch was the figure of Fame on a cloud, sounding the praises of this happy pair. The names Frederic and Augusta appeared above in transparent characters. The opera concluded with a grand chorus, during which several beautiful illuminations were displayed. There were present, their Majesties, the Duke, and the four Princesses, accompanied with a very splendid audience, and the whole was received with universal acclamations." "Atalanta" was performed from time to time till the season closed on June 9. The singers in it were Strada, Maria Negri, Conti (Gizziello) Beard, Waltz, and Reinhold. After all, then, the season of 1736 was not quite barren of Italian opera, though mainly taken up with English oratorio and cantata. The master felt that he was still fighting his aristocratic foes on the old battleground. One more struggle remained to go through, and then would come the end, which Handel must have known was near at hand, since his purse was exhausted and his credit beginning to be strained.

We hasten to the close of a story of misfortune. Handel began another season at Covent Garden, in November, 1736, when he revived "Atalanta," with improved firework effects, and some new artists whom the indefatigable man had imported from Italy. One of these was Domenico Annibali. "Atalanta" was followed by "Arminio," which failed, and by a reproduction of "Parthenope," and, next, by a new opera entitled "Giustino." Handel contemplated the performance of lyric dramas during the Lent of this year, and announced that the days of performance would be Wednesday and Friday. To this arrangement, however, the Lord Chamberlain objected, at the instance, it may be, of the master's enemies, and the newspapers came out with a paragraph as follows: "We hear, since operas have been forbid being performed at the theatre in Covent Garden on the Wednesdays and Fridays in Lent, Mr. Handel is preparing Dryden's Ode of 'Alexander's Feast,' the Oratorios of 'Esther' and 'Deborah,' with several new concertos for the organ and other instruments, also a new entertainment of music called 'Il Trionfo del Tempo, e della Verità,' which performances will be brought on the stage, and varied every week." "From this period," says Burney, "may be dated the custom to which Handel afterwards adhered, of performing oratorios on Wednesday and Friday during Lent, not merely on account of their gravity and fitness for that holy time, but to avail himself of the suspension of all other public amusements which were likely to divide the public attention and favour." No great success was achieved by "Giustino," although, by this time, the Prince of Wales had returned to his Handelian allegiance and frequently attended the performance. It became necessary, therefore, to put other works upon the stage. "Parnasso in Festa" was revived, as was "Alexander's Feast," and the master's old Neapolitan Cantata already mentioned. This, described as a "new oratorio," drew a "crowded audience." Lastly, Handel brought out "Berenice," the last Italian opera composed by him during his managerial career. The new work ran for four nights only, after which repetitions of operas and oratorios previously produced carried on the season to its close on June 25.

Handel was now almost overwhelmed with misfortune. He had fought a grand fight against bitter opposition and powerful influences unscrupulously used, but in the end all was lost save honour. Ten thousand pounds had gone in the struggle, and a load of debt weighed him down. But he could at least boast that his opponents succumbed sooner, closing their theatre several weeks before Handel shut his own doors. They, too, had lost their entire capital of £12,000. Worry and chagrin had their natural effect upon an over-worked man, and the master's health gave way. His illness was announced as early as April, on the last day of which month a paragraph appeared in the Daily Post as thus: "Mr. Handel, who has been some time indisposed with the rheumatism, is in so fair a way of recovery that it is hoped he will be able to accompany the Opera of 'Justin' on Wednesday next, the 4th of May." Unhappily, the poor distracted musician got worse instead of better until the crash came. "The violence of his passions," says Mainwaring, "made such a disaster operate the more terribly." Mainwaring—whose book, it should be remembered, appeared in 1760, only twenty-three years after the events happened to which reference is now made—gives details regarding Handel's bodily condition at this juncture:—

"The observation that misfortunes rarely come single was verified in Handel. His fortune was not more impaired than his health and his understanding. His right arm was become useless to him from a stroke of the palsy, and how greatly his senses were disordered at intervals, for a long time appeared from a hundred instances, which are better forgotten than recorded."

In this condition something had to be done, and Mainwaring tells us what:—

"But though he had the best advice, and tho' the necessity of following it was urged to him in the most friendly manner, it was with the utmost difficulty that he was prevailed on to do what was proper, when it was in any way disagreeable. For this reason it was thought best for him to have recourse to the vapour baths of Aix-la-Chapelle, over which he sat near three times as long as hath ever been the practice. Whoever knows anything of the nature of those baths will, from this instance, form some idea of his surprising constitution. His sweats were profuse beyond what can well be imagined. His cure, from the manner as well as from the quickness with which it was wrought, passed with the nuns for a miracle. When, but a few hours from the time of his quitting the bath, they heard him at the organ in the principal church as well as convent, playing in a manner so much beyond any they had ever been used to, such a conclusion in such persons was natural enough. Though his business was so soon despatched, and his cure judged to be thoroughly effected, he thought it prudent to continue at Aix about six weeks, which is the shortest period usually allotted for bad cases."

On October 28 the public were informed, through the newspapers, that "Mr. Handel, the composer of Italian music, was hourly expected from Aix-la-Chapelle." On November 7 his actual arrival in London was announced, and an assurance given that he was "greatly recovered in his health."

The master soon got into harness again, but not as an operative manager, of the risks of which vocation his debts were a constant reminder. On returning to London he found that Heidegger, his old associate, had opened the King's Theatre, and was perfectly ready to receive a new opera at his hands. Handel forthwith set to work upon "Faramondo," but its composition was interrupted within a few days by the death of Queen Caroline and the King's request for a funeral Anthem. The decease of the Queen was another blow for our composer. She had always been his very good friend and his feeling towards her was one of sincere respect and devotion. It is not surprising that, under these circumstances, and moved by real grief, Handel composed an Anthem, "The ways of Zion do mourn," which ranks among his noblest works. This piece, written at express speed, and ready by December 12 (the opera progressing at the same time, since it attained completion on the 24th), was copied, rehearsed, and performed within five days, the funeral taking place on December 17. The Daily Post, in its account of the ceremony, said: "The fine anthem of Mr. Handel's was performed about nine; the vocal parts were performed by the several choirs of the Chapel Royal, Westminster Abbey, St. Paul's, and Windsor, and the boys of the Chapel Royal and Westminster Abbey; and several musical gentlemen of distinction attended in surplices and sung in the burial service. There were nearly eighty vocal performers and too instrumental, from His Majesty's band, and from the opera," &c.

The King's Theatre, consequent upon the Royal decease, remained shut for some time, re-opening in January, 1738, with "Faramondo." How that opera fared, and how Handel contrived to weather the storms of fate are interesting topics for discussion next month.

WHERE ARE OUR BANDS?

MR. CROWEST is one of the favoured few whose lucubrations on musical matters command the attention of our leading reviews. There he has preached the propaganda of musical boycotting, and enlightened his benighted countrymen as to the true methods of building up a national opera. Now he comes forward, in the May number of the National Review, to let in more light on the dark places of military music. And let us at once admit that his diction shows no symptoms of change. It is as inextricably confused, as voluptuously exuberant as ever. To the refinement of native eloquence, however, some choice exotic embellishments have been superadded. He has deviated from the vernacular, discovered a new race called the Messinians, and quoted two Greek words, one wrongly accented and the other an improvement on Thucydides. But these are mere details. The point with which we are concerned has nothing to do with Mr. Crowest's style or his solecisms. What we wish to lay stress on is the fact that he has rendered good service by incidentally alluding to a real public grievance—the extensive nature of the non-official engagements of our best military bands. So long as Mr. Crowest refrains from theorising, and confines himself to statements of fact, he is useful and even intelligible. For instance, he shows that the pay of bandmen is poor, and their chance of promotion nil. Why then do they join? “The answer to this is, there are certain loopholes which a bandsman will join the army for the off chance of finding. One is this. Bandmen in Line regiments are trained by their bandmasters until they complete their first term of service, and should they turn out good musicians, they invariably try for the Guards, Marines, Engineers, or Artillery Bands, which, if they get accepted for, they join, regardless of their old regiment’s convenience, or the feelings of the bandmaster who has trained them. One would think that a system which precluded this chopping and changing, and which made it possible for a regiment to command and retain the services of its efficient musicians would be the better policy for all concerned. But admission to these leading regiments means certain privileges which appeal strongly to the men, and which are not in force in ordinary Line bands. Thus, in the case of the regiments of Guards, the men have the privilege of wearing civilian clothes when off duty, which enables them to accept private engagements; they can live out of barracks, and thus have wives and sweethearts, and a thousand other facilities for getting rid of their earnings; many engagements at parties, theatres, promenade concerts, balls, weddings, and flower shows, where wine and music frequently contract a not unfriendly alliance, are open to them—all this and more is the portion of the stationary bandsman. Bands such as the Guards’ are called “stationary” from the fact that they are not expected to leave the kingdom, and both bandmen and bandmaster in such regiments have tolerably snug posts. The duties of the Guards’ bands chiefly appertain to the State, which fact demands their presence nearly always in London. As Household troops they have extra work, such as guard mounting daily at Old Palace Yard, guards of honour, levées, and the like, to attend.”

Put briefly, the result of the present system is this: that our best military bands in London or Portsmouth are so preoccupied with the fulfilment of their private engagements that they are not fully available for public occasions. Even officers have been heard to complain that they hardly ever hear their own bands. Now this, it seems to us, is a matter on which the public is entitled to a hearing, especially at the present time, when an appeal has been made in the columns of the Daily Telegraph for the establishment of a daily military band in Hyde Park.

It is true that the chief cost of supporting a military band falls on the officers of the regiment, but the Government annually contributes £80 to this end; and, therefore, the taxpayer has some voice in the matter. The provincial towns are far better off than the metropolis in the matter of hearing open air military music. In London the crack military bands exist mainly for the benefit of Society—in other words, for those who are rich enough to engage them to play at their private houses. This is an anomaly strangely at variance with the democratic tendency of the age. The reason alleged by the authorities for refusing to acquiesce in the proposal advanced by our contemporary is equally out of keeping with the times. But more than that; it can be shown to be baseless. It is asserted that such an institution would draw all the rough element in the population to Hyde Park. Per contra, the results, in recent seasons, of the establishment of the band on Sunday—a much more likely day to attract the roughs—have been such as most effectually to dispel such a notion. On the finest days the audiences have been orderly and respectable, not to say fashionable. For our own part, we can see nothing to be frightened at in the advent of respectable working men on such occasions. But the fastidious may take heart of grace, for, as a correspondent in the Daily Telegraph pointed out, it is a well known fact that the poorer classes have a curious disinclination to frequent places which are the common resort of smart and fashionable people. It will no doubt be objected that the high standard of efficiency attained in our best military bands is the result of this demand for their performance on non-official occasions, and that if any step were taken to curtail their earning capacity, this efficiency would suffer from the falling off of competition. If this be so, we are quite at one with Mr. Crowest, who suggests that bandmen should be better paid all round. The taxpayer would not be so inclined to grumble if once he felt a sense of real proprietorship in these fine bands. That he can not be said to do at present.

THE GREAT MUSICAL REFORMERS.

By W. S. ROCKSTRO.

III.—MAGISTER FRANCO.

OF the progressive steps by means of which the art and science of music were gradually raised to a comparatively high degree of perfection, during the period which immediately followed the death of Guido d'Arezzo, no detailed record has been preserved to us. It is only, therefore, by diligent study of the MSS. handed down to us from this eventful epoch that we are able to arrive at a trustworthy estimate of the facts therein presented to us in a practical form, with no theoretical dissertations to aid us in our search after the truth.

We have seen that Guido furnished his readers with an immense amount of valuable information, without clearly explaining how far the improvements he described were the result of his own inventive genius, or telling us how many of them were in general use at the time when he began to write. We must, therefore, content ourselves with the certainty that the compendium he bequeaths to us presents us with a trustworthy epitome of the condition of musical science at the opening of the eleventh century. That a well considered system of improvement was in active progress at this period cannot reasonably be doubted. Indeed, the fact is proved by innumerable MSS., in which the evidence of advance is incontestable. But half-a-century, at least—possibly a very much longer period—elapsed before another theoretical writer furnished the world with a clear and intelligible account of the improvements which had so long been gradually approaching perfection. This writer was Magister Franco—popularly known as Franco of Cologne—whose personal identity has given rise to as much speculation as the originality of Guido's discoveries; the scene of whose labours has been transferred, by dissentient critics, from Cologne to Liège, to Paris, and even to Dortmund; and the date of whose writings has been disputed, to the extent of at least 150 years. Fortunately, the writings themselves are unassailable. We possess them in more than one MS. copy, of unquestionable authenticity; and their substance is too clear to admit of controversy.

Sigebertus Gemblacensis (ob. 1113) speaks of Magister Franco as a Scholastic, distinguished for his religion and knowledge, and celebrated for his probity and his scientific acquirements.* And the same author tells us in another place† that he dedicated a tract, "De Quadratura Circuli," to Herimanus, Archbishop of Cologne—whose death, known to have taken place in 1055, forms an important land-mark in the chronological controversy. Trithemius‡ describes this tract as having been written, with many others,§ by "Franco, Scholasticus Leodiensis Ecclesiæ," who, he tells us, flourished at Liège about the year 1060, during the reign of the Emperor Henry III.; and there is other evidence to prove that a certain Magister Franco—who may well have been the Scholastic of Cologne—held the like office at Liège at least until the year 1083. The Franco of Liège, whom Dr. Burney assumes to have been identical with Franco of Cologne, was equally renowned in his time for his knowledge of mathematics, judicial astrology, alchemy, and magic; and to him the Benedictine authors of the Histoire Littéraire de la France|| attribute the famous tract "De Musica Mensurabili," with the contents of which we shall presently be concerned.

Up to this point there seems to be no difficulty at all in the matter. Both Burney and Hawkins were content to accept the account we have given as genuine; and, since Franco himself begins his Compendium de Discantu with the words "Ego, Franco de Colonia," it surely needs no great stretch of credulity to believe that the author of the tract flourished at Cologne.

But modern criticism has recoiled from the idea that the advanced views set forth in the works of Magister Franco could possibly have been enunciated by a Scholastic writing no more than half-a-century later than Guido.

As early as the year 1828¶ Kiesewetter persuaded himself that the tracts in question were neither written by the Scholastic of Cologne nor by the mathematician of Liège, but by another Franco, who flourished at Paris (?) towards the close of the twelfth century, some 130 or perhaps 150 years later than the learned magician and alchemist. This opinion was subsequently endorsed by De Coussemacker, Von Winterfeld, and Perne; but Fétis refused to accept a conclusion which he believed to be unsupported either by historical or traditional evidence, and openly opposed it in his well-known work. Kiesewetter replied to his strictures in the Allgemeine Musikalische Zeitung; †† and, some time afterwards, enlarged upon his own views in one of his best known works.‡‡ But in the meantime Coussemacker, in his Histoire de l'Harmonie au moyen âge, propounded a theory of his own, suggesting §§ that the tracts were written by yet another Franco, who flourished at Dortmund, in Westphalia, about the year 1190.

We must leave our readers to decide for themselves between the divergent theories propounded by these learned critics. For our own part, we can see but little hope of a satisfactory solution of the question, so far as the personal identity of Magister Franco is concerned; while it seems by no means impossible that the improvements in notation and discant suggested at the beginning of the eleventh century by Guido d'Arezzo may have led, even within the short space of fifty years, to a reform no less trenchant than that set forth in the disputed tracts. Neither Burney nor Hawkins saw any difficulty in accepting this view; and, until some farther light shall be thrown upon the subject, we cannot think that the student runs any serious risk in following their example.

Magister Franco's musical treatises are entitled:—

1. Compendium de Discantu, tribus capitibus.
2. Ars Magistri Franconis de Musica Mensurabili.
3. Magistri Franconis Musica.

One of the earliest known MS. copies of the Compendium de Discantu is preserved in the Bodleian Library at Oxford.* Another early copy was presented to the Vatican Library by Queen Christina of Sweden, and a third was discovered in the Paris Library some fifty years ago by M. Fétis.

A very early copy of the second tract—De Musica Mensurabili—is said to be preserved at Lire, in Normandy. The British Museum possesses a fine MS. copy,† dating from the fifteenth century, and apparently unknown to Burney; and other copies are to be found in the Paris Library, and the Ambrosian Library at Milan.

The only known copy of the tract entitled Magistri Franconis Musica, is in the Bodleian Library,‡ but this has been proved to be simply a transcript of the second tract, De Musica Mensurabili, differing from the other authenticated copies only in its abbreviated title, though the authors of the Histoire Littéraire de la France describe it as a different work.§

The Compendium de Discantu—beginning with the words "Ego, Franco de Colonia"—||—contains the most valuable account of discant immediately after the time of Guido that we possess, and describes a form of part-writing superior in every respect to that taught in the Micrologus, and much more nearly approaching the early counterpoint of the fourteenth century.

Magister Franco divides the concords into three classes. The unison and octave he calls perfect, the major and minor third imperfect, and the fourth and fifth mean. The discords he divides into two classes only. The minor second, the tritone, the augmented fifth, and the major seventh he calls perfect; the major and minor sixth he classes among the imperfect discords; but these, he says, though displeasing, may be tolerated in discant, while the perfect discords are unendurable.

The inclusion of both the major and minor third among the concords indicates a bold revulsion of feeling against the Pythagorean section of the canon, in which the major third is too sharp to be endured, even as a dissonance, but the indulgence was, strangely enough, withheld from the major and minor sixth. It is worthy of remark that the two forms of the third are still denominated as imperfect concords, though we differ from Franco in treating the fifth as a perfect concord and the fourth as a discord.

After thus describing and classifying the various intervals, Magister Franco proceeds to lay down directions for their use; and, among other rules, gives one recommending the judicious intermixture of perfect and imperfect concords,¶ a law which has been in force from the infancy of true counterpoint to the present day.

This part of the subject is again treated in the two last chapters of the tract on Measured Music, and, by combining the information derived from both works, we are able to form a clear idea of the system they set forth. In the exposition of this, nine rules ¶ Kiesewetter disputes the genuineness of these words, and, while declaring it impossible that the Compendium can have been written by the Franco mentioned by Sigebertus Gemblacensis, and Trithemius, says he would rather reject the books as absolutely apocryphal than believe in two Francos of Cologne.

are laid down, and illustrated by various examples,* of one of which the following solution will give a fairly correct idea :—

If this passage be treated as an exercise in two-part counterpoint, of the first order (i.e., note against note), as practised by the great masters of the sixteenth century, and taught in modern times by Fux and Cherubini, it will be found to need two corrections only. The unison at (a) is forbidden, in strict counterpoint, and the hidden octaves at (d e) are equally reprehensible; but there are no other faults in the composition. The cadences are perfectly regular, the parts move strictly according to law, and the consecutive octaves at (b c) break no rule, since the semibreve at (c) begins a new section, in which case the action even of the four cardinal rules is suspended.

We have here, then, in place of the inharmonious Organum taught and practised by Hucbald and Guido, an example which might very well have been written in the time of Okeghem, or Josquin des Prés; and if Franco had made no farther improvement than this upon the work of his predecessors, he must still have been regarded as a very great Reformer indeed. But he did very much more than this, and rendered it possible for others to accomplish far greater things than he himself attempted.

It is evident that the above example, containing notes of different and proportionate duration, could not have been committed to writing, either in the form of notation suggested by Hucbald or that employed by Guido. Franco perceived the difficulty, and in his second tract—"Ars Magistri Franconis de Musica Mensurabili"—provided the materials for a regular Time-table; not in a merely embryotic form, but accompanied by all the appliances needed for its perfect adaptation, not only to the exigencies of the moment, but to those of a much more advanced period in the history of Art.

This tract is divided into six chapters, treating—

1. Of the definitions of the terms used in this tract.
2. Of the figures of simple sounds, or notes not in ligature.
3. Of ligatures, or compound figures.
4. Of rests, and their different forms.
5. Of the different sounds and concords used in Discant.
6. Of Organum and Copula, and their different species.

The essence of the system set forth in the first four chapters may be thus epitomised.

Franco employs notes of four different lengths; the Double-long; the Long; the Breve; and the Semibreve,† which he figures thus—

Each of these notes, when Perfect, was equal to three notes of the next lesser denomination; when Imperfect, to two only. Thus, the Perfect Long was equal to three Breves, and the Perfect Breve to three Semibreves; the Imperfect Long to two Breves, and the Imperfect Breve to two Semibreves. The Semibreve, being the shortest note, could not, of course, be divided; nor could the Double-Long be divided when used in the Tenor of a Cantus firmus. The Perfect and Imperfect forms of the notes depended in great measure upon their position. Two or more notes of the same length following one another were always Perfect; but when a long note was either preceded or followed by a shorter one, it became Imperfect by position, and the short note took one third of its length. The ternary division, we are told, being the most Perfect, took its name from the Holy Trinity, "which is true and pure perfection," and it was for this reason that it was fitly expressed by the circle—the most perfect of geometrical figures; while the duple division was distinguished by the semicircle—still employed in the form in which our nursery-governesses describe it to their pupils as "the letter C, for Common Time"!

In order to meet the requirements of varying forms of rhythm, these notes were grouped together in combinations called Moods.* Of these Moods Franco describes five, though he tells us that other musicians have sometimes used six, or even seven; from which it appears that he did not claim to be their inventor. The first Mood consisted of longs only; the second, of a breve and a long; the third, of a long and two breves; the fourth, of two breves and a long; and the fifth, of a breve and a semibreve. In other words, the first Mood expressed the rhythm of the Spondee, or Molossus; the second, that of the Iambus; the third, that of the Dactyl; the fourth, that of the Anapæst; and the fifth, that of the Trochee.

Provision for other rhythmical effects was made by the Tractulus; a sign, the power of which was exactly that of the modern point or dot; that is to say, it restored the Perfection of a note, which, by position, would have been Imperfect. Another sign, called the Plica, produced a similar effect upon notes in ligature. This was a little tail, either ascending or descending, added to the left side of a long, or the right side of a breve, and answering the purpose of a tied note. The description, however, both of the Tractulus and the Plica is a little ambiguous and less easy to comprehend than some other features of the system.

Franco's chapter on Ligatures is extremely interesting and instructive. It was customary, in ecclesiastical music, to bind together the heads of all such square or lozenge-shaped notes, with or without tails, as were intended to be sung to the same syllable. The forms of the notes were, however, considerably modified in certain cases, and thus gave rise to strange figures, extremely perplexing to the uninitiated, and governed by laws of great complexity. The length of the note was, to a great extent, determined by the presence or absence of a tail, or by its position, ascending or descending on the right

* In the Oxford MS. these examples are very imperfectly written.

† The Duplex longa was afterwards known as the Maxima or Large; but Franco never applied this name to it.

* Morley, and other early English writers on Music, translate the word Modus as Moode when it refers to rhythm, and Mode when it refers to the ecclesiastical scales. For the sake of clearness we have adopted this plan in our present article.

or the left side. One of the greatest difficulties with which the student has to contend in deciphering these ligatures is caused by the changes of custom which took place at different periods, differences so great that two ligatures of different date have frequently to be sung in quite a different way. Franco is the earliest writer who has furnished us with any directions on the subject, and we subjoin a few of his examples, accompanied by their correct solution in modern notes—

The image contains two rows of musical notation. The top row shows six examples of Franco's ligatures, labeled (a) through (f). Each example consists of a horizontal line with various black marks (ligatures) placed on it. Below this row is the word "SOLUTION." followed by another row of six examples, also labeled (a) through (f). These examples show the same ligatures translated into modern musical notation, with notes and stems clearly visible. The bottom row of examples (a) through (f) includes bar lines and some additional markings below the staff.

It is manifest that a method so complicated as this, providing for the motion of parts in notes of different lengths and in all possible relations towards each other, would be incomplete without an equally elaborate system of rests. Franco gives accordingly in his fourth chapter a table of rests, framed upon the principle, which has ever since been followed, of allowing the breadth of an entire space for the rest equivalent to the duration of a breve. The subjoined example shows the most important forms included in his system:—

Perfect Long Rest.	Imperfect Long Rest.	Breve Rest.	Semibreve Rest.	Finis Punctorum, or Double-bar.

Franco also used bars drawn through the stave, not for the purpose of dividing his melodies into measures, but rather with the idea of indicating their division into phrases, and pointing out the places in which it was desirable for the singers to take breath, as in the Roman Gradual and Vespers, and other Office-books written in the so-called Gregorian Notation. His examples are written sometimes upon a stave of four or five lines, and sometimes upon one large stave containing as many lines as are needed for the transcription of the entire score, the number rising, in some examples of four-part writing, as high as twenty. In these cases the fifth line from the top is distinguished by the word Quadruplum, the tenth by Triplum discantus, and the fifteenth by Medius, the remaining five lines being allotted to the Cantus firmus or tenor. In times a little later than the period at which Franco flourished, this method of writing was not at all uncommon; but it is evident that but for the red and yellow lines, for which we are in all probability indebted to Guido d'Arezzo, this method of notation could never have been adopted.

Here, then, within fifty years of the Micrologus, if we are to accept the evidence of Siebertus Gemblacensis and Trithemius, or within from 180 to 200 years, if we prefer the hypothetical conjecture of Kiesewetter, we find the rude Organum of Hucbald and Guido superseded by a style of part-writing, already pure enough to foreshadow the perfect method of counterpoint practised in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries; and the vague semiography of the Enchiridion discarded in favour of a system of notation sufficiently developed to admit of the transcription of the most elaborate work of the Golden Age of Ecclesiastical Music, the Missa

Papa Marcelli not excepted. The reform was complete. And now comes the critical question—To whom are we indebted for it? Did Magister Franco invent these new systems of Notation and Counterpoint? Or did he, as Guido d'Arezzo is said to have done, simply describe the method in common use at the period in which he flourished?

In some few cases Franco himself disclaims the invention. We have seen that he speaks of musicians who used as many as six or seven moods, while he himself only admitted five; and, in his Prologue, he says, "We, therefore, propose to describe this measured music in a compendium in which we refuse not to include things that have been well said by others, but to avoid and correct their errors, and, if anything new has been invented by us, to prove and support it by good reasons."* But, at this point, the internal evidence afforded by the tracts themselves ceases; and, for further information, we must refer to the testimony proffered by writers of later date, many of whom agree in giving Magister Franco as much credit as is ever likely to be claimed for him by more modern critics.

In the Pomerium de Musica Mensurata, written about the year 1283; Marchetto di Padova mentions Magister Franco as the undoubted inventor of the four first characters of measured music—i.e., the Long, the Double-long, the Breve, and the Semibreve.

Joannes de Muris—whose testimony is peculiarly valuable, since he was himself, at one time, very generally believed to have been the inventor of measured music—tells us in a Compendium, bequeathed to the Vatican Library by Christina, Queen of Sweden,† that the figures used in Cantus mensurabilis were invented by Franco.

Franchinus Gafurius ‡ mentions Franco more than once as the inventor of the Time-table. Our own Morley says, "This Franchino is the most ancient of all whose works of practical Musicke have come to my handes"; § and then proceeds to describe his treatment of the Long and the Breve: and Thomas Ravenscroft also tells us that Franchinus (as he erroneously calls him) de Colonia was the inventor of the "four first simple notes of measurable musicke." ||

If the testimony of these early writers be true, Franco must certainly have flourished at a period long anterior to that assigned him by Kiesewetter; and it is evident that, if the tracts attributed to him were written as late as the close of the twelfth century, the system they set forth must rapidly have found its way into distant lands; for the Reading Rota, which is now distinctly proved to have been written in 1226, or only a very few years later, is written on a stave precisely like that employed by Franco for four-part writing in which a great number of lines were needed, and the notation corresponds, with wonderful exactness, to the principle he lays down.

In the face of so much controversy, all that can be said with certainty is that the author of the tracts, whether Franco de Colonia or not, has recorded a reform sufficiently developed to meet the needs of three succeeding centuries at least. But he tells us nothing about form. His examples were mere exercises, without any attempt at design, or any traces of what we now call "Composition." For the invention of that we must reserve our next article.

|| A Brief Discourse of the true Use of characterising the Degrees in Measurable Musicke. (London, 1614.)

WHEN an author calls his preface "Foreword," he at once stirs the latent Philistinism of our nature; and when, in a volume of "Essays of Travel," he includes a paper on the music of Wagner, one has a clear prevision of what is coming. Just as Wilkes said that he was no Wilkesite, Wagner is known to have expressed himself in terms of strong condemnation with regard to the fanatical devotion of the advanced wing of his admirers. To this section Mr. St. Clair Baddeley, the author of "Travel-tide," evidently belongs. In him the music of the master replaces "mundane sensuality" by "celestial desire"; he is the "purer, better, and superior altogether for it," and he loves the Master accordingly. Only in proportion to his love for the Master is the contempt and derision in which he holds all who dare to prefer other masters to his divinity. They are "mosquitoes," "old owls," "shrill little eyases." Of these he speaks in one passage as "circumscribed purists" who had been "cradled at the immortal feet of Mendelssohn . . . nourished by the bones of Bach, and finally . . . kennelled to the solid earlier works of Beethoven." Mr. Baddeley is of opinion that "actual vulgarity is not uncommon among the great old masters, even in their concertos and symphonies." But as for the other—the Wagner music—it "shows ever more refined and poetical as it grows bolder and stronger of celestial wing. It is an irradiant genius, whose instincts are derived from and tend to Perfection. You can listen attentively to nothing after it. Further, it does not touch; it possesses you. You are loyal to it because you cannot help yourself: no merit in you to be constant to it—no cause whatever for pride. When once you recognise it, and look into its deep, indescribable eyes of beauty, and upon its marvellous limbs, it becomes as a part of your being. It holds your identity, transfigured. It seems to include your spiritual desires and utterances. It is your help, your necessity, and your Love." The italics are ours. We have employed them to call attention to two characteristic features of this wild rhapsody—its intolerance and its inconsistency with what Mr. Baddeley says elsewhere about the celestialising quality of Wagner's music. Here he has to fall back on "eyes of beauty" and "marvellous limbs." This hysterical raving will not aid the cause of Wagnerism. And as for Mr. Baddeley's hard words, they will break no bones—certainly not "the bones of Bach."

AN "Indignant Old Gentleman" recently addressed a letter to a suburban paper complaining of the increase of Smoking Concerts. He expresses his surprise that so many vocalists should be found who are willing to exercise their powers under the circumstances, which he thinks "belong more to the pothouse than to the realms of art." The character of the songs sung at these meetings he considers "not elevating," and he asks whether a collection of the words of these songs would show any such poetical aim as can be traced even in the verses written by the despised poets of the past, Haynes Bayly, Fitzball, or Bunn. There was occasional wit, and always an idea in their words, while in the majority of the ditties of the present the guiding principle seems to be idiotic inanity, or covert indecency, or an assumption of jollity finding chief expression in the meaningless words, "Yo ho, my lads," &c. An "Indignant Old Gentleman" may be comforted by the assurance that as artistic vocalisation is no longer the vogue, and although the love for music still exists, it is necessary to provide additional pleasures to make up a balance of delight. The character of the songs of the present may be passed over in silence, inasmuch as it must be admitted that the censure upon them is not altogether undeserved. It may be doubted whether the ghastly character of the so-called "jolly songs" now popular is not less harmful than the Anacreontic songs of the past, of which there were not a few. Social enjoyment has simply taken a new form. We have our "glee dinners," our banquets with "selections of high-class music," and other combinations of music and gustatory and other pleasures. It may, therefore, be found that Concerts of music which may be enjoyed in company with a pipe or cigar, even though they do not tend to the elevation of art, are not necessarily attended with evil to the patrons of this form of indulgence. There is no temporary oblivion from excessive drinking as in days past. There may be, on the whole, a source of congratulation in the fact that we have ceased to be Bacchanalian, even if we have become tobacconalian.

WHEN, many years ago, the Wagner Society was established in the metropolis, we were told by the directors of the enterprise that not the slightest notion of the composer's genius could be formed by the performance of portions of his works without the accessories of action, costume, and scenery; and, strangely enough, Mr. Carl Armbruster, who a short time since gave "Tristan und Isolde" with a piano-forte accompaniment, and now announces a Recital of the "Rheingold" in the same manner, informs us, in an explanatory note, that "the mere pianoforte rendering of the master's complicated score cannot give amateurs an adequate idea of the unsurpassed beauties of the work." As these performances were at first, and still are, addressed to the general public, and not to an exclusive knot of Wagnerians, it seems strange that those who enter the room should be met by, what we cannot but regard as, an artistic protest against the nature of the programme provided. The operas of Wagner which have been already heard in London were not, as we think, in the slightest degree helped into public notice by the rendering of orchestral excerpts from them at the Concerts of the Wagner Society; and for those which have not yet been performed here we should—as Mr. Armbruster almost advises—learn to wait.

A PROFESSOR of Music in America is said to have discovered a method of severing the tendinous band which unites the third and fourth fingers of each hand, without leaving a scar or causing pain in the operation. The generality of medical men declare that the operation is possible. The uncertainty of the process of healing after the use of the knife necessary to liberate the tendinous slip is the chief drawback to the general employment of the process. Our American professor declares that he has succeeded beyond his anticipation. He invites musicians to submit to the operation and thus free their fingers from the drawback which nature has imposed upon them. There can be no doubt but that the fingers would acquire the power of pressing the keys or keyboard of an instrument equally if the fingers could be made equally free. It is doubtful however whether the professor is not boasting too much when he says that the process gives no pain and leaves no scar. Has he read and acted upon the story of the dentist who advertised painless dentistry, and when remonstrated with by a patient whom he was torturing affirmed that his statement was true, as he felt no pain?

OUR coruscating contemporary The Star has fallen foul of Miss Ella Russell for her pronunciation of Italian, à propos of her performance in Bizet's "Pearl Fishers." To bring home her shortcomings more vividly, the writer has been at pains to reproduce a couple of lines of the libretto phonetically as mispronounced—in his opinion—by Miss Ella Russell. They run thus :—

Bentosto una barbarar gentay
Accor minacciantay, furentay and he recommends that "she should at once take a set of lessons in Italian so as to avoid such achievements." Now all we have to say is this, that, excepting the otiose r at the end of barbara, the above effort represents the correct pronunciation pretty nearly as well as phonetic spelling can be expected to in our capricious tongue. What more does our scintillating friend want? Can it be that his complaint is really a covert plea on behalf of the lingua Toscana in bocca Hibernica?

A CORRESPONDENT writes to us as follows: "Can you suggest any remedy for the grievous torment to which I am subjected by the persistent consumption of peppermint lozenges to which my next neighbour but one at the Richter Concerts is addicted? When I travel third class or in an omnibus I lay my account accordingly, and do not complain. But in the stalls at St. James's Hall it is really rather too bad to be persecuted in this fashion. The other night my enjoyment of at least one half of the Concert was almost annihilated by this 'most baleful smell.' What am I to do? I scorn to retaliate in like manner. Besides, stink-pots are unfair in war." It seems to us that our much injured correspondent could not do better than advertise his feelings in the agony column of the Times.

FACTS, RUMOURS, AND REMARKS.

THE Mail Times, a journal published in the city of Des Moines, has a genius on its staff. He was sent to "do" a Concert given by Mrs. Alice Shaw, the whistling lady, and this is how he did it: "All beholders held their breaths as the broad expanse of snowy, decollated bosom heaved gently, the handsome head and face uplifted, the rich, ruby lips puckered kissably, and a soft, sweet, silvery trill shot forth, at once electrifying the audience and suggesting the presence of an impossible cultured canary. The selection was Arditi's rippling, tuneful 'Il Bacio' Waltz, always captivating, and dually so under this novel circumstance. The introductory trill lingered for a moment, as if loth to quit the roseate vase, thence darted away in liquidish glee, like a bird itself, lofty and rapturously, thence low and adagio, like the sighing of a twilight zephyr in romantic June. Fortissimo, crescendo, and pianissimo, Mrs. Shaw's lovely throat pulsed like the nightingale's, and the notes came forth in all the perfection of tone and technique." This flower of a critic should no longer waste his sweetness on the comparatively desert air of Des Moines. How he would brighten the dull, decorous columns of an English sheet!

THE Guild of Organists is in trouble; the late Secretary has been dismissed, a new one appointed, and the discarded official has taken up a position of antagonism. We cannot pretend to much sympathy with the Guild, for a reason with which they themselves supply us. In a circular just issued they say: "That gentleman (the late Secretary) carried on the entire correspondence of the Guild, and the books and property, including the lists of Fellows, Members, and Associates, were kept at his private residence at Staines, some twenty miles from London. The only means the Council had of knowing the Guild's business was at the monthly meeting of the Council, when the late Secretary called it together, and disclosed what business he, in his own private judgment, considered necessary. It will therefore be seen that Mr. Lewis was the sole means of communication between the Council, the Members, and the outside world." We will only add that an organisation which has permitted its business to be carried on in this manner deserves to go through a time of penance.

THE French Society of Musical Composers met recently to hear Mr. Laurent de Rille discourse upon the theories of Richard Wagner. One of the speaker's arguments struck at the very foundation of Germany's "new art." It is summarised in Le Ménestrel as thus: "The author of 'Lohengrin' believed that, in order to create among his countrymen the emotion and enthusiasm which Æschylus called forth in the Athenian Theatre, it sufficed to call up the amorous and heroic fictions of German mythology, and to dramatise them in gigantic trilogies. Wagner forgot to remember that the facts and characters brought into the theatre by Æschylus figured in the history of his country, that his heroes were men of flesh and blood, and that the divinities to whom he gave life and speech belonged to the national faith, while, in Wagner's case, the absence of the human element renders the spectator indifferent to the joys and sorrows of his personages." The same thing has been said before.

MR. CHARLES E. PRATT, the American pianist, has received the following letter: "Respected Sir,—My daughter left to me the commission to address to you a question respecting a polka and a mazurka which the prima donna, Ilma di Murska, composed, and to send you a rose which Di Murska, on her deathbed, held in her hands and intended for you. Before I send the rose, I ask myself the question whether, considering the reply to the above wish, you will accept the rose, and therefore beg you kindly to reply, under the following address, to Joseph Eder, General Auditor, 1, Volksgartenstrasse, Vienna." Mr. and Mrs. Pratt, it appears, gave poor Di Murska shelter in their home when all her fair weather friends "passed by on the other side," and it was they who enabled her to return to Europe. Di Murska promised to Mr. and Mrs. Pratt the revelation of an often talked of mystery in her career, but she put it off till too late.

CHICAGO has been interesting itself lately on the proper pronunciation of Wagner's name. Written to on the matter, the editor of the Chicago Daily News replied that the name is pronounced in four ways. The populace north of Chicago Avenue say Vogner; to the west of Ashland Avenue they call the composer Vagner; south of Twelfth Street the preference is for Wogner, while the Browning Society and sixty per cent. of the West side population hold by plain Wagner. We learn further that, at the Chicago Opera-house, they say Vagner on Monday and Tuesday; Vogner, on Wednesday and Thursday; Wogner, on Friday; "and on Saturday night (when Beethoven or some other lesser star is suffered to shine) one hears nothing but Wagner." It is satisfactory to know that the Mayor and Board of Trade have decided upon Vagner as the proper pronunciation.

THE farewell of Mr. Gericke as Conductor of the Boston Symphony Concerts led to quite a demonstration. We read in the Evening Traveller that, when the final Concert had ended—"throats were loosed, and proud Boston, in frantic thirds, fifths, ninths, and all sorts, passed its 'well done, good and faithful Gericke' towards the platform where the pleased Conductor bowed his acknowledgments. It was an exceptional scene." If Boston is pleased, well and good, but let us hope that the new Conductor (specially imported from Germany) will be a little more cosmopolitan. Under Gericke, of seventy-four compositions played in 1886, fifty-nine were German; in 1887, out of seventy-two, the German works were fifty-four; while in 1888 they were fifty-six out of seventy-four. In the three years but thirteen American works were given, while the English school was represented by a miserable two.

At the recent Bal des Artistes, which took place at the Opéra in Paris, we are told that M. Coquelin led off a celebrated Waltz "with majestic mien and mermaid-like convolutions, finishing with a swim in the air"; that the "Infernal Quadrille" was danced "with diabolical entrain," and that Coquelin broke his bow, and finally his violin, on the head of a "demoniacal dancer." Considering that the orchestra on this occasion was conducted by Madame Sarah Bernhardt, it will be seen that, whatever might be thought of the character of the entertainment, the artistic celebrity of the actors in it could not be questioned.

A PROFESSIONAL correspondent sends us a story which has a moral. A lady comes to a teacher for pianoforte lessons, although she herself has thirty-two pupils. The teacher soon finds her out as utterly incompetent, and puts her to five-finger exercises. Then the lady leaves the teacher and goes to an Organ School, where, after trial, she is put to five-finger exercises with separate hands. All this time, presumably, she gives lessons to those unhappy pupils. Moral—something should be done to organise the profession of music-teaching, so that the public may know who are qualified and who are not.

A CORRESPONDENT writes: "The recent announcement, in a provincial Concert programme, of an arrangement for violin and pianoforte of Weber's 'Invertation to the Waltz' caused some dismay and not a little curiosity among the audience. Considerable disappointment was expressed when the violinist played in the orthodox position of feet downwards. Various surmises were ventured as to the acceptability of this new departure in ball-room deportment, and much uneasiness was allayed when it was explained that the offending word was due to a printer's freak."

MUSICIANS and others interested in the matter of the appointment of a successor in the Professorial Chair at Oxford have been waiting with some curiosity, not to say anxiety, for the decision of the University. If it is determined that the future Professor of Music shall be resident, there is no doubt as to the person who is best fitted to fill the Chair.

PEOPLE are inclined to be merry at the expense of their forefathers when they hear that in the early days of Italian Opera amongst us the performers sang, each man and woman, in his or her own tongue. Are we much more conscious of propriety in these days? At New York, last season, Föhstrom and Perotti used the Italian language in "Faust," while the other artists employed German. At Brussels, also, Materna sang the "Walküre" in German to the French of everybody else. Yet in neither case did the audience seem to care!

MR. CARL ARMBRUSTER is bent upon performing (4th and 7th inst.) another Wagnerian opera, with pianoforte accompaniment. For this he makes a sort of oblique excuse, urging that he has "consented to undertake these Recitals in deference to the wishes of numerous amateurs, who are anxious to become acquainted with the work, be it even with only a pianoforte accompaniment." For the amateurs something may be pleaded—they probably know no better, but Mr. Armbruster is a professor, and should lead them in the right way.

At the last of the Berlin Philharmonic Concerts for the present season, the performance of the pianoforte part of Brahms's Concerto in D minor by Hans von Bülow, to the composer's conducting, was an event of much interest; but we regret to find that the enthusiasm of the audience on this occasion fully equalled, if not exceeded, by that aroused by the circumstance of Bülow's "presiding at the big drum" during the rendering of Brahms's "Academical" Overture.

WHEN the Washington Centenary was celebrated in New York the other day, the Metropolitan Opera House was decorated with a "Triumph of Wagner." This naturally provoked reprisals, and a writer in the American Musician urged: "The proper place in the parade for the 'Triumph of Wagner' would have been between King Gambrinus and the display of the emblems of the produce dealers. With lager in front and wüerst behind, the great Richard would indeed be honoured."

MESSRS. WEBB, of the Montpellier Gardens, Cheltenham, have an idea of the taste of Gloucester which, we hope, is more curious than correct. They announced the other day two Concerts by the Anglo-Hungarian Band, and made a special feature of the fact that the performers "play entirely by ear and without any music scores whatever." After this, inability to play from notes may become a merit, and itinerant examiners may go round the country awarding certificates for proficiency in ignorance.

ON August 1 an examination for four choral studentships will be held at St. John's College, Cambridge. The value of each is £40, and the duties are to attend choir rehearsals and take part in the musical services of the College Chapel. Candidates will be examined in Euripides, Livy, Arithmetic, Algebra, and Euclid (first three books). They will also be required to pass the University Examinations for B.A. Information may be obtained of the Organist, Dr. George Garrett.

MR. SAMSON FOX is a well-known business man of Leeds, but he was not suspected, till lately, of a warm desire for the good of musical education. Underneath an indifferent exterior, as now appears, burned the fires of self-sacrificing amateurism, and Mr. Samson Fox lately handed over a cheque value £45,000—the sum required for a new building in which to accommodate the Royal College of Music. That institution is to be congratulated, and Mr. Fox will, no doubt, have his reward.

WE read in a contemporary that "an open competition is announced in the Italian papers for a professor of singing at the Conservatory of Naples." We are curious to know how professors will compete with each other for the situation, seeing that teaching, and not singing, qualifications are to be tested. As the salary offered, however, is £90 a year, it may be imagined that the struggle for the post will not be unduly intense.

WE have often spoken of the absurdity of overloading music with fanciful Italian directions as to how it is to be played; but for a piece of good-humoured satire on the subject we commend the following (written by a well known critic, now passed away) which occurs in a review upon a pretentious pianoforte composition: "The composer was quite right to place the words con dolore under this passage, for it is precisely here that he comes to grief."

A CORRESPONDENT has written to us complaining that a Fantasia by Glinka figured in a Richter programme next to the Good Friday music of "Parsifal." Care should, undoubtedly, be taken in the association of pieces at a miscellaneous Concert, but we fear that the Wagner enthusiasts will never be satisfied until their idol has a temple wholly to himself. That arrangement would probably be regarded as a blessing all round.

MISS HOPE GLENN's wedding, on the 16th ult., was a pretty function, although the fair bride dispensed with a train of maids. Sir Arthur Sullivan acted "father in church" with due gravity, and Madame Nordica, Miss Hilda Wilson, and others, with Mr. F. Cliffe at the organ, made some excellent music. We had almost forgotten Mr. Richard Heerd, the bridegroom; but then who does remember the bridegroom on such occasions?

MR. J. BELL, author of a "Catechism of History of Musicians," has an orthography of his own, or the printer has played him false. The following words occur in his book: Hadyn, Leipsig, Palestrini, Madraglists, Chorole, Sabastian, Hallelajah, Beethovan, Fideleo, Fra Dravolo, Trovotore, Parisfal, Triston, Semeremade, Steggel, Eggito, &c. It has often been contended that "spelling" is unduly neglected in our schools.

A CHEQUE for £785 is a very substantial gift to a man on his silver wedding day, and Mr. Lansdowne Cottell may be congratulated upon receiving it. That gentleman seems to have discovered that the royal road to the paradise of testimonials lies through the foundations of a "Conservatoire." There is one drawback—Mr. Cottell's presents are given to him publicly, and the ordeal must be a painful one to modest merit.

IN face of the exceptional success which has always attended the performance of Bizet's "Carmen," we cannot but feel surprise at Mr. Augustus Harris's announcement to his subscribers and the public that "Les Pêcheurs de Perles" is the composer's "masterwork." But what, after all, is a poor manager to do when the publisher will not allow one of these operas to be performed without the other?

ARTISTS who may feel aggrieved at the custom, adopted in certain papers, of bestowing more attention upon their dress and ornaments than upon their performance, should read the following paragraph, from a critique upon a recent fashionable musical assembly:—"Mrs. —'s jewels were much admired, and she also brought her daughters." The italics are ours.

CONSIDERING how frequently we have drawn attention to the miserable pittance offered to educated organists, we think it but fair to refer to an advertisement for an Organist and Choirmaster, at a salary of £80 a year, who will have a fine instrument to play upon, and a "Choir of Ladies and Gentlemen" to instruct. It is to be hoped that this announcement may be accepted as a healthy sign of the times.

RUSSIAN music will be heard in Paris during the Exhibition season. On the 22nd and 29th inst. selections will be played by an orchestra of one hundred performers, under the direction of Mr. Rimsky-Korsakow. The composers represented in the programmes are Glinka, Borodine, Tschaikowsky, Rimsky-Korsakow, Balakiren, Cui, Liadow, Dargomijski, and Glazounow.

WRITING of the artistic qualifications of the late Carl Rosa, a contemporary speaks of him as the only impresario before the public "who can boast any real technical training in music at all." Will Mr. Mapleson—who tells us that he was in early life a student at the Royal Academy of Music, and that he afterwards sang solo parts in operas—endorse this statement?

THE Association of Tonic Sol-fa Choirs will produce at the Crystal Palace, on the 29th inst., an unpublished fugue by Mendelssohn, said to have been composed as the closing number of "Athalie." That the movement ever had anything to do with "Athalie," even in the composer's intention, we take leave to doubt, but that consideration will not affect its intrinsic value as an example of the master's counterpoint.

MR. FREDERIC COWEN's commission to write a Grand Opera for the Carl Rosa Opera Company, which was not actually settled at the time of the late Mr. Carl Rosa's death, has now been formally ratified by the new managing directorate of the Company, and Mr. Cowen will at once enter upon his task in conjunction with Mr. Joseph Bennett, by whom the libretto has been undertaken.

IN a notice of Madame Frickenhaus's Concert, on the 4th ult., a weekly contemporary tells us that "her programme of Beethoven's Sonata in E (Op. 109) was marked by especial refinement and intelligence." Such a work undoubtedly merits this eulogy, if well rendered; but must not the Concert have been unusually short?

WHEN a critic, after commenting upon the performance of several pieces in a classical instrumental Chamber Concert, speaks of the introduction of a vocal piece as "an agreeable relief," does he not really mean that you may have too much of a good thing; and that, but for this timely aid, he would have had it?

WE hear that a "London jobber" has recently given Messrs. Lyon and Healy, of Chicago, an order for 1,706 banjos, to be supplied immediately. This is an undoubted proof of the demand for the instruments; but again we ask—with a fair knowledge of metropolitan musical performances—who plays upon them?

"A MAN'S foes shall be those of his own household." Here is Mr. Jerome Hopkins in London, and his countrymen at home are sending him presents of sneers, such as: "If he can only be induced to remain where he is appreciated, the American pulse will leap for joy." This is unkind. Why cannot they let the poor man alone?

It is said that the German Emperor dined the other day with Count Waldersee. They had spring soup with port wine. This was followed by "Schinken in Rheinwein gedämpft"; then came hot lobsters and butter, and Roman punch. All the while the band was playing Wagner's music. Some concern has been felt for the health of host and guest.

THE following "par." is going round the American press: "Minnie Hauk made a disastrous failure in Posen recently. While singing 'Carmen' the audience rose en masse and hissed the American star until she left the stage." If this be a lie, as we believe, it is a gross slander, and an authoritative contradiction should crush it out of existence.

TO-MORROW, at Wiesbaden, will be unveiled a monument to the late Franz Abt. A number of musical societies from various parts of Germany will perform works by the deceased composer. It is noteworthy that while attempts at setting up memorials of greater musicians have lately failed, that in honour of Abt has succeeded.

IN connection with the Concerts given at the Westminster Town Hall by the People's Concert Society, it is stated that "one poor man never failed to come all the way from Lavender Hill to Westminster all the winter." The Society could have no better argument than this person, whose existence is at once a reward and an incentive.

A CONTEMPORARY has discovered a new ailment, which he styles the "benefit habit": "Some individuals have what may be called the benefit habit. When this once takes hold of a man it is worse than drink. The unfortunate victim would not protest if he had a 'testimonial' every hour."

THE Palestrina Choir of New York appears to entertain some curious notions as to the way in which programmes should be made up. At a recent Concert Mr. A. J. Caldicott's "Where are you going to, my pretty maid?" was sung, and followed by—the "Missa Papæ Marcelli"! What next?

AMERICAN papers state that Mr. Charles Gounod has signed an engagement to visit the United States and conduct seventy-five Concerts of his own music. This is a formidable task for a man of the French composer's age, and it will be better to take up an attitude of doubt concerning the whole story.

MISS CLARA LOUISE KELLOGG is one of the artists who never say die. Having recently failed to win success with an opera company she has now gone forth with a band of concert-singers. Miss Kellogg, who sang in London more than twenty years ago, has surely earned a rest.

A PARAGRAPH in our Glasgow correspondence illustrates the saying "Wheresoever the carcase is, there will the eagles be gathered together." The carcase in this case is £46,000, profit of the recent Exhibition, and one of the eagles is music, which puts in a claim for a share. We wish music may get it.

MR. STANTON, director of the Metropolitan Opera House in New York, has been in some way decorated by the German Government for his services to Wagnerian art. A contemporary suggests, as an additional honour, that he be styled "Remover of Valueless Vocalists from the German Empire."

THE concertina may not be played in the streets of St. Alban's; nor, for that matter, may any "noisy instrument." So the city bye-laws declare, and so the Queen's Bench has decided. St. Alban's under these circumstances should be a good place for the speculative builder.

CROUCH, the composer of "Kathleen Mavourneen," appears still to be in the land of the living. We read that not long ago he sang his song at a Concert given in Portland (Maine), showing the vigour of fifty at the age of eighty.

AMERICAN musical critics are beginning to be read in England. Mr. Krehbiel's annual volume on music in New York has been with us some time, and now comes Mr. Henry T. Finck's volume of essays on Chopin and others. We extend to it a cordial welcome.

DR. VON BÜLOW is said to have left America with some 13,000 dollars in his pocket, after earning 12,000 for the speculators who engaged him. The Doctor should be in high spirits, especially in view of another trip next year.

THE Chicago Apollo Club has taken a laudable step in the interest of working people. On the evening following each Subscription Concert the programme will henceforth be repeated for the benefit of the poorer classes—tickets from 5 to 25 cents.

THE Echo of the 16th ult. recommended Dr. Stainer as Professor at Oxford, and spoke of him as "living in one of the new houses opening out of Paternoster Row." Our contemporary should wake up. Sir John Stainer left London for Oxford about a year ago.

HONOUR to the Bristol Orpheus Glee Society for offering to take the place of the crusty Viennese, and singing in St. James's Hall on Tuesday last for the Hospital Saturday Fund. The Western City scores over this.

THE Americans are "at it again." Not content with buying up our choice books, they are now on the run after our historic instruments, and the famous Alard "Strad." is said to be in danger of crossing the Atlantic. The "almighty" dollar, indeed!

"It is an ill wind," &c. The inability of Sir Arthur Sullivan to prepare a new work for the Leeds Festival left a blank in the programme which Professor Stanford will exactly fill up with his setting of Tennyson's "Voyage of Maeldune." Success to it.

MR. F. H. COWEN is about to begin the composition of a Cantata intended for choral societies of comparatively limited means. The libretto will be written by Mr. Joseph Bennett.

HERE is Dr. von Bülow's (reported) opinion of a tenor: "I do not think a tenor is a man; he is an illness."

WE are threatened with the American whistling lady again. It is time to put some restriction upon free imports.

WE regret to hear that Mr. Edward Scovel has lost his voice, consequent upon a severe cold. There remains a hope that rest and care may regain it.

A WELCOME home to Madame Albani and Mr. Ernest Gye, who arrived from America on the 20th ult., healthy in person and pocket.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

THIS Society gave two Concerts during the month of May, the first taking place in St. James's Hall on the 9th ult. The programme contained nothing new, unless an early Symphony by Haydn, said never before to have been played in this country, can be so-called. The little work, scored for strings, oboes, and horns only, is interesting historically, and by no means without charm intrinsically. This may especially be said of the very graceful slow movement, which was heard with much pleasure. At the same time, the chief value of the Symphony lies in its illustration of a primitive stage in the development of the form to which it belongs. With it was given an example of the most modern phase—namely, Mr. Cowen's Symphony in F (No. 5). This, under the composer's direction, had an able rendering, but failed to commend itself as an advance upon its sisters, the "Scandinavian" and the "Welsh." Other works in the programme were the Overture to "Prometheus" and Beethoven's Violin Concerto; the last-named serving for the début of the Belgian violinist, Mr. Ysaÿe, whose success in gaining the applause of his audience we now have to record. Mr. Ysaÿe is essentially a virtuoso, and does not hesitate to appear in that character even when engaged upon a classical work. Some of his tours de force are really astonishing, and worthy of all possible admiration in their proper place. But we may be allowed to doubt whether they should be made in connection with Beethoven's Concerto. Mr. Ysaÿe more legitimately won the approval of his audience in Saint-Saëns's Rondo Capriccioso, where he was quite at home.

The second May Concert (fifth of the series) took place on the 23rd, when Mr. Ysaÿe, "in consequence of his enormous success," appeared a second time, playing, on this occasion, Mendelssohn's Concerto, a Caprice by Paganini, and a Polonaise by Wieniawski. The effect he produced was the same as before, and due to the same means; the Philharmonic audience consenting to overlook whatever was not in the severest taste, out of regard for the artist's really remarkable skill. Miss Janotha played a second Concerto—Beethoven's in G—for pianoforte and orchestra, and Mr. Carl Meyer, of Cologne, sang selections from the vocal music of Wagner and Loewe; but the greatest interest of the Concert gathered around the performance of a new Symphony in C, the work of Dr. Hubert Parry. This composition, written in 1887 and since extensively revised, is scored for a so-called small orchestra; that is to say, for an orchestra without trombones, tuba, big drum, or other of the more formidable noise-producers now in general use. Dr. Parry thus limited himself to the means with which Mozart worked so many of his wonders, and it must be said that he has used them with such admirable effect that, listening to the Symphony, we are conscious of nothing wanting. The ensemble is entirely satisfying, and affords another proof that a real composer can afford to do without uproar. The work contains the usual number of movements, all of which are strictly in classic form; the last, it should be stated, being an air with twelve variations and an extended Coda. It was suggested in the analytical remarks that the new production should be styled the "English" Symphony. Public opinion has accepted the term, which, indeed, accurately suggests the prevailing character of the themes employed. The English spirit of the work is a very interesting feature. It shows that our national music has a character into the spirit of which composers to the manner born can so far enter that their works shall have a distinctly English cachet. This is a great point gained, and we trust that the course pioneered by Dr. Parry, as regards symphonic music, will recommend itself to others. The constructive skill and knowledge of effect shown in the new work are of the highest order, while it may be said that a strong feeling for absolute beauty reigns throughout each movement. All this the audience were quick to perceive, and, at the close of the performance, which was conducted by the composer, Dr. Parry received the heartiest congratulations upon a notable achievement.

THE RICHTER CONCERTS.

THE current season of these performances, which commenced on Monday, the 6th ult., promises to be one of the most uneventful, and at the same time one of the most successful in a material sense, since the enterprise was started ten years ago. The first programme included Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony, which was magnificently played, and the Preludes to "Die Meistersinger" and "Parsifal." One of the best performances of the evening was that of Brahms's Variations on a theme by Haydn. Between the "Parsifal" Prelude and the Symphony Liszt's Rhapsody in D (No. 2) was given.

The programme of the second Concert was more varied, but there was a falling off in the attendance. A beautiful rendering was given of Mozart's Symphony in D, sometimes known as the "Prague" Symphony, because it was composed in that city in 1786 after the production of "Le Nozze di Figaro." Beethoven's "Leonora" Overture (No. 3) and the Good Friday music from "Parsifal" were also splendidly interpreted, but we have heard Schumann's Symphony in B flat to greater advantage.

The proximity of date to that of Wagner's birthday (the 22nd ult.) afforded an excuse for forming the programme of the third Concert entirely of his music, and a more successful scheme for drawing people to St. James's Hall was never framed. The demand for seats was unprecedented, and hundreds were disappointed. There is no reason to linger on what was done, as most of the pieces have been so often repeated that it is surprising the public are not heartily tired of them. This remark applies to the Overture to "The Flying Dutchman," the "Siegfried" Idyl, the Trauermarsch from "Götterdämmerung," the Prelude to the third act of "Die Meistersinger," the Prelude and close to "Tristan und Isolde," and the "Walkürenritt." With these hackneyed pieces was associated the love duet from "Die Walküre," which was sung by Miss Anna Williams and Mr. Edward Lloyd.

At the fourth Concert Wagner was again prominent, only two pieces in the programme being by other composers—namely, Mendelssohn's Overture to "Athalia" and Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony. The former was not by any means well played, the brass being permitted to overpower the strings to an extent certainly not contemplated by Mendelssohn. Mr. Lloyd was announced to sing Lohengrin's "Farewell to Elsa," and the Schmiedlieder from the first act of "Siegfried," but he was too hoarse to appear, and four pieces from the previous Monday's selection were repeated.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

MR. AUGUSTUS HARRIS opened Covent Garden Theatre for a second season of Italian opera on Saturday, the 18th ult., when Bizet's "Pearl Fishers" was produced for the first time under his management. Why this weak and unequal work—a product of the composer's unformed condition—was chosen for an occasion so conspicuous is, perhaps, known only to those behind the scenes. Rumour states that the Paris publishers would not sanction the use of "Carmen" apart from its elder sister, and that to secure the greater Mr. Harris was constrained to play the lesser. This was hard upon him, for though the opera contains some unquestionably beautiful numbers, no one took more than a languid interest in it. The performance was much better than that given by Mr. Mapleson on the same stage in 1887, and all that a careful and liberal mise-en-scène could do for the work was certainly done. Miss Ella Russell played the very unsatisfactory heroine fairly well; Mr. F. d'Andrade, on his part, doing full justice to the unhappy lover, who dies that the woman he adores might live, even in the arms of a rival. His performance was much the most impressive of all; Mr. Talazac, the tenor of the Paris Opéra Comique, being "nowhere" by comparison. Sooth to say, Mr. Talazac was a failure. He has grown too stout for tenor parts, and his voice proved entirely inadequate to the area of the house. Mr. Mancinelli, who conducted, may be congratulated upon the excellent work done by his chorus and orchestra.

The opera on the 20th ult. was "Faust," with Miss Macintyre as Marguerite—a character for which she is, as yet, hardly prepared; Madame Scalchi as Siebel, Mr. Castelmarty as Mephistopheles, Mr. Winogradow as Valentine, and Mr. Montariol as Faust. Comment may be limited to favourable mention of Mr. Winogradow, the young Russian baritone, whom Mr. Harris so promptly engaged after hearing him in Rubinstein's "Demon" at the Jodrell Theatre. Very nervous at first, Mr. Winogradow made a distinct success in Valentine's death scene, where he acted and sang very finely, obtaining great applause. The new tenor, Mr. Montariol, will be a useful artist, but we must not look to him for a conflagration of the Thames.

"Carmen," played on the 21st ult., with Madame Marie Roze in the title-role, served for the début of a new tenor, Mr. A. d'Andrade, brother to the baritone. Mr. d'Andrade has a light voice, scarcely weighty enough for so large a house, but he made a favourable impression, most of all by his intelligent and spirited acting. Mr. F. d'Andrade was an admirable Escamillo, and Miss Macintyre sang the charming music of the peasant maiden very nicely indeed. Mr. Arditi conducted; everybody being glad to see the veteran wielding the bâton once more.

"La Traviata," performed on the 23rd ult., may be dismissed with a few words. Miss Ella Russell played Violetta out of the ineffective Alfredo of Mr. Talazac, who seems wholly out of place on the Covent Garden stage. The success of the evening went to Mr. F. d'Andrade, in the part of the heavy father, Germont père. Mr. Randegger conducted.

"Aida," on the 25th ult., drew a full house, and the audience were rewarded by an effective performance, though not the best conceivable. Madame Valda was a tolerably efficient heroine, Madame Schalchi a very melodramatic Princess, acting with abundant physical effort, and painfully forcing her lower notes; Mr. A. d'Andrade made progress in public favour as Radamès, and his brother was a capital Amonasro. The choral and orchestral music went so well that, taken with a superb mise-en-scène, it made up for any shortcomings in the principal parts.

On the 28th ult. Boito's "Mefistofele" was revived, too late for present notice.

THE BACH CHOIR.

WE believe it was the intention of this zealous body of amateurs to conclude its recent season with a performance of Beethoven's great Mass in D, but the design was abandoned and Dr. Hubert Parry's Oratorio "Judith" was substituted. The change was, no doubt, dictated by expediency and discretion, and no one was likely to quarrel with it, as the merits of "Judith" are sufficient to justify any choral society in selecting it for performance. The performance at St. James's Hall, on the 4th ult., was noteworthy for good intentions, and also in some measure for achievement. The choir attended in larger numbers than usual, and, in fact, overflowed into the balcony. The opening chorus of the Moloch worshippers was effectively rendered, and from time to time, later in the work, Dr. Parry's massive writing was interpreted with the power necessary for the full realisation of the composer's designs; but there was here and there some uncertainty, as if the singers had not gained the requisite confidence for the fulfilment of the arduous duties required of them. It is, however, unnecessary to comment severely upon the defects of the choir. Professor Stanford conducted the performance, with an evident desire to present the work of his brother composer in the best light. Praise wholly unqualified is due to the principal vocalists. Miss Anna Williams and Mr. Lloyd resumed the parts which they created at the Birmingham Festival, Miss Lena Little displayed her usual earnestness and intelligence in the contralto music, and Mr. Watkin Mills, in the three bass parts, showed once more the rapid strides he is making towards the highest position in his profession; nor should we omit reference to Mr. Stedman's Choir Boys (Masters Lionel Wynne and Frank Lambert), who joined Miss Little in the Trio between the Queen and her children. The audience was not only unusually large, but it was enthusiastic, and Dr. Parry was recalled at the end of the first part, and again at the conclusion of the performance.

MR. SARASATE'S CONCERTS.

As years go by, the popularity of the eminent Spanish artist and virtuoso, Mr. Sarasate, seems to increase rather than diminish, and the series of Concerts commenced on the 11th ult. at St. James's Hall has so far been attended by very large audiences. It would be superfluous to speak in detail of the qualities which have given this remarkable violinist a unique position in the esteem of the public, nor is it necessary to dwell at length upon his first and second programmes, as the works he played and his manner of rendering them are sufficiently well known. Max Bruch's Concerto in D minor (Op. 44), which was in the programme of the opening Concert, may be regarded as an exception, as it is but rarely heard, and is not likely to become popular. The long Adagio, which stands in place of an ordinary first movement, is very dreary, and it is not until the spirited Finale that the music becomes really effective. The enthusiastic applause was evoked wholly by the masterly playing of Mr. Sarasate, who retains in full his beautiful, silvery tone, his perfect intonation, which is in itself very fascinating, and his wonderful command over the resources of his instrument. The other violin solos on this occasion were a piece by Raff, "La Fée d'Amour," and the performer's Fantasia on airs from "Carmen," both of which served to display his technical skill to the utmost advantage. Under Mr. W. G. Cusins, the orchestra gave a performance of Liszt's Symphonic Poem, "Tasso, lamento e trionfo," and Mendelssohn's Overture to "Athalie."

The crowd in St. James's Hall on the following Saturday was in part drawn together, doubtless, by the announcement that Mr. Sarasate would play Mendelssohn's Concerto, in the performance of which he excels, though musicians may not agree with the pace at which he takes the Finale. In every other respect his interpretation of the work is unexceptionable, and a double recall testified to the delight of the audience on the present occasion. Emile Bernard's Concerto in G, for which the Spanish artist appears to have a special liking, was also beautifully played, though we cannot say that its merits are commensurate with his partiality for the work. The list of solos was completed by the Concert-giver's very clever "Muiñeira," a Spanish song with variations. The orchestral pieces were Svendsen's "Rhapsodie Norvégienne" (No. 3) and the Overture to "Fidelio."

The present series is to include two Chamber Concerts, or, more strictly speaking, performances of music for pianoforte and violin, the first of which took place on the 25th ult. The programme, if somewhat peculiar, was certainly unhackneyed, Schubert's Rondeau Brillant in B minor (Op. 70) being the only familiar work. Four of Dvorák's Slavonic Dances, which Mr. Sarasate plays with wonderful spirit, were welcome on their own account, and so, as a novelty, was Raff's Sonata in A (Op. 78), though it is not one of the composer's strongest efforts, being trivial and not much above the level of salon music. It is difficult to understand why the Spanish violinist should have selected Weber's Duo Concertant in E flat, for pianoforte and clarinet, for adaptation. Music written for the last-named instrument cannot be accurately rendered on the violin, for the compass is different, and some of Weber's most effective passages were utterly spoilt by transposition. The pianist was Madame Berthe Marx, this being her first appearance in England. She has a somewhat cold and passionless style, but her mechanism is excellent, and she was heard to greater advantage in the concerted works than in Chopin's Barcarolle in F sharp, the spirit of which she had not mastered.

SIR CHARLES HALLÉ'S CONCERTS.

ON Friday, the 10th ult., another series of these interesting and instructive performances—by common consent styled the summer "Pops."—was commenced in St. James's Hall. To those who thirst for novelties the present series cannot fail to prove exceptionally attractive, for Sir Charles Hallé announces a large number of works for the first time. Prominent among these are three Quartets of Cherubini, written in the years 1835-7, but only just published. Three others by the Italian master are well known to musicians and are much admired, though they are rarely heard in public. Why the present set was not given to the world at the time of their composition it is impossible to say. The first of the three, in the key of E, was presented on the date above-mentioned, and proved to be a work of considerable value. The first movement is only noteworthy for the composer's usual elegance and chasteness of expression, but in the succeeding Larghetto he makes his instruments converse with one another in a humorous and almost eccentric manner. The close of the movement with the violoncello solo is little short of grotesque. At a first hearing the Scherzo was somewhat difficult to follow on account of its want of unity, but the Finale is admirable, the subjects being effective and well contrasted, and the general structure full of musicianlike touches. The Quartet was excellently interpreted by Madame Néruda and Messrs. Ries, Straus, and Franz Néruda, and obtained a cordial reception. It is unnecessary to dwell on the remainder of the programme. It included Dvorák's beautiful Quintet in A (Op. 81), now familiar by frequent repetition; Beethoven's Sonata in G, for pianoforte and violin (Op. 96), and Schubert's Impromptus, Nos. 1 and 4, both in F minor, from Op. 142.

At the second Concert, on the following Friday, the novelty was a Pianoforte Trio in E flat, by Martucci, an Italian pianist and composer, whose music is little known in this country, though the present work is his Op. 62. His efforts, however, mainly consist of pianoforte pieces, and as he is only thirty-three years of age it is fair to anticipate that his best works are still to come. His Trio is chiefly remarkable for its excessive length and the general absence of Italian expression. Signor Martucci is evidently well acquainted with the classical masters of Germany, and probably also with their modern successors. He writes fluently and many of his ideas are pleasing, but they are reiterated to the verge of wearisomeness. Again it is needless to give more than formal record of the remainder of the programme, which consisted of Schumann's Trio in G minor (Op. 110), Brahms's Sonata in A, for pianoforte and violin (Op. 100), and Beethoven's Sonata in C minor (Op. 10, No. 1).

The programme of the third Concert, on the 24th ult., which is the last we can notice this month, was exceptionally interesting. The novelty was Wagner's "Album Sonata" in A flat, which was published in 1877, though, so far as we are aware, no pianist has thought good to give it a public hearing until the present occasion. It was composed in 1853. At the time the composer was a political exile in Zurich, and was busily engaged in literary work, and also with his gigantic trilogy, "Der Ring des Nibelungen." The Sonata is a piece in one extended movement, the very quiet commencement gradually giving way to more vigorous and agitated matter, which in its turn yields to a resumption of the original theme, and the work comes to a close in the most peaceful manner. Structurally, therefore, it may be considered as in the song form. The music at times shows clearly enough the influence of Beethoven, and there are also suggestions of Wagner himself, alike in the melody and harmonies. It cannot be said that the "Album Sonata" is a very valuable work, but apart from the celebrity of the composer, it has sufficient merit to justify Sir Charles Hallé in giving it a place in his programmes. Tschaiakowsky's Trio in A minor (Op. 50), which was also included in the programme, was first introduced at these Concerts last year. It is an exceedingly fine and original work, but suffers by reason of its extreme length. Brahms's new Sonata in D minor, for pianoforte and violin, of which we speak elsewhere, was beautifully played by the Concert-giver and Madame Néruda, and the lovely slow movement created a profound impression. Beethoven's Trio in E flat (Op. 70, No. 2) concluded the performance.

M. DE PACHMANN'S RECITAL.

THE re-appearance of this favourite pianist after his continental tour was welcomed by a considerable audience at St. James's Hall, on the 27th ult. This was not surprising, for the two Recitals, of which this was the first, are to consist entirely of Chopin's music, in the interpretation of which M. de Pachmann is at present unequalled. The performances are therefore exceedingly valuable in an educational sense, for every pianist, professional or amateur, devotes much attention to the fascinating Polish composer, though very few are qualified either by nature or special study to render his works in a manner calculated to satisfy the critical hearer. The exponent of Chopin needs natural gifts which very few possess, and M. de Pachmann is one of the exceptions. In his hands the music is reproduced with all its poetic significance and delicate romance, and pieces which, as played by other pianists, are uninteresting and tedious become invested with beauty and expressiveness. At the Recital now under consideration he was in his best form: the rendering of the Sonata in B flat minor, the Fantasia in F minor, the Allegro de Concert in A, the Ballade in G minor, and various minor pieces was full of eloquence and deep feeling, and touch, tone, and phrasing were as near perfection as possible. The audience, somewhat cold at first, grew more and more appreciative, and two of the last group of pieces were encored. The remaining Recital will be given on the 13th inst.

ROYAL INSTITUTION OF GREAT BRITAIN.

ON the Saturdays in May Mr. Joseph Bennett delivered at this Institution a course of lectures on the "Origin and development of Opera in England." The lecturer's survey extended from the earliest appearance of a musical stage in this country down to the establishment of Ballad Opera in succession to that of Italian Opera. It was divided into four sections, covering respectively the period from the Miracle Plays to the palmy days of the Masque, from the decline of the Masque to the culminating fortunes of English Opera under Purcell, from the advent of Italian Opera to the close of the Handel period, and from the phenomenal appearance of the "Beggar's Opera" in 1728 to the establishment of that form of lyric drama as a popular thing. Each lecture being restricted to an hour, Mr. Bennett's remarks were necessarily condensed, but the story he had to tell was heard with great attention, the audience seeming to be much interested in its oftentimes curious and amusing details. The lecturer was ably assisted in the musical illustrations by students of the Royal Academy of Music, whose services had been kindly granted by the Principal, Dr. Mackenzie.

MUSICAL GUILD.

UNDER the above title a Concert Society, constituted by the ex-scholars and ex-students of the Royal College of Music, gave the first of a series of four Concerts of Chamber Music at the Town Hall, Kensington, on Wednesday evening, the 22nd ult. This laudable project appears to have received abundant encouragement from the College authorities, and Sir George Grove, Dr. Hubert Parry, and other professors were among the enthusiastic audience that assembled to start the new undertaking. The opening piece of the programme was Schubert's Quintet in C (Op. 163), which received a highly intelligent and meritorious rendering at the hands of Messrs. Jasper Sutcliffe, Wallace Sutcliffe, Emil Kreuz, W. H. Squire, and J. T. Field. Another praiseworthy performance was that of Schumann's Pianoforte Trio in F (Op. 80), by Miss Annie Fry, Miss Winifred Holiday, and Mr. W. H. Squire. Between these two works came a pianoforte solo played by Miss Marian Osborn, a viola solo for that excellent young player, Mr. Emil Kreuz, and some songs given by Miss Anna Russell and Mr. Daniel Price, Mr. Frederic Sewell accompanying. The vocal pieces included refined compositions by Mr. Charles Wood and Mr. W. E. Duncan, also former pupils at the Royal College. It will be seen from the above names that the Musical Guild comprises quite the pick of the talent which the Institution at Kensington Gore is now beginning to send forth, so that the excellence of their individual and combined efforts may go without saying. The object of their venture is to be commended from every point of view, and we therefore trust that amateurs will give the Concerts hearty and substantial support.

MISS FANNY DAVIES'S CONCERT.

OF the very numerous Chamber Concerts given during the past month one of the most interesting was that of Miss Davies, which took place at the Princes' Hall on the 7th ult. The young pianist was fortunate in securing the first performance in England of Brahms's new Sonata in D minor (Op. 108), in which she had Mr. Ludwig Straus as a colleague. The work may at once be pronounced a very favourable example of the composer's later style; that is to say, it is learned without diffuseness—musicianlike in the highest degree, but clear and concise. The first movement, though generally effective, is not specially remarkable; but the Adagio, founded upon one of Brahms's recent songs, is a gem. Scarcely inferior is the third movement, un poco presto con sentimento, which, by the way, was not mentioned in the programme. Only in the Finale does there seem to be any lack of inspiration. It would, of course, be unfair to pronounce dogmatically, after a first hearing, upon the merits of a work by such a thoughtful composer as Brahms, but the initial impression is certainly that the fourth section of his latest Sonata is not equal to the first, second, and third. Schumann occupied a large proportion of Miss Davies's programme, her principal pianoforte solo being his Sonata in F sharp minor (Op. 11), of which she gave a very careful and well considered reading. The Spanisches Liederspiel were effectively sung by Misses Fillunger and Hilda Wilson, and Messrs. Shakespeare and Ffrangcon Davies; and it is worthy of note that No. 7, which is usually omitted, was restored to its place. The Concert may be regarded as an unqualified artistic success.

THE SHINNER QUARTET.

THIS combination of performers—consisting of Miss Emily Shinner (Mrs. F. Liddell), Miss Lucy Stone, Miss Cecilia Gates, and Miss Florence Hemmings—gave a Concert at the Princes' Hall, on the 15th ult. It cannot be said that there was any want of ambition in the selection of the programme. Schubert's Quartet in D minor is not a work to be lightly taken in hand, but the young ladies justified their temerity by giving an exceedingly creditable performance. Since they first appeared in public the Shinner Quartet have much improved, collectively, if not individually, and their ensemble on the present occasion was well nigh irreproachable. A more trying work for ladies than that of Schubert, because far more masculine in style, is Brahms's Quintet in F minor, for pianoforte and strings (Op. 34), but again the rendering was in many respects commendable, and the pianoforte part was of course thoroughly safe in the hands of Miss Zimmermann. The last-named excellent artist played three of Scarlatti's pieces in her best manner, and Miss Emily Shinner rendered a large amount of justice to Spohr's Dramatic Concerto, this work completing a concise and well selected programme.

AMATEUR ORCHESTRAL SOCIETIES.

OF the Smoking Concerts given at the present time the name is legion, but not one in a hundred calls for notice in our columns. Exceptions sometimes occur, and one such was the entertainment given by the Stock Exchange Orchestral Society in the Princes' Hall, on Saturday, the 4th ult. It is a pleasant sign of the times to note that not only a taste for the higher forms of music, but sufficient zeal for the study and practice of the same is to be found in the commercial circles of this busy metropolis; and without desiring to speak in disparagement of other amateur orchestral societies, who are now doing excellent work, it may safely be said that the above-named Association is one of the best of such bodies. The programme arranged for the Concert now under consideration was perhaps dangerously ambitious, containing as it did the Overtures to "Oberon" and "William Tell," Massenet's "Scènes Pittoresques," and some of Sullivan's music to "The Merchant of Venice," but the interpretation was, for the most part, excellent, and indeed not unworthy of a professional orchestra. The Conductor, Mr. George Hitchin, is entitled to praise for the high state of efficiency to which he has brought his forces. The male voice choir belonging to the Association rendered some madrigals and part-songs creditably; and of the soloists the greatest success was won by a member of the Society, Mr. H. Sternberg, who displayed remarkable technical abilities in a somewhat flimsy piece by Viextemps. Yet another member, Mr. J. F. H. Read, was favourably represented as a composer, the first movement of his "Evangeline" Symphony being received with much favour, which was well deserved.

The Strolling Players performed a capital selection at their Orchestral Concert on the 4th ult., and these well known amateurs were listened to, as usual, by an audience that crowded St. James's Hall in every part. Among the works given were Mendelssohn's Symphony in C minor (No. 1), J. S. Svendsen's "Rhapsodie Norvégienne" (Op. 21, No. 3), Spohr's "Jessonda" Overture, a couple of movements from Grieg's "Peer Gynt" Suite, and the Coronation March from "Le Prophète." These were all more or less excellently played, under the direction of Mr. Norfolk Megone, who also joined Messrs. A. Seaward and L. W. Beddome in a Concertino by Kummer, for flute and clarinet, with pianoforte accompaniment, which elicited enthusiastic applause. The vocalists were Miss Dora Barnard and Mr. Herbert Thorndike. The gentleman was in particularly good voice, and had to respond to a rapturous encore of "Thou'rt passing hence." Mr. A. J. Caldicott was at the pianoforte.

The third Concert of the Royal Amateur Orchestral Society's seventeenth season took place at St. James's Hall, on the 11th ult., and was attended by an overflowing audience. The scheme opened with the first movement of Schumann's Symphony in B flat (No. 4), which was spiritedly given. The Prelude to "Lohengrin," which followed, also received a careful and tolerably refined rendering, marred only by the wood-wind not being in perfect accord as to pitch. Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsody, No. 1, needed a more subtle study of nuances; but the Allegretto and Mobile Perpetuum from Moszkowski's Suite in F were well interpreted, and little fault was to be found with the performance of the remaining pieces. Adam's Overture, "Si j'étais roi," brought the Concert to a termination in highly effective fashion. The vocalist was Madame Nordica. The prima donna was encoired after the waltz-air from "Roméo," which she sang with brilliancy and charm, and later on she delighted her audience again in a couple of songs, "Autumn" and "Spring," by O. Weil, with a violin obbligato played by Mr. Pawle. At the Smoking Concert given by this Society at Princes' Hall, on the 18th ult., the Prince of Wales, the Duke of Edinburgh, and other illustrious personages were present.

SEDGWICK CHORAL COMPETITION.

A SERIES of choral competitions held in St. George's Hall, Kendal, on the 2nd ult., afforded a striking example of what may be accomplished, in the way of rousing the musical enthusiasm of a whole district, by the initiative of one determined organiser capable of getting others to work for the object in view. On this occasion thirteen villages surrounding Kendal sent in six junior choirs, ten female voice choirs, nine male voice choirs, and nine village choral societies. It is due to Miss Wakefield (whose residence at Sedgwick Hall near Kendal gives the name to the event) to acknowledge that the credit of bringing all these musical forces to a focus belongs mainly to her. The standard of performance was most creditably high. In nearly every case there were evidences of musical ability and searchings after refinement of expression. The balance of parts was sometimes not good, and the quality of the voices varied, as might be expected; but, on the whole, it would be difficult to find in any country district in Great Britain thirty-four choirs to surpass the Kendal choralists. The following are the particulars of the results of the competitions: Junior Choirs—test piece, "The Nightingale" (Weelkes, arranged by Leslie); prize to Kirkby Lonsdale Choir, Burneside coming second. Female Voice Choirs—test piece, "O happy fair" (Shield, arranged by Leslie); equal prizes to Kirkby Stephen and Burneside. Male Voice Choirs—test piece, "The Hunter's Farewell" (Mendelssohn); prize to Ambleside Choir, Endmoor and Windermere coming just behind. Village Choirs—test pieces, "Awake, sweet love" (Dowland) and "Now is the month of Maying" (Morley); prize to Crosscrake Choir; Ambleside, Burneside, and Kirkby Stephen being honourably mentioned. Sight Reading (Individual); Mary Gill, W. H. Perfect, and Harold Wolfenden each gained a prize. Sight Reading (Double Quartet); Milnthorpe gained the prize. Mr. W. G. McNaught adjudicated. In the evening a Concert was given before a large audience. The combined choirs sang, under the bâton of Miss Wakefield, in excellent style, Purcell's "Rejoice in the Lord," Gounod's "Gallia," Beethoven's "Hallelujah," Mendelssohn's setting for female voices of the words "Hear my prayer," Schubert's "Gondolier's Serenade," Mendelssohn's "Hunting Song," and two Part-songs, "Pastime with good Company" and "Once I loved a maiden fair," from the Bach Choir Magazine. Madame Bertha Moore sang the solo in "Gallia" and several songs with her customary success. Mr. J. W. S. Metcalfe, a promising bass from the Royal College of Music, sang two songs, and Signor Risegari (violin), Mr. Harmer (violin), Mr. Speelman (viola), and Mr. Vieuxtemps (violin) gave instrumental selections, besides playing accompaniments to the choral pieces. Miss Wakefield added to her arduous duties the performance of two of Sterndale Bennett's songs, "May Dew" and "Dawn, gentle flower," both of which were sung with beautiful expression. The winning choirs also each sang the test piece of their section. Mr. H. Bird, of London, was an efficient accompanist, and Mr. Smallwood, a local professor, rendered valuable assistance at the organ.

During an interval in the Concert Lady Edward Cavendish and Mr. W. H. Wakefield presented the prizes to the successful competitors, and Mr. McNaught, in criticising the singing of the choirs, stated that the voice, ear, and culture exhibited that day entitled the district to be described as distinctly musical, and this being so, it was a matter for some regret that, so far as music in the elementary schools was concerned, Westmoreland was one of the worst counties in England. It may be hoped that the Sedgwick scheme will find imitators in other parts of the kingdom.

GERMAN BATHS AND MUSIC.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

TRAVELLERS in search of health, who have to pass three or four weeks at a German watering place out of the season, are, or ought to be, solaced by the musical attractions so abundantly supplied. National tastes differ. At such resorts in England cricket and lawn tennis, in France a good cuisine, in Spain a bull-ring, in Italy song and sunshine, and in Germany instrumental music seem indispensable desiderata; and unless a certain standard as to selection and performance is secured, Teutons would not be satisfied. Visitors to their baths, seeking rest and quiet, have not to submit to the nuisance of street music, niggers, acrobats, and various other forms of unchecked mendicancy to which they are daily subjected in some parts of the world, otherwise civilised, which might be mentioned. At Ems, Wiesbaden, Wildbad, Kissingen, Homburg, and Baden-Baden, and at most of the Austrian baths, care is taken by the authorities to provide good orchestras, playing twice or three times daily. A record of a recent three weeks of music played at Homburg may be of some interest in these columns:—

Overtures: "Zauberflöte," "Prometheus," "King Stephen," "Egmont," "Coriolanus," "Abencerragen," "Freischütz," "Euryanthe," "Ruy Blas," "Son and Stranger," "Athalie," "Tannhäuser," "Fliegender Holländer," "Rienzi," "Italiani in Algieri," "Semiramide," "Elizabeth," "Gazza Ladra," "Barbiere," "Masa niello," "Dinorah," "Etoile du Nord," "Zampa," "Julius Cæsar" (Schumann), "Jubal" (Flotow), "Vestale" (Spontini), "John of Paris" (Boieldieu), "Prinz von Homburg" and "Hiarne" (Marschner), "Wood Nymphs" (Bennett), "Maritana" (Wallace), "Festival" (Rietz), "Life for the Czar" (Glinka), "Nachtlager in Granada," "Reiselust" (Lobe), "Phèdre" (Massenet), "King Manfred" (Reinecke), "Goldener Kreuz" (Brüll), "Taming of the Shrew" (Goetz), "Festival" (Lassen), "Hamlet" (E. M. Bach), "Forester's Bridal" (Gernsheim), "Robespierre" (Litolf), "Prisoner of Edinburgh" (Caraffa), "Heideschacht" (Von Holstein), "Orpheus" (Offenbach), "Sakuntala" (Goldmark), "Lustspiel" (Smetana), "Festival" (Lörtzing), "Dichter und Bauer" and "Light Cavalry" (Suppé), "In Autumn" (Grieg). Among Marches were "Coronation" ("Prophète"), "Wedding" (Mendelssohn), "Tannhäuser," "Queen of Saba" (Gounod), "Prince of Wales" (Tömlich), "Festival" (Raff), "Héroïque" (Saint-Saëns), "Aida," "Hohenzollern," "Duke of Edinburgh," &c. Of miscellaneous pieces the following were given:—Ballet music in "Paris and Helena" (Gluck), "Invitation to the Dance" (Weber), "Carnival in Paris" (Svendsen), "Wald Weber" (Wagner), Hungarian Rhapsodies, Nos. 1 and 2 (Liszt); "Symphonisches Tongemälde" (Rheinberger), Minuet and Intermezzo (F. Lachner), Prelude and Fugue in G minor (Bach, scored by Abert), Introduction, Bridal Chorus, and Finale "Lohengrin," Ballet music "Feramors" and "Bal Costumé" (Rubinstein), Ballet from "Sylvia" (Déliès), "Aus aller Länder," Nos. 1, 2, 4, and 6, and "Cortège" (Moszkowski), Rhapsodie, "Slave" (Dvorák), "Morgenstimmen" and "Anitras Dance" (Grieg), Minuet and Trio "Bachelor of Florence," &c. Each week a "Symphony Concert," with soloists from Frankfurt, &c., was given, the Symphonies being Haydn in E flat, Beethoven in C minor, and Raff in G minor; and Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto was admirably played on one of these special occasions.

The above long and representative list will give an idea of the quantity and quality of music placed within reach of visitors to German and to Austrian baths. And up to the 13th ult., when the "season" commenced, no kind of charge was made for admission to Concerts: from that date a tax of only 12s. was levied, entitling subscribers to hear not only three daily performances, but also giving the entrée to the reading rooms—well supplied with English and other papers, and to the use of the mineral springs, for the whole season from May to October, during which time some 500 Concerts may be heard for the above nominal subscription. On the authority of the director of the music, Herr Gustav Tömlich, the repertory of the Homburg orchestra is stated to contain some 4,000 pieces.

At Baden-Baden the number of available selections is still larger. In an official list belonging to M. Kömemann, the musical director, upwards of 400 Overtures are entered, and all the best Symphonies have been performed. At the suggestion of Johann Strauss, the acoustic capabilities of the "Kiosk" in which the band plays have recently been greatly improved and are now admirable.

It may be added that the sixty-sixth Lower Rhenish Festival, which takes place, in triennial succession, at Cologne, will be held at Whitsuntide, under the chief direction of Professor Dr. Franz Wüllmer. Its programme includes Handel's "Coronation" Anthem, Bach's double chorus "Nun ist du Zeit," Schumann's "Paradise and Peri," Mendelssohn's "Walpurgis Night," Beethoven's "Missa Solemnis," C minor Symphony, and Violin Concerto, with Joachim as soloist; Brahms's Symphony, No. 1; Berlioz's "Fest bei Capulet," selections from Wagner's "Tristan" and "Parsifal," &c., with vocalists from Leipzig, Hamburg, Dresden, and Vienna. Reserved and numbered places for the three days, £1. The public rehearsals, with band and chorus, commence on the 7th inst.

G. PUCCINI'S OPERA "EDGAR."

THE composer of this lyric drama, published by G. Ricordi and Co., of Milan, is a rising and distinguished young musician, whose first operatic work "Le Villi" achieved considerable success both at the Scala and the Teatro del Verme of Milan a year or two ago; and the performances of his latest work, "Edgar," at the Scala, as a special Easter season, were therefore looked forward to as a musical event of considerable interest and importance, enhanced by the great personal popularity and respect Signor Puccini deservedly enjoys, not only in the musical society of Milan, but among the profession generally. Hence the leading musical critics of Rome, Turin, Florence, Bologna, and other cities all gathered to witness the first performance of this new work, which had the immense advantage of being conducted by Commendatore Faccio, and of being put on the stage with all the pomp and circumstance of the Scala—viz., under the most favourable auspices.

It so happens that the libretto of "Edgar" is from the pen of Signor F. Fontana, the author who also furnished the libretto of Franchetti's "Asrael," reviewed in THE MUSICAL TIMES of last month; nay, the plot of "Edgar" is, like that of "Asrael," derived from a Flemish story or legend of the early part of the fourteenth century. A short outline of this, Signor Fontana's latest production, will show whether on this occasion he has done justice both to himself as a dramatic poet and to the composer, as he undoubtedly did in the case of "Asrael."

The scene of the opera is laid in the vicinity of Courtray, at the time when Philip the Fair of France wantonly attacked Flanders at the head of a picked army comprising the flower of the French nobility.

Edgar, the hero of the drama, is a young villager who is under the fatal spell of Tigrana, a beautiful but crafty gipsy minstrel—a Flemish "Carmen"—who is also enamoured of him, while she rejects the advances of Frank, another young villager, whose fair sister Fidelia silently loves Edgar, and yet hopes to baffle Tigrana's sinister designs by her own true love and devotion. Edgar, however, resolves to follow Tigrana at all hazards. In a fit of frenzy and passion—to the horror of the villagers, including Fidelia and her aged father Gualtiero—he sets fire to his ancestral cottage, and is on the point of abandoning all for the sake of Tigrana, when, in the act of leaving with the gipsy minstrel, he is confronted and stopped by his rival, Frank. In a fight between the two Frank is wounded, and Edgar rushes away with Tigrana, the maledictions of the villagers being mingled with Fidelia's cries of distress.

The second act finds Edgar installed at Tigrana's mountain retreat, a luxurious and fantastic abode, recalling the Venusberg in "Tannhäuser." He is tired not only of the life he is leading but of Tigrana herself, and tortured, moreover, by remorse, watches an opportunity to escape from his thralldom. This opportunity presents itself as he hears a band of armed peasants passing along the road to his abode. He hails them, and having entertained them, announces his resolve to join them in defending Flanders against the French invaders. His resolve is shaken when he discovers that the band is led by his old rival Frank; but the latter gladly forgives him, for the wound Edgar had inflicted on him cured him of his evil passion for the gipsy minstrel; and the two friends, reconciled and followed by their comrades in arms, leave the scene of Tigrana's orgies for the glories of the battlefield, while Tigrana herself vows vengeance on the lover who dared to escape her spell.

The scene of the third act is laid in a village near the battlefield of Courtray. Edgar has fallen in battle, and the Flemish soldiers and villagers are preparing to do honour to the remains of their heroic companion, the bier being adorned with wreaths and flowers by the villagers, conspicuous among whom is the true and faithful Fidelia, who has come from her own village accompanied by her old father. The funeral rite has begun, and Frank is extolling the valour of his fallen friend to the mourning crowd, when a stranger in the garb of a friar appears on the scene, and interrupting Frank, insists that Edgar, though a hero in battle, does not deserve a Christian burial, since he led a wicked and dishonourable life with a gipsy minstrel known to be guilty of crime. The bystanders at first side with the friar, but Frank and his sister successfully plead for the memory of the departed peasant-warrior, and Fidelia, after a mournful last adieu, leaves the scene with her father. In the meantime, however, Tigrana has stealthily made her appearance, and the friar induces her, by offering her as a bait a brilliant jewel taken from one of the French knights, to publicly confess her guilt with Edgar, whereupon the crowd clamorously demand that the hero's remains be thrown into the marsh. To the general consternation, however, the coffin crumbles to pieces in their hands and is found empty; and the climax is reached when the strange friar suddenly throws off his disguise and proclaims himself to be Edgar, erroneously supposed to be dead. He now turns with terrible wrath upon the crafty gipsy minstrel who first ruined and then betrayed him; she barely effects her escape, and Edgar, resuscitated and redeemed, hastens with Frank to the native village to reward Fidelia for her devotion and make her his own.

In the fourth and last act we find Fidelia, unconscious of the sudden turn of events, mourning over the loss of Edgar and adorning herself as a bride with the flowers taken from his bier, when Edgar arrives and her sorrow is changed into joy. While, however, Edgar and Frank go to prepare for the wedding, Tigrana suddenly appears, and, thirsting for revenge, rushes upon Fidelia and stabs her to the heart. Hearing Edgar and his companions approach, and seeing that escape is impossible, she hides herself in a closet. Edgar finds Fidelia dying, and only able to point to the closet, whence the gipsy minstrel is dragged by the infuriated crowd, who cry out "To the scaffold, to the scaffold," while Fidelia, with vows of love on her lips, breathes her last in Edgar's arms.

The opera has no overture, but the fourth act is preceded by a prelude of very elaborate design on which the composer has evidently bestowed great care and labour, although its undoubted merits can only be appreciated after repeated hearing. Signor Puccini is a dramatic composer of marked symphonic proclivities, and these not infrequently betray him, in common with so many composers of the day, into an excessive display not only of abstruse orchestration, but of that too massive instrumentation which, owing to the lavish use of brass and cymbals on every available occasion, is often wearying rather than effective. In his style and treatment Signor Puccini belongs to that school which, having Italianised, as it were, the styles of Gounod, Berlioz, and Bizet, as also the highly descriptive style of Goldmark as exhibited in the "Queen of Sheba," has found expression in Boito's "Mefistofele," and more especially in Ponchielli's "Gioconda," these two composers (setting Verdi aside as sui generis) being certainly the most distinguished exponents, if not the founders, of that school of lyric drama in Italy. The character of Fidelia (soprano), whose part is, both dramatically and musically, the most attractive in the whole work, and, by way of a sharp contrast, the weird character of Tigrana (mezzo-soprano), lend themselves with peculiar force to descriptive treatment, and it is in the scenes in which they take the leading parts that Signor Puccini has been pre-eminently successful, both as regards the solis and the concerted numbers. The airs of Fidelia more particularly are extremely sweet and full of pathetic melody; that in which she pleads for the memory of Edgar in the funeral scene of the third act may be quoted as the finest specimen. On the other hand the airs of Tigrana, the gipsy minstrel, and their orchestral treatment are invested with a local colouring truly diabolical, the subject of her first appearance, which is subsequently repeated whenever she takes part in the action, being especially remarkable, inasmuch as, owing to a skilful instrumental combination, it is almost like a cry or outburst of laughter coming from the infernal regions. In the parts of Edgar (tenor) and Frank (baritone), not to mention the secondary part of Gualtiero (bass), Signor Puccini has been less successful, and in some of the concerted numbers, notably in the Soldiers' March and Chorus in the second act, he betrays a striving after effect by well-worn means at the expense of his own individuality and originality. The first and third acts are undoubtedly the best, whereas the second act (in Tigrana's mountain retreat), besides being decidedly weak from a dramatic, is weak also from a musical point of view, and the last act is liable to fall flat owing to the somewhat too precipitate dénouement culminating in Fidelia's death at the hands of Tigrana.

Considering that the opera appeals to a thoughtful and musically educated audience rather than to one guided by first and superficial impressions, its reception at the Scala was all Signor Puccini could desire, for he and the artists, foremost among whom are Signora Cataneo (Fidelia) and Signora Pantaleoni (Tigrana), as well as Commendatore Faccio, that unrivalled operatic conductor, were called before the curtain both during and after the several acts. Doubtless the gifted young composer of "Edgar" will strive to earn further laurels in the field of lyric drama. It is to be hoped that both he and Signor Fontana, a dramatic poet of the first order, will lay to heart the lesson taught by "Edgar," that the first requisite of a successful opera is a solid and sound dramatic foundation—in other words, a first-rate libretto. "It is an old story," says Heine, "but it is ever new."

OBITUARY.

MR. CARL ROSA.—The news of the death of Carl August Nicolano Rosa in Paris, on April 30, came upon the musical world with startling suddenness. That he had taken cold in crossing the Channel was made known through the ordinary medium of information, but no one suspected that what was regarded as a slight illness would have a fatal end. Mr. Rosa, though a man of great nervous energy, could not, however, be called strong, and his constitution failed to resist an attack of peritonitis.

Carl Rosa was a native of Hamburg, where he came into the world on March 22, 1843. Precocious in musical things, he studied so successfully under Lindenau that at seven years of age he played a Concerto in public, and, four years later, made an artistic tour through various countries. At sixteen he entered the Leipzig Conservatoire, studying there under David, Richter, and other masters, and at twenty he became a violinist in the orchestra of his native town. In 1866 Rosa came to London, appearing in the same capacity at the Crystal Palace and elsewhere. So far, his vocation seemed to be that of a solo performer on the most perfect and difficult of all instruments; but at this juncture events took place which marked out for him an unexpected path. He accepted an invitation from the late Mr. Bateman to join a concert party in the United States, and there met Madame Parepa, who was also a member of the troupe. The two promptly fell in love, and were married on February 26, 1867. Having for wife a prima donna, Rosa determined to make the most of the fact by forming a company for English opera, with Madame Parepa-Rosa as the "star." This was done with great success, the new manager soon discovering that his strength lay more in discharging the functions of an impresario than in playing the violin. The Parepa-Rosa Opera remained a conspicuous feature in American musical life till 1873, when, having made a considerable fortune, the artist couple returned to England, bent upon seeing what could here be done in the same line. To this end they took Drury Lane Theatre, and looked forward to the production, in 1874, of Wagner's "Lohengrin." But the expectation was never to be realised. Death intervened, and removed from the stage of human life the amiable and talented lady who had so well assisted her husband towards the goal of success. After this terrible blow Rosa remained for some time quiescent, but his active brain could not long tolerate a condition of inactivity. In 1875 he resolved to get into work again as a manager of English opera. His company was soon formed, and then began the career which Rosa pursued with eagerness and with brilliant results to the day of his death.

Rosa's achievements in connection with English opera constitute his real claim to remembrance. That he did immense service to our national lyric stage, such as it is, cannot for a moment be questioned. Through him many dramatic singers came to the front, and by his means native composers were encouraged to write for the stage at a time when, otherwise, there would not have been the slightest inducement. Dr. Mackenzie, Professor Stanford, Mr. Goring Thomas, Mr. Cowen, Mr. Corder—to all these Rosa opened a "door of utterance," and one of his last acts was to arrange for the composition of an opera by Mr. Hamish MacCunn. It is true that the operas composed under his auspices were not invariably successful, but that was not the manager's fault. He had done all he could, and the future historian of lyric drama in England will have to count Carl Rosa among those to whom the institution is most indebted. Personally, the late manager was held in sincere respect. Though hasty in temper, as the result of a sensitive organisation, and though reputed as very clever at a bargain, Carl Rosa was known by all with whom he came in contact as a man of high rectitude, faithful to his obligations and generous of heart. His death, at the moment when the company of which he was managing director had annexed Mr. Harris's Italian opera, will long be remembered for its dramatic circumstances and lamented as a serious misfortune.

The funeral took place at Highgate Cemetery on the 6th ult., and was attended by thousands of persons, including many eminent representatives of music and related arts. Deputations were present from the Royal Academy of Music, the Royal College of Music, the Guildhall School of Music, the Philharmonic Society, and other kindred institutions.

MR. AUGUSTUS LECHMERE TAMPLIN died, aged fifty-two years, at Fulham on the 8th ult., of fatty degeneration of the heart. He was at one time famous as a performer on the organ, but he devoted his chief attention to the harmonium and did much to popularise that instrument. He was the inventor of the double touch in the harmonium; he was also an excellent pianist and his powers of extemporisation were extensive. He lived in comparative retirement, which prevented his extraordinary powers from becoming known to the many. By the few who knew him his loss will be deeply regretted.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE music of the grove is apparently banishing that of the concert-room, and, with the advance of summer, entertainments of the class which appeal to the readers of THE MUSICAL TIMES become few and far between. The only local musical event of leading importance during the past month, was the fourth and last of the admirable Orchestral Concerts associated with the name of Mr. Stockley, which took place on the 13th ult. The principal orchestral numbers were Dr. Hubert Parry's Suite Moderne, in A minor, the Overtures to the "May Queen" and "Zampa," the "Danse Macabre" of Saint-Saëns, the "Kaiser" March (Wagner), and the "Angelus" from Massenet's "Scènes Pittoresques," which was introduced at the same Concerts a few seasons ago. Dr. Parry's Suite, originally produced at the Gloucester Festival of 1886, has now taken such a firm hold of public favour in London and elsewhere, that there is no need here to say anything in praise of the strongly marked individuality and artistic thoroughness of this typical work, to the completeness of which nothing seems to be wanting but a more decided vein of melody. Saint-Saëns's weird musical picture of the midnight "Dance of Death," suggested, apparently, by the grisly series of sketches of the younger Holbein, aroused amusement, interest, and curiosity rather than admiration, the ingenious mechanical effects on the Xylophone, suggestive of rattling bones, being but a poor substitute for the imaginative power which is needed to redeem such morbid compositions from the suspicion of puerility. Wagner's grand March, based on the old Choral "Ein feste Burg," was given with all due sonority and impressiveness, and full justice was done by the band to the delicacy and refinement of Massenet's "Angelus." Miss Nettie Carpenter, who filled the post of solo violinist in place of Mr. Carrodus, absent through domestic affliction, essayed for the first time here the G minor Concerto of Max Bruch, her rendering of which lacked nothing but power. In a "Lullaby," by Miss Wurm, and Wieniawski's Mazurka in G minor, her success was unqualified. The vocalists were Madame Nordica and Mr. Charles Banks. The lady sang Rossini's "Una voce" and "Gli angui d' inferno" in her most brilliant style, and

Mr. Charles Banks was especially successful in the beautiful prayer from Wagner's "Rienzi."

The most interesting novelty at the annual Clef Club Concert, on the 10th ult., was the Serenade, by the composer of "The Fair Melusina," of which, however, only three movements were given, all of them exceedingly tuneful and fanciful, as well as being scored with taste. The excerpt was admirably played by Messrs. Piddock (flute), Abbott and Sück (violins), G. W. Priestley (viola), Owen (violin-cello), and Thompson (contra-bass). Another praiseworthy novelty was the Prelude and Fugue in E flat of Mr. Battison Haynes, a refined and scholarly composition, first produced at Ealing in 1884. The three movements from Karl Goldmark's Suite, in which Mr. F. Ward distinguished himself by the excellence of his tone and phrasing, fairly justified the high reputation which the work has achieved in Germany. The vocal selection from Dr. Wareing's "New Year's Eve" Cantata impressed the audience with a desire to hear more of so interesting a work. Mr. F. Ward and Mr. Abbott were heard to great advantage in Bach's double Concerto, and the vocal interests of the programme were well cared for by Miss Annie Roberts, who possesses a soprano voice of charming quality; Mr. Gervas Cooper, Mr. Mobberley, and others. The only fault of the Concert was its excessive length.

The Saturday evening Concerts at cheap prices continue to attract good audiences, the most popular programmes being those of a miscellaneous character. At the Concert on the 11th ult. a pleasant variety was imparted to the entertainment by the instrumental performances of the Anemoic Union and the pianoforte playing of Mr. Astley Langston, who gave an excellent rendering of Cowen's "Rondo à la Turque." At this Concert Miss Hill, a young local artist possessing a well trained contralto voice of charming quality, achieved a popular success by her singing of Watson's "All in a garden fair."

On the 8th ult. the Birmingham Amateur Operatic Society gave a first performance of Gilbert and Sullivan's "Ruddigore," for the benefit of two local charities, and attracted as usual an overflowing audience. The effort was an ambitious one for amateur performers, but though evidences of insufficient rehearsal were occasionally apparent, the result on the whole was very satisfactory and praiseworthy, the ladies as usual carrying off the honours. At the Grand Theatre Jakobowski's popular operetta "Erminie," with Miss Ethel Pierson as the heroine and Mr. Paulton as the grotesque ruffian Cadeau, has drawn fairly large and appreciative audiences. At the Royal the Gironette Opera Company, with Miss Guilia Warwick and Miss Marion Erle as prima donnas, has also achieved a fair measure of success.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE chief event of musical interest in Dublin during a very uneventful month was the Concert of the Dublin Musical Society, on the 23rd ult., at which Beethoven's "Engedi" and Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" furnished the programme. The performance took place in the Grand Concert Hall of the Royal University, and a crowded and fashionable assembly testified to the favour with which the selection was regarded by the musical public. The experienced choir of the Society did its work, with some exceptions, in brilliant style; the episode in the first chorus of "Engedi," however, severely taxed their capabilities. The band, slightly reduced in numbers, and suffering at times from a predominance of the brass, nevertheless gave a good account of itself, especially in the "Lobgesang" Symphony. Mr. Edward Lloyd sang the tenor solo part in both Cantatas, and more than once awakened the enthusiasm of the audience. The other principal vocalists were Miss Charlotte Hanlon and Mr. T. Marchant. Mr. Joseph Robinson conducted, Mr. R. M. Levey led the band, and Mr. Horan was the Organist.

An excellent performance of Gounod's "Redemption" was given at St. Peter's, Phibsborough, on April 29, under the direction of Mr. P. Goodman, Organist of the Church, with a full band and chorus of 200 voices. The principal singers were Miss Mary Harris, Mrs. McCabe, Mr. J. Alcorn, and Mr. J. R. Leahy. The band was led by Mr. N. P. Healy, and Mr. Frank Manly was the Organist.

The Dublin Amateur Orchestral Union gave its second Concert (tenth season) at the Antient Concert Hall, on the 14th ult. The principal feature was Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony in A, which had been promised for some time, and the performance of which was very welcome and most creditable, when the difficulties of the work are taken into consideration. The other orchestral pieces were Kalliwoda's Overture in F and an arrangement of the "Preislied" from Wagner's "Meistersinger," with obbligato for the harp and violin, played respectively by Madame Priscilla Frost (who also contributed harp solos) and Mr. Poland. Mdle. Henriette van Eyk was pianist, and gave Chopin's Scherzo (No. 2, Op. 31) in B flat minor, Schumann's Fantasiestück (Op. 12), and Mendelssohn's Capriccio in G major. An arrangement of Handel's well known "Largo" for violin, harp, harmonium, and strings was played by Mr. Poland, Madame Frost, Mr. E. Telford, and the strings of the orchestra. Mr. W. H. Telford conducted, and Mr. J. Gaffney was the vocalist.

Mr. Walter Bapty's Benefit Concert took place at the Antient Concert Rooms, on the 11th ult., when some of our best singers gave their valuable assistance, and Dr. Joze, Mr. Culwich, and Sir Robert Stewart acted as accompanists.

Two Scotch Ballad Concerts were given in the Rotunda on the 10th and 11th ult., the vocalists being Miss Agnes Barr, Miss Edith Moss, Messrs. J. Moir, Rogers, and MacDonald; and a series of morning and evening performances, by the Neapolitan Ladies' Band and Swiss Choir, took place in the Leinster Hall on the 14th ult. and following days.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

THE close of the winter season in April, and the long Easter vacation which follows, combine to make May an uneventful month. The only local Concert of great interest was that given by the Edinburgh Male Glee Club, under the leadership of Mr. Millar Craig. The pièce de résistance was Max Bruch's Cantata "Frithjof," the solos in which were undertaken by Mrs. Millar Craig and Mr. P. Glencorse. The first part of the programme consisted of an attractive selection of old English glees and catches.

The Orpheus Amateur Orchestral Society, at a Concert on the 17th ult., presented Mr. John Greig, M.A., their Conductor, with a bâton, and congratulated him on passing the necessary examinations for the degree of Mus. Doc., Oxon.

A new Choral Society, the "Grange," made its first appearance on the 21st ult. with an unambitious programme. Mr. Owston is the Conductor.

The lamented death of Mr. Carl Rosa lent a melancholy attraction to an excellent set of performances by his Opera Company during the week—13th to 18th ult. The reproduction of "The Star of the North" was put forward as the novelty, and careful staging and evidence of honest rehearsal combined with the real merits of the opera to draw increasing audiences at each performance. Messrs. Celli and Manners divided the honours by their renderings of Peter, and Madame Georgina Burns was very attractive as Catherine. Miss Fanny Moody's Mignon, on Tuesday, was not so successful; but in her first appearance as Carmen on Saturday she charmed a crowded audience. Miss Amanda Fabris confirmed good impressions, and Miss Kate Drew has improved greatly since her last appearance. "The Bohemian Girl" still exercises its powers of attraction.

Of more than passing interest was an instalment of "Musical Reminiscences" narrated by Mr. George Lichtenstein at a meeting of the Edinburgh Society of Musicians, on the 11th ult. There was a very large audience of members and guests. Mr. Otto Schweizer, the President, who occupied the chair, welcomed the guests in a few words, and introduced the lecturer, who, as he said, needed no introduction to an Edinburgh audience. Mr. Lichtenstein told us of his early life in Hungary (Agram), where he met Liszt for the first time; and Paris, where he made the acquaintance of Heller, Berlioz, and others. Many more familiar names and stories of famous musicians came with peculiar charm from the lips of one who had spoken with them as friends, and had taken a part in the scenes he narrated. In response to a unanimous expression of desire, Mr. Lichtenstein promised to give us another set of "Reminiscences" at a future time.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW AND THE WEST OF SCOTLAND.

At the recent meeting of guarantors of the Glasgow Choral and Orchestral Concert scheme a deficit was again announced. The loss for the season 1888-89 is not, happily, of alarming proportions, amounting only to £239 4s. 4d. The previous year's experience showed a deficit of £67 4s. 9d., and, in order that the coming season may start with a clean sheet, a call at the rate of 2s. 2d. per pound will be made upon the guarantors. The fund raised yearly for the purpose of carrying on these Concerts is close upon £3,000, it is supported by many leading citizens, and the subscriptions range from £5 to £100, the latter sum being the maximum amount accepted. These guarantors' meetings are, usually, very quiet affairs, seldom lasting beyond a few minutes, and confined, as a rule, to the Chairman's speech and to votes of thanks. On the occasion under brief notice one or two guarantors had, however, something to say about the general working expenses, which amounted to nearly one-third of the total outlay of £6,755. It ought, moreover, to be said that comments have been pretty freely made in several quarters regarding the financial aspects of the undertaking, as, also, upon the monopoly enjoyed by the Choral Union; and the time is, probably, not far distant when the purely orchestral section of the scheme may be worked by an independent committee. Much might undoubtedly be said both for and against such a proposal; meanwhile, however, there will be no disturbance of the dual scheme, and the guarantee fund for next season's campaign is receiving, we are glad to hear, liberal support. Beethoven's Mass in D is now being rehearsed by Mr. Joseph Bradley's choristers, but many friends of the Choral Union fear the wisdom of the choice, for reasons which need not be here named.

What is to be done with the surplus accrued from the Glasgow Exhibition? The accounts have now been made up, and a profit of £46,000 is practically secured. Music contributed in a very large degree to the success of the big show, and the surplus could not, therefore, be better employed than in fostering the growing interest in the art everywhere manifested in Scotland. It is, however, greatly to be feared that only a miserable pittance will be set aside for musical purposes, for the powers that be strongly favour, it is understood, the erection of a picture gallery and museum. This is not the place to wax polemical on the measure of support accorded to existing facilities for the housing of the fine arts, &c., but it may be permitted us to urge the "Surplus Committee" to divide their favours in the interest of, say, a local College of Music. Many good teachers flourish north of the Tweed. Given, moreover, the needful attraction, other competent professors will assuredly migrate northwards, to the advantage, it need hardly be said, of promising students who cannot afford either a London or a Continental training. At the last moment information reaches us that the surplus will not be disposed of hastily.

A series of competitions have been launched by the Glasgow Society of Musicians. Only members and associates of that body will be allowed to compete for the prizes; these will be five in number, and the subjects are as follows:—An orchestral work, a composition for two instruments, one of which must be the pianoforte; a choral work to occupy not less than ten minutes in performance, a composition for organ, and a song. It may be worth noting here that there was some difference of opinion as to whether the competitions should be restricted to the members and associates of the Society. Had it been decided to open the lists to, say, musicians resident in Scotland, a good deal of prize money might have been forthcoming.

The Carl Rosa Opera Company have had a highly successful season at the Theatre Royal, Glasgow. The leading feature of the engagement was Meyerbeer's "The Star of the North," staged on a remarkably brilliant scale, and performed with every regard for the traditions of the organisation—all-round excellence. Nowhere had Mr. Rosa warmer friends than in Glasgow, and the news of his death was received with feelings of peculiar sadness, the more so as the company opened at the Royal on the day when the remains of its late guiding spirit were laid to rest.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE annual general meeting of the proprietors of the Liverpool Philharmonic Society was held on the 13th ult. The Chairman announced that there was a balance in favour of the Society, although the failure, from a financial point of view, of the Hallé Concerts seems to have deterred other Concert-givers and impresarios from giving Concerts. The committee has therefore lowered the minimum price of the building for Concerts by 25 per cent. The past season has certainly been a most satisfactory one in every way, and is chiefly notable for the production of Dr. A. C. Mackenzie's Cantata "The Dream of Jubal," which was written to commemorate the Jubilee Concert of the Society. The success which attended this work induces the hope that the Philharmonic Society, as the premier provincial Society, will follow the precedent set by Mr. Clark's liberality, and each year commission a work by one or other of our English composers.

A Musical Festival was held in St. Simon and St. Jude's Church, Anfield, on Tuesday evening, April 30, when selections from "The Messiah" formed the chief attraction. The soloists were Miss Fanny Bouffleur, Miss Lucas, Mr. A. F. Thornborough, Mr. J. H. Eld, and Master Champion. An arrangement of Mozart's accompaniments for the organ, pianoforte, and Mustel organ was played by Messrs. J. K. Cave, W. Faulkes, and R. Cooper respectively. Miss White played Handel's Violin Sonata in A, and Mr. Faulkes (Organist of St. Margaret's) performed Mendelssohn's Capriccio Brillante in B minor, for pianoforte. The chorus (100 voices) sang their parts well. Mr. C. W. Bridson (Organist of the Church) was the Conductor. The church was filled: and the proceeds of the Festival were devoted to the church building fund.

"The Yeomen of the Guard" was played at the Court Theatre during the week commencing on the 13th ult., and drew very large audiences. There seems to be now no doubt that the work is as popular as any of its well known predecessors.

The Carl Rosa Opera Company paid their usual spring visit to the Court Theatre during the week commencing on the 20th ult., and performed the operas "The Star of the North" (twice), "Maritana," "The Puritan's Daughter" (twice), "Lucia di Lammermoor," and the "Bohemian Girl" on the final Saturday night.

Opera in English has also been heard at the New Theatre Royal, Breck Road, where Mr. Walsham's English Opera Company have given representations of "Faust," "Maritana," "Bohemian Girl," and "The Waterman." Miss Winyeates, a lady of local origin, was well spoken of during the engagement.

A fine tubular pneumatic organ, by Willis, has been erected in the new church of St. Dunstan, which was consecrated on the 18th ult.

Mr. F. H. Burstall, the Organist of the Pro-Cathedral and of Wallasey Parish Church, has resigned the latter appointment, which he has held for thirteen years, and will now undertake the duties of Organist to St. Peter's Parish Church.

Mr. David Fisher, the well known member of Mr. D'Oyley Carte's Company, died here on Saturday, 25th ult.

the work was given by the Choral Union that reference to it now is justified, and it is due to the members of the Society to place on record the highly creditable rendering which they gave of the Oratorio. The choral portions were given with accuracy of attack and sustained vigour, and, in short, all the elements of good choir singing were displayed. The soloists were selected from the Society. A well balanced little orchestra, led by Mr. H. Parkin, played Bottesini's elaborate accompaniments admirably. Mr. T. Foulstone was Organist, and Mr. S. Suckley conducted.

Sheffield is rich in amateur orchestral societies, and, though at times ambition overrules their discretion, the standard of their performances is generally excellent, the friendly rivalry which exists conducing to the vitality of each. The Amateur Instrumental Society, which is the first in age and in point of numbers, gave a Concert on the 2nd ult. in the Montgomery Hall. Spohr's "Power of Sound" Symphony was the principal piece on the programme, and a fine performance of it was given. The "William Tell" and Kalliwoda in F Overtures, a selection from Balfe's "Satanella," and Strauss's "Blue Danube" Waltz were also played. Mr. Henry Coward conducted.

On the following evening the Collegiate Orchestral Society gave a Concert at the Music Hall, Surrey Street. Their chief piece was Mendelssohn's "Italian" Symphony, and under the bâton of Mr. S. Suckley all the sections of the work went well. The other orchestral numbers were the Overture to Rossini's "La Gazza Ladra," Haydn's quartet arrangement of the "Emperor's Hymn" for strings, Overture to Auber's "Le Dieu et la Bayadere," March from "Scipio," and a Gavotte by Kottau. An interesting feature of the Concert was the singing of Mr. William Smith, who gave Schumann's "Two Grenadiers" and Sullivan's "Mary Morrison" with distinct success.

The Barnsley Choral Society gave a Concert in the Public Hall, Barnsley, on the 9th ult., at which Weber's Mass in G was performed. Overtures, part-songs, and songs served to fill up the programme, one of the vocalists being Earl Compton, M.P., who gave Maud White's "Absent, yet present," and Hatton's "To Anthea."

On the 20th ult. Mr. A. R. Gaul came from Birmingham to conduct a performance, by the Amateur Harmonic Society, of his historical Cantata "Joan of Arc." The work, which had twice previously been heard in the town this season, was admirably rendered. Miss Lilian Mills, Mr. C. Blagbro, and Mr. W. Browning were the principals; Mr. G. Marsden, leader; and Mr. J. A. Rodgers, Organist. Haydn's Motet "The arm of the Lord" (conducted by Mr. W. Chapman) was also included in the programme.

The fifty-first Concert of the Amateur Musical Society took place in the Albert Hall, on the 21st ult., when Cowen's "Sleeping Beauty" was introduced, for the first time, to a Sheffield audience. The chorus and the soloists performed their tasks admirably. Gade's "Spring's Message" and Schubert's "The Lord is my Shepherd" were given in the second part of the programme, which also included instrumental and vocal trios, organ solos, and songs. Mr. J. W. Phillips was Organist, and Mr. Schollhammer conducted.

MUSIC IN WALES.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

MR. SYDNEY FIFOOT, the Conductor of the Cardiff Orchestral Society, has resigned, and the Committee have appointed in his place Dr. Joseph Parry, the musical lecturer at the University College, Cardiff. As the zeal and energy of the new Conductor are so well known we look forward to the future of this Society with increased interest.

At Treorky, on Monday, April 29, the Upper Rhondda Calvinistic Methodists held their Annual Musical Festival in the Bethlehem Chapel. The various selections of music were effectively rendered. There were large audiences, and the Conductor was "Alaw Ddu" from Llanelly, to whom the success of the Festival was mainly owing.

An effort is being made to start a Musical Society at Swansea. The old Choral Society has been dormant for two or three years, and is now defunct. A meeting of persons interested in the matter was held on Wednesday, the 15th ult., when a committee was formed to endeavour to draw up some scheme which would prove generally acceptable to Swansea amateurs. The professors, with very few exceptions, do not trouble themselves about such things. A desire has been pretty generally expressed that the orchestra which has performed at the Saturday Popular Concerts for the last three years, should be fostered and gradually strengthened by the addition of such young players as are qualified to take part in concerted music. We hope to give our readers some further information hereon next month.

At Ebenezer Chapel, Swansea, on Thursday evening, the 2nd ult., a Concert was given by the chapel choir, when Dr. Joseph Parry's interesting and popular sacred Cantata, "Joseph," was performed before a large and sympathetic audience. The work is well known to and is a great favourite with Welsh choirs. The performance was very successful and was received with every mark of approval, both choir and soloists acquitting themselves with credit. Miss M. A. Jones was the accompanist, and the Conductor was Mr. J. D. Thomas, a former pupil of the composer.

MUSIC IN THE WEST OF ENGLAND.

HERR LORTZING'S Ladies' Choir gave an At Home at the Rotunda, Cheltenham, on Tuesday, the 7th ult., when Reinecke's Cantata "Bethlehem" and some choruses by Liszt and Wagner were rendered by the choir. Some pieces by Lecoq and Bizet were performed by the Mandoline Guitar Band, reinforced by the Hungarian cymbal or dulcimer, which were very effective. Miss Williams and Miss Keyes played the accompaniments on the pianoforte. Herr Lortzing conducted.

THE twelfth annual Festival of the Western Counties' Musical Association was held on April 25, at the Victoria Hall, Exeter, and consisted of two performances, one in the morning and one in the evening. The works selected were Sir Sterndale Bennett's "The Woman of Samaria" and "May Queen," and Dr. Bridge's "Callirhoë." The soloists were Miss Monteith, Miss Emily Squire, Mr. Faithfull Pearce, and Mr. Montague Worlock. The leader was Mr. M. G. Rice; solo violoncello, Mr. J. Pomeroy; Organist and accompanist, Mr. E. M. Vinnicombe; and Conductors, Mr. D. J. Wood and Dr. J. F. Bridge.

The announcement of the first annual Ladies' Night of the Society of Instrumentalists, on the 21st ult., took many in Bristol slightly by surprise, for it seemed as if the formation of the Society had only just been heard of, and we were certainly not expecting it to challenge public criticism for some time to come.

The history of the Society is briefly as follows: When, in the autumn of last year, the hope of maintaining a resident professional orchestra in connection with the Monday Popular Concerts Society was reluctantly abandoned for a time, the great need of some means of becoming acquainted with orchestral music was widely felt, and some of the amateurs of the city appealed to Mr. George Riseley to help them to this end. Mr. Riseley at once readily assumed the position of honorary Conductor, whilst Mr. T. Carrington offered his services as honorary leader. The Society was then quickly formed, and began its weekly rehearsals in Hamilton's Rooms with ninety members, a committee of gentlemen being responsible for all business arrangements. Before many weeks had passed, the Society had to remove its quarters to the Museum, owing to the increase of its numbers, and their work was steadily carried on during the winter and spring. At first the music chosen was simple, but progress was so marked and rapid that the Conductor was encouraged to make more ambitious selections; and during the season no less than six Symphonies have been taken in hand—one of Beethoven's, two of Mozart's, and three of Haydn's; besides such Overtures as Mozart's "Idomeneo" and "Seraglio," Flotow's "Martha" and "Stradella," Rossini's "Tancredi" and "Italiani in Algieri," and numerous Marches and Waltzes. Pianoforte Concertos also formed part of the scheme, and five or six lady pupils of Mr. Riseley's acquitted themselves very creditably as soloists. The orchestral numbers of the programme finally decided upon for the first Concert of the Society stood as follows: Overture, "Don Giovanni" (Mozart), Symphony, No. 1 in C (Mozart), March, "Cornelius" (Mendelssohn), Overture, "Prometheus" (Beethoven), "Grossmütterchen" (Langer), Minuet for muted strings (Boccherini); and the "War March" from Mendelssohn's "Athalie." These were, one and all, admirably rendered, and in such a spirited, intelligent manner that the hearers could hardly believe that it was the performance of so young a society. The number was 146, including about twenty professional players. Out of this number fifty-one were ladies. Besides the orchestral pieces, there were two vocalists, Mrs. Nixon and Mr. Evan Thomas, who each contributed two songs, and Mr. Carrington was heard to great advantage in a brilliant Polonaise of Wieniawski's for violin. The financial aspect of the Society is most satisfactory, the result of its first season being a balance in hand.

Stainer's sacred Cantata "St. Mary Magdalen" was performed, on the 21st ult., in Truro Cathedral. The work was well rendered, under the conductorship of the composer. The solos were taken by Masters A. and F. Thomas (Truro Cathedral) and Messrs. Sunman and Wright (Christ Church, Oxford). Mr. G. R. Sinclair, who conducted the rehearsals, presided at the organ.

The two principal local Societies—the Philharmonic and the Orchestral—gave grand evening Concerts at the Victoria Hall, Weston-super-Mare, on the 9th and 13th ult. respectively. At the Philharmonic, Gade's "Erl-King's Daughter," Lloyd's "Hero and Leander," and a short miscellaneous selection were very efficiently rendered, the principals being Miss Delves Yates, Mrs. G. E. Alford, Dr. Roxburgh, and Mr. Montague Worlock, and the well-balanced choir and orchestra being under the conductorship of Mr. Edward Cook. At the Orchestral Society's Concert, the orchestra of nearly fifty performers, conducted by Mr. C. A. Windeatt, gave most creditably the Andante from Schubert's No. 7 Symphony, the "Maritana" Overture, the Marche Hongroise from Berlioz's "Faust," Sullivan's "Henry VIII." (incidental music), and a Gavotte by E. Cuthbert Nunn. Mrs. E. M. Phillips (contralto) and Mr. S. Boyce Creak (tenor) were the vocalists, Mr. Ambrose H. Comfort played a pianoforte solo, and Mr. Corelli Windeatt a violin solo.

Mr. Calder O'Bierne's English Opera Company were at the Assembly Rooms, Bristol, with "Maritana," "The Bohemian Girl," and "The Waterman," on the 6th, 7th, and 8th ult.

MUSIC IN AMERICA.

New York, May 14, 1889.

THE musical season has come to an end in America. There are still some entertainments to be given and some so-called festivals to be held. The festivals, however, are pretty nearly all of the same pattern, owing to the fact that Mr. Charles E. Locke, ex-manager of the American Opera Company, has organised a company for the purpose of appearing at these festivals. The company is a good one, and in places where the local choral organisations are strong the festivals are worthy of serious consideration. In other places they are nothing more or less than Concerts given by this company.

In New York, since the departure of Von Bülow, nothing has been done. The brilliant Doctor concluded his season in a blaze of glory. He gave a grand Orchestral Concert at the Metropolitan Opera House on the 2nd inst. His programme consisted of Brahms's "Tragic" Overture, Haydn's Symphony (No. 12, Breitkopf and Härtel), Meyerbeer's "Struensee" Overture, Beethoven's "Eroica," and the Vorspiel to "Die Meistersinger." There was nothing revolutionary in his readings, but his tempi in "The Meistersinger" introduction astonished some of the critics, who have fallen into the habit of regarding Seidl as the great Wagner apostle, forgetting that Von Bülow conducted the earlier Wagner works with the approval of the composer. Von Bülow's reading of the Haydn Symphony was delicious in its delicacy and expressive accentuation. He did wonders with an orchestra composed of first-class men, but unaccustomed to playing together, and unfamiliar with their Conductor's style. The Doctor distinguished himself during his American visit by being continually in a good humour, and he sailed away leaving a surprising popularity behind him.

A new choral organisation, which promises to do good work after a while, is the Palestrina Choir. Its first Concert was given at Chickering Hall on the 29th ult., a very bad date to choose, as it was the first day of the Washington Centennial celebration. The antiquities on the programme were Lasso's "Matona, lovely maiden," which is often heard, and his Magnificat in B, for six voices; Johann Michael Bach's Chorale-Motet, "Now is Christ risen"; and Palestrina's Madrigal, "Fair Cedar Tree," and the "Missa Papæ Marcelli." The Beethoven String Quartet furnished some old instrumental music. The audience was most delighted with the Bach Motet, a wonderfully beautiful and elevated piece of writing, which was loudly encored. The great Marcelline Mass was badly sung, but some of its numbers profoundly impressed the hearers. There is good material in the Choir and it will do well after further study.

Gounod's "Mors et Vita" was performed by the Church Choral Society, under the direction of Mr. R. H. Warren, at St. Bartholomew's Church, on the 26th ult., with great success.

The fifth Subscription Concert of the Apollo Club of Chicago took place at the Central Music Hall, on Tuesday, the 30th ult. Mendelssohn's "Elijah" was given with the following soloists: Mr. and Mrs. Henschel, Miss Christine Nielson, and Mr. W. J. Lavin. The performance was highly successful.

The Handel and Haydn Society, of Boston, gave Mendelssohn's "St. Paul" at the Music Hall, on the 22nd ult. The Boston papers were unanimous in their praise of the rendering.

The Music Festival given at Hartford at the opening of the present month was a grand success. The Locke combination furnished most of the soloists.

At Springfield, Mass., a Music Festival was held, concluding on the 8th inst. The Locke combination also took part in this. The programmes were varied somewhat, but the entertainments were of the same general style. "Elijah" was sung at the final Concert.

On Thursday, the 2nd inst., the last Concert of the Cleveland Vocal Society took place. The choral numbers were the Chorus of Reapers from Liszt's "Prometheus," Beethoven's "Elegy," and the Prayer and Finale from "Lohengrin."

The Arion Club, of Milwaukee, gave its last Concert on the 9th inst, when Cowen's "Sleeping Beauty" was performed. Mr. and Mrs. Henschel, Mrs. Bodden, and Mr. Charles Knorr were the soloists. The Arion Club and the Cecilian Choir furnished the choral parts, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under Wilhelm Gericke, completed the array of forces.

On Saturday afternoon, the 25th ult., the Royal Normal College and Academy of Music for the Blind held its annual Concert and Prize Festival at the Crystal Palace. Before the commencement of the Concert visitors had, in the transept, an opportunity of witnessing the skilful practice of young pupils in Kindergarten work, modelling, and pianoforte tuning. At a signal from the Conductor, Mr. August Manns, the choir of the College sang the National Anthem. Next in the programme came Alex. Guilmant's Symphony in D minor, for the organ and orchestra. In order to introduce to the public as many of the students as possible the solo part was entrusted to three players—Miss Emily Lucas, Miss Mabel Davies, and Mr. Augustine Lander each playing a movement. In the Ode, "Blest pair of Sirens," by Dr. Hubert Parry, under the direction of the composer, the choir found themes worthy of their best attention. In the unaccompanied music the singers were also heard to advantage. For this occasion the pieces selected were the Madrigal "The Silver Swan" (Gibbons), and the Part-song "Come, live with me" (Benet). Some good solo singing was heard in Gade's "Spring" Fantasia, by Miss Amelia Campbell and Mr. Thomas White. It was reserved for Mr. Alfred Hollins to reveal, in Mendelssohn's Capriccio in B minor, for pianoforte and orchestra, the full value of the musical training to be obtained at the institution. Mr. Hollins, no longer a pupil, has established for himself, both in America and Great Britain, a reputation of an enduring kind. After the Concert the distribution of prizes took place by the Duchess of Rutland, who gave an address replete with kindly feeling. Sixty prizes and sixteen certificates were awarded, and each was accompanied with a word of encouragement from her Grace which greatly enhanced the value of the gift.

MR. ERNEST KIVER's annual evening Concert, given at Princes' Hall on the 7th ult., was made especially noteworthy by the first performance in public of a String Quartet in G minor, by Mr. Wingham, heard one Sunday afternoon a few weeks previously at the Brompton Oratory. It is a short but interesting work in the usual four movements, each of which reveals the hand of the skilled and earnest musician. The opening Allegro con fuoco is bright and energetic, and the themes are well contrasted. The second movement is an Arietta con variazioni, founded on the melody composed by Samuel Webbe to the hymn "O Roma felix," sung on the Festival of St. Peter and St. Paul. The variations are scarcely such in the strict sense of the term, the theme being repeated in each as a canto fermo with varied contrapuntal treatment, while the concluding variation is in the form of a canon with double counterpoint. The Minuet, written as a canon on the octave, is another striking example of scholarly resource, while the Finale terminates with an effective reference to the melody of the hymn. This clever work was ably played by Messrs. Szczepanowski, George Wilby, Ellis Roberts, and Charles Ould, and so well did it please the audience that the composer had to leave his place in the hall and bow his acknowledgments from the platform. Mr. Ernest Kiver, besides taking part in Mozart's C major Trio and Grieg's Duet Sonata in F (Op. 8), won distinction by a very neat and thoughtful rendering of Schumann's "Etudes Symphoniques." Mrs. Ambler-Brereton was the vocalist of the evening.

MISS MARIAN MCKENZIE's first Concert, given at Dudley House on the 24th ult., was in every respect completely successful. The popular young contralto was assisted by Mrs. Mary Davies, Miss Anna Williams, Mr. Henry Guy (who replaced Mr. Orlando Harley), Mr. Isidore de Lara, Madame Agnes Miller (pianoforte), Mr. Tivadar Nachéz (violin), and Mr. Albert (violoncello), all of whom contributed to a highly interesting programme. A special feature in the Concert was the excellent rendering of Brahms's "Zigeuner Lieder," by Miss Helen Trust, Miss Agnes Janson, Mr. William Nicholl, and Mr. Frederic King, accompanied by Miss Annie Learwood. The interest of course centred in the efforts of the Concert-giver, who was in excellent voice, and was heard to great advantage in the scene from Dr. Parry's "Judith," in which she was assisted by Masters Wynne and Lambert (two of Mr. Stedman's boys who took part in the original performance of that work); in the well known Trio from Cimarosa's "Matrimonio Segreto," with Mrs. Mary Davies and Miss Williams; and in Sullivan's "Willow Song," which was encored with enthusiasm. The programme was varied by recitations given by Miss Cowen, Mr. George Giddens, and Mr. Marius.

THE fifth and last Concert of the season was given by the Highbury Philharmonic Society at the Athenæum, Highbury New Park, on Monday evening, the 6th ult. Berlioz's "Faust" was the work selected for performance, the soloists being Mrs. Hutchinson, Mr. Henry Piercy, Mr. Robert Grice, and Mr. R. Hilton. The orchestra was considerably strengthened for the occasion, and the chorus rendered a good account of the trying choral numbers of the work. The brilliant Hungarian March was enthusiastically applauded, but the Conductor wisely declined to break the continuity of the work by repeating it. Mr. Piercy was very successful in the part of Faust, as also were Mrs. Hutchinson as Margaret, Mr. R. Hilton as Brander, and Mr. R. Grice as Mephistopheles; the rendering by the last-named singer of the "Serenade" being particularly well received. Among the orchestral accompaniments, special mention should be made of the Cor Anglais obligato, which was well played by Mr. F. Alcock, a member of the Society. The whole performance was under the direction of Mr. G. H. Betjemann, who conducted with his customary ability, and to whose careful training the Society is much indebted for the successful position it has attained.

MISSSES MARIANNE and Clara Eissler gave an evening Concert at Princes' Hall, on the 8th ult., at which there was present a numerous and appreciative audience. The talented sisters were fortunate enough to be able to introduce an absolute novelty in the shape of a Sonata by Spohr, for harp and violin, the manuscript of which was presented to them a short time ago by the composer's niece. It can hardly be ranked amongst the higher category of Spohr's chamber works, being one of the many compositions for the instruments named which he wrote for himself and his wife to perform. Nevertheless it bears all the marked characteristics of his style, and is unquestionably a welcome trouvaille for artists who, like the Misses Eissler, can find in it abundant opportunity for executive display. It was beautifully played by the two sisters, who were likewise heard to advantage in a variety of solo pieces, Miss Marianne Eissler being notably successful in her rendering of Dr. Mackenzie's popular "Benedictus," and a charming Cavatina for violin by Mr. Francesco Berger. A third sister, Miss Freda Eissler, also took part in the Concert and exhibited in Schumann's Fantasie (Op. 17) the qualities of a really first-rate pianist.

MISS DORA SCHIRMACHER gave a Pianoforte Recital at Princes' Hall, on the 15th ult., the programme of which included three posthumous pieces by Beethoven, published last year by Breitkopf and Härtel, and now heard for the first time in this country. Albeit comparative trifles, these pieces possess an interest beyond their intrinsic worth as music, because of the pen that wrote them. The first is an Allegretto in C minor (written about 1796), a bright, characteristic little movement, which it is said was originally intended by Beethoven to form the Scherzo of the Pianoforte Sonata in the same key (Op. 10, No. 1). The other two are "Bagatellen," and were written in 1797. Miss Schirmacher shone to greater advantage in these and the lighter pieces of her afternoon's selection than in such heavy undertakings as Weber's A flat Sonata (Op. 39, No. 2), which seemed slightly beyond her reach. Nor could we commend her exaggerated reading of Handel's Air and Variations in D minor. In a Gigue in A, by the Saxon master, and a Prelude and Toccata by Lachner, her playing was infinitely more satisfactory. Miss Schirmacher has a good style and plenty of natural talent, so that continued study ought to work wonders for her.

At the fifty-first performance given by the Musical Artists' Society at Willis's Rooms, on the 4th ult., a new Pianoforte Quintet in C, by Mr. Gerard F. Cobb, was introduced and received with manifest favour. The work is a decided advance upon the Cambridge musician's previous efforts in the direction of chamber composition, the movements (four in number) being clearly laid out and developed with conspicuous adroitness and resource. The Scherzo, which follows an interesting opening Allegro, is perhaps the most attractive section, and this it was that met with the greatest applause; yet the Andante undeniably boasts melodic charm and refinement in no ordinary degree, while the Finale lacks neither interest nor sustained spirit. It may be hoped that Mr. Cobb's Quintet will be heard soon again; it will certainly bear repetition. In its interpretation the composer undertook the pianoforte part, and he had for his coadjutors Messrs. Buziau, Harry Lee, A. Wright, and Albert. The other important pieces of the programme were Dr. Cresser's Quartet in A minor and Mr. Walter Macfarren's Sonata in E minor, for pianoforte and violoncello, the Sonata being played by Miss Dora Bright and Mr. Albert.

MR. C. E. MILLER, the Organist of St. Augustine's and St. Faith's Church, Watling Street, E.C., has just brought to a close a series of most interesting and attractive Organ Recitals, extending over a period of eight months, given by him in the Church. Commencing on the first Thursday in October last, he has, week by week, with only one intermission (when Mr. D. J. Wood, of Exeter Cathedral, occupied the place at the keyboard) afforded to many music lovers an opportunity of hearing an excellent selection of works given on one of the best organs of its size in London. It would scarcely be possible to enumerate here in detail the contents of each programme; suffice it to say that the Recitals have included nearly all Bach's greatest and best known Preludes and Fugues, many of his less familiar works, Mendelssohn's six Sonatas and three Preludes and Fugues, many of the best organ works of Henry Smart,

S. S. Wesley, and other English writers, with plentiful examples of the German School, as exemplified by Hesse, Merkel, Rheinberger, and others, and of the modern French School, as represented by Guilmant, Salomé, Dubois, and others.

MR. WILLIAM NICHOLL gave his last Chamber Concert of the present season at Steinway Hall, on the 3rd ult., when he once more offered a programme of singular interest and merit. It consisted (with the exception of a couple of violin solos played by Miss Lucy Riley) of sets of songs by various composers, so well contrasted in character as to preclude any sense of monotony. First came Brahms's "Gipsy Songs" (Op. 103), interpreted, with notable taste and intelligence, by Miss Louise Phillips, Miss Marguerite Hall, Mr. William Nicholl, and Mr. Wilfred Cunliffe, the pianoforte accompaniment being admirably played by Miss Mary Carmichael. Then Grieg's "Reminiscences of Mountain and Fjord" were alternately rendered by Miss Hall and Mr. Nicholl; and "Four Songs of the Stuarts," composed by Miss Carmichael (given for the first time), were divided in similar fashion between Miss Phillips and Mr. Cunliffe. These efforts proved thoroughly acceptable, and Miss Carmichael's new songs won especial favour. The Concert ended with "Three Songs of the North," arranged by Mr. Malcolm Lawson, and tastefully sung by Mr. William Nicholl, who accompanied himself.

THE annual dinner of the Finsbury Choral Association took place at the Holborn Restaurant, on the 2nd ult., the Chairman being Mr. Waddy, Q.C., M.P., the president of the Society. The guests included Sir John Stainer, Dr. and Mrs. Mackenzie, Dr. Bridge, and other notabilities in the musical world. During the evening allusion was made to the foundation of the new School of Music at Holloway, which will, it is hoped, open its doors to students in the autumn. The Conductor of the Society, Mr. C. J. Dale, referred to the probable programme for the next season, and hinted that the Society had the prospect of the first London performance of a new Oratorio by Dr. Bridge. He also had hopes of a new work to be written by Sir John Stainer for the Association. The speeches were agreeably varied by songs excellently rendered by Madame Clara Samuëll and Mr. Charles Chilley, and violin solos by Mr. Gatehouse, who, among other pieces, played Mackenzie's Benedictus, accompanied by the composer. Two humorous recitations, contributed by Mr. Charles Fry, were very favourably received.

MR. ROBERT GOLDBECK gave, at Devonshire House, on the 9th ult., a Concert performance of the music of his "American Opéra Comique," entitled "Newport." The solos were undertaken by Miss Florence Wright, Miss Sybil Grey, Miss Rosina Brandram, Messrs. William Foxon, Wallace Brownlow, and John Thorman. A small chorus and orchestra assisted, while Mr. and Mrs. Goldbeck helped in the accompaniments at a grand pianoforte, and played the Overture as a duet. We shall not be expected to offer criticism upon this opera, seeing that it was given without stage action, and that not even a synopsis of the plot was printed in the programme for the benefit of the distinguished audience which filled the stately ball-room of Devonshire House. All we can say is, that Mr. Goldbeck's music is of a light and sparkling order, very tuneful, decidedly graceful, and marked by many traits that reveal the skilled musician. The vocal pieces were well rendered, especially by the ladies, the chief success of the afternoon being a "Laughing Song," which Miss Brandram was called upon to repeat.

EXETER HALL was filled with an enthusiastic audience on the occasion of the annual meeting of the Tonic Sol-fa College, on the 20th ult., the chair being taken by Mr. H. L. W. Lawson, M.P. The programme was a pleasant admixture of business and music. Mr. W. C. Harris introduced it with an Organ Recital, and the choirs next sang Handel's chorus "Music, spread thy voice around," Mr. J. Proudman conducting, and Mr. J. T. Proudman presiding at the organ. The report of the council was presented by Mr. R. Griffiths, the secretary. After a glee by the South London Choral Association, under the conductorship of Mr. L. C. Venables, and part-songs by Mr. McNaught's choir and the Tonic Sol-fa Association, the Chairman gave a short address, in which he expressed the sympathy he felt with anything that partook of a popular effort to disseminate a knowledge and love of music. Other addresses were given, and the performances included a composition, "O give thanks unto the Lord," by Mr. C. Iseard, which was written as a sight test, and distributed only just before it was sung.

THE season of Italian Opera at Her Majesty's Theatre, announced by Mr. J. H. Mapleson to commence on the 1st inst., promises at any rate to be curious if not exactly interesting in a strictly musical sense. His statements are not put forward in a manner calculated to inspire confidence, the mere fact that he announces Bizet's "La Jolie Fille de Perth" as the French composer's "last opera" being sufficient to cause general distrust. This is specially unfortunate, because Mr. Mapleson asks for faith in his promises on the ground of past public services. That in former times he did render excellent service to art must be readily admitted, but gratitude, we are told, is a lively sense of favours to come, and so Mr. Mapleson will probably find. The majority of his company are unknown, but he has secured Signor Bevignani as one of his Conductors, and he promises an excellent band and chorus. On all grounds it is to be hoped that he will succeed in his enterprise, as healthy competition is always desirable, and there should certainly be room for more than one operatic enterprise in this vast metropolis.

MADAME FRICKENHAUS drew from unusually varied sources the programme of her Recital at Princes' Hall, on the 4th ult. This, combined with the attraction of her own name, served to bring together a goodly assemblage of amateurs, despite the heavy list of Concerts that made the day in question one of the busiest of the month. Beginning with the older masters, Madame Frickenhaus displayed the perfection of neat fingering in a Bach Fugue in A minor and Rameau's Tambourin and Rigaudon; while to Mozart's A minor Rondo and Beethoven's Sonata in E (Op. 109) she brought the feeling and intelligence of a refined, thoughtful artist. The second group of pieces included a Berceuse by Kjerulf, Mendelssohn's Scherzo à Capriccio (given with delicious crispness), Jensen's "Légende," a Toccata by Walter Macfarren, and Schumann's "Faschingsschwank," the last-named being invested with admirable vigour and contrast. Some pieces by Chopin and Henselt, and a Valse of Moszkowski's completed the selection, to which Madame Frickenhaus did justice down to the final note.

ON the 6th ult. Mr. Arthur Hill read a paper on "Rate-aided Schools of Music" before the Musical Association, in advocacy of a Government aid on behalf of Intermediate Musical Education. There was nothing between the very elementary instruction given in schools and that afforded in such institutions as the Royal Academy of Music and other Colleges in London. If it could be provided, as was the case in Ireland, that the terms "science and art" should include the science and art of music, local authorities might appropriate to this purpose a portion of the legal rate of 1d. in the £, and the sum thus granted (with local subscriptions) might be supplemented by a grant from the Imperial Exchequer of a sum of equal amount. In this manner such schools as he advocated might be established at 100 centres throughout the kingdom at a cost to the State not exceeding £25,000 per annum. This was a very modest sum, considering that in England and Wales alone £40,000 a year was spent in hearing little children sing by ear.

HERR SCHÖNBERGER was heard at his very best at the Recital which he gave in Princes' Hall, on the 21st ult. His choice of works was also irreproachable, excepting only the Liszt transcriptions of Bach's Organ Fugues, which satisfied only as a medium for technical display. Herr Schönberger pleased his hearers by his thoughtful, refined interpretation of Beethoven's early Sonata (Op. 2, No. 3). He dashed off the Finale with ease and brilliancy. Another admirable performance was that of Schubert's long but poetical Sonata in C minor. The work gave the pianist many opportunities of displaying his best qualities; his rich "singing" tone, for example, coming out wonderfully in the Adagio. Three simple German dances, by Beethoven, extended and ornamented with some skill by Herr Seiss, a modern virtuoso, were prettily played and much applauded. A selection of Chopin pieces came late in the afternoon, but those of the audience who remained were well rewarded for their patience.

THE Church of St. John the Divine, Kennington, has recently been completed by the addition of a tower and spire. Special services have been held to celebrate the occasion. On Tuesday, the 7th ult., Gounod's "Messe Solennelle" was sung in the morning, and in the evening the Canticles were the well known setting in A by Martin, and the Anthem Beethoven's "Hallelujah." On Friday, the 10th ult., a special Musical Service was given, comprising nearly the whole of Parts II. and III. of Gounod's "Redemption." The accompaniments were played by Mr. C. H. Kempling, the Organist of the Church. The chief solos were sung by Master Cousins, Mr. George James, and Mr. W. H. Hennings, occasional assistance being given by Masters Taylor and Sydney and Messrs. Schmidt and Pizzey. On Sunday, the 12th ult., Weber's Mass in E flat was given at the Communion Service. In the evening the Canticles were those of Stanford in A, the Anthem being "It came even to pass," by the late Sir F. A. Gore Ouseley.

DR. CHARLES VINCENT gave a Concert on the 9th ult., at the Drill Hall, Hampstead, when his new Cantata "The Mermaid," for ladies' voices, was performed for the first time. The libretto, founded upon Hans Andersen's fairy tale, is the work of Mr. Lewis Novra. The Cantata is very simply constructed, and the composer has evidently aimed at producing a work suitable for small societies or schools. The music is easy, tuneful, and pleasing; and a distinctive feature is made of the recitations which carry on the narrative. The work was given by a choir of fifty ladies, under the Conductorship of Dr. Vincent. The soloists were Miss Amelia Gruhn, Miss Bell, Miss R. Bell, Mrs. Howard, Mrs. Underwood, Mrs. Grylls, and Mr. Grylls. Mrs. Vincent accompanied, and Mr. Fred. Berridge was the reciter. The second part of the Concert comprised two violin solos by Signor Luigi Meo, and songs by Miss M. Tomlinson, concluding with a duet by Dr. Vincent, sung by Mr. and Mrs. Grylls.

THERE was a large attendance at Mr. Lawrence Kellie's first Vocal Recital this season, which took place at Steinway Hall on the 7th ult. Mr. Kellie brought forward, as usual, a number of songs from his own pen, including three that were now heard for the first time. Of these "A Leave-taking," which was encored, seems destined to meet with most favour. He also sang with considerable charm and refinement a couple of songs by Signor Tosti, accompanied by the composer, and joined Madame Belle Cole in Mary Carmichael's graceful duet, "It was a lover and his lass," the composer accompanying in this case also. Madame Belle Cole contributed a couple of solos, one of them the Recital-giver's effective song "Douglas Gordon," and Miss Robertson (Mrs. Stanley Stubbs) also sang; while Miss Anna Lang played some violin pieces and Miss Annie Hughes recited. The second Recital took place on the 28th ult., too late for notice this month.

MESSRS. LUDWIG and Whitehouse gave their second Chamber Concert on the 14th ult. Princes' Hall was fairly filled, and the execution of an attractive scheme gave unqualified satisfaction. The Concert-givers, aided by Messrs. G. Collins, A. Gibson, and H. Heydrich, did justice to Brahms's Quintet in F (Op. 88), besides taking part with Messrs. Collins and Gibson in a remarkably good performance of Beethoven's Quartet in B flat (Op. 18, No. 6). Grieg's Sonata in C minor, for violin and pianoforte, spiritedly played by Mr. Ludwig and Madame Haas, was heard with keen appreciation and enjoyment; while Mr. Whitehouse's violoncello solos by Davidoff and Klengel elicited the warmest applause of the evening. Miss Liza Lehmann sang some well chosen songs in her customary refined and pleasing manner, accompanied by Herr Heydrich.

THE London Church Choir Association held its annual Festival Service in St. Paul's Cathedral, on Thursday evening, the 16th ult. Thirty-six choirs, numbering in all 960 voices, took part, and in order to ensure precision in the singing of this large force, trumpets and trombones were used with excellent effect. The processional Hymn, "Forward! be our watchword," was sung to a tune by Mr. C. E. Miller, Organist of St. Augustine's, Watling Street. Mr. Miller also supplied the double chants for the Psalms. The setting of the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis was that in G, by Mr. W. A. C. Cruickshank, and the Anthem was Sir John Stainer's "My hope is in the Everlasting," the tenor solo in which was sung by Mr. G. W. R. Hoare, of St. Botolph's, Aldersgate Street. The sermon was preached by the Dean of Rochester. Dr. G. C. Martin conducted the service, and Mr. W. Hodge presided at the organ.

THE chief feature of interest at the Concert given by Mr. Luard Selby at the Steinway Hall, on the 24th ult., was the performance of several compositions by the Concert-giver, the most important being a Suite of six pieces bearing the curious title "Potter Fell." The music is graceful and refined, and was expressively rendered by the composer. Miss Marie Douglas was heard to advantage in an Elegy and Berceuse for the violin, by Mr. Selby, and two songs by the same composer were also favourably received. In addition to the violinist named, Mr. Selby was assisted by Mrs. Mary Davies, who sang with her accustomed charm; Madame Edith Wynne, Miss Hutton, Miss Perugini, Mr. A. Greenwood, and Mr. Prosper Burnett (violoncello). A recitation, effectively given by Miss Rossi, was included in the programme.

MRS. A. J. LAYTON gave her annual Concert at the Chelsea Town Hall, on the 7th ult. The programme consisted of Pergolesi's "Stabat Mater" for female voices, sung by Mrs. Layton's ladies' choir, and a miscellaneous selection, including Mendelssohn's Sonata in B flat, for pianoforte and violoncello, played by the Concert-giver and Mr. Whitehouse; and the "Gipsy Songs" of Brahms, sung by Miss Kate Cherry, Miss Jessie King, Mr. Howden Tingey, and Mr. Alfred J. Layton; the pianoforte part was played by Mr. Charles G. Lamb. Songs were contributed by Miss José Sherrington, Madame Antoinette Sterling, Miss Jessie King, and Mr. Alfred J. Layton. The Concert concluded with Mendelssohn's Motet for female voices, "Laude Dominum." Mrs. Layton conducted.

A PERFORMANCE of Sullivan's "Golden Legend" was given, under the conductorship of Mr. Charles Stewart Macpherson, by the Streatham Choral Society, at the Town Hall, Streatham, on Friday, the 3rd ult. The choir sang admirably and with true perception of expression and phrasing, a great effect being made in the two unaccompanied choruses, "O gladsome light" and "O pure in heart." The solos were entrusted to Miss Kate Norman, Miss Greta Williams, Mr. Braxton Smith, Mr. Charles Copland, and Mr. John Gritton. Mr. Herbert Lake (pianoforte) and Mr. W. J. Kipps (harmonium) played the difficult accompaniments with excellent effect. The bells specially constructed for the Cantata were used on the occasion, and were played by Mr. W. P. Rivers.

THE St. James's Choral Society brought its first season to a close by a capital Concert, given in the New Hall, Knatchbull Road, Camberwell, on Tuesday evening, the 7th ult., when Van Bree's Cantata "St. Cecilia's Day" was admirably rendered, the soloist being Miss Nellie Epps. In the second part the choral portions were "Ye tutelary Gods" ("Belshazzar"), Handel; "Wedding Chorus" ("Rose Maiden"), Cowen; "The Sea King," Smart, and "Good night, beloved," Pinsuti. Mr. J. S. Holliday, Miss Epps, Mrs. Alfred Avery, and Messrs. Robins and Sargent contributed solos, and Miss Ellen Bliss and Miss Murby were the solo pianists. Mr. R. Felix Blackbee conducted, Mr. Alfred Avery accompanied, and Mr. F. Deacon Blackbee presided at the American organ.

ON the 1st and 8th ult. two Concerts were given at St. James's Hall, by the String Band of the Royal Artillery, under the Conductorship of Mr. L. Zaverthal. At the second Concert a new Symphony in C minor, composed by the Conductor, was produced with great success, the Scherzo in particular being especially noticeable for the brightness of the subject and the ingenuity of its construction. The clever scoring of the whole work testified to the musical ability of the author. A Pizzicato "Al Fresco," from the same pen, was enthusiastically received. The Fantasia on airs from "Rigoletto," and an arrangement from Gounod's "Faust" were well played, the latter work being given with much delicacy and verve.

THE International Hall, a new concert-room of moderate proportions, forming part of Monico's Restaurant, Piccadilly Circus, was inaugurated on the 11th ult. by a company of Spanish singers, dancers, and instrumentalists, who have since been giving Concerts daily in the afternoon and evening. The performances of the "Estudiantina Española" are too familiar to need description. Suffice it to say that the present players show characteristic precision and spirit in the execution of their national tunes; while the singing and dancing, if not of equal merit, afford a sufficiently vivid idea of the manner in which these amusements—we can scarcely apply here the term "art"—are practised throughout the length and breadth of Spain.

THE Kensington Symphony Society gave its first Concert at Addison Hall, Holland Park, on the 24th ult. The selection of the programme was, perhaps, prompted partly by that "ambition which o'erleaps itself"; the performance was, however, on the whole, creditable. With careful training and the experience which only time can give, better results will, no doubt, be obtained. The vocalists who assisted were Miss Helen Pierpoint, Mrs. Herbert Wesson, Mr. Trefelyn David, and Mr. Charles Bonham—the efforts of Mrs. Wesson and Mr. Bonham, especially, being received with well merited favour. A pianoforte solo by Mr. Sidney Naylor was, it need hardly be said, rendered with accustomed ability. Mr. Robert Jefford conducted.

THE St. Bride's Choral Class gave its second Concert at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon Street, on the 16th ult., under the patronage of the Lord and Lady Mayoress, the Earl and Countess of Meath, Sir Edmund Haye Currie, and others. The first part of the programme consisted of a Cantata, "A Daughter of Moab," by J. Guest. The solo parts were sung by members of the class, and the orchestral accompaniments were played by Mrs. Layton's violin class. The second part consisted of songs by Miss Kaye Butterworth, Miss Jessie King, Mr. Howden Tingey, and Mr. Alfred J. Layton, and recitations by the Rev. H. C. Shuttleworth and Mr. Evan Franks. Miss Helen Gull presided at the pianoforte, and Mrs. Layton conducted.

MR. EUGÈNE GIGOUT, the eminent French organist and composer, gave an Organ Recital at the Bow and Bromley Institute, on the 4th ult. The chief pieces on the programme were: Toccata and Fugue in D minor (Bach), Offertoire on Christmas Hymns and Intermezzo (Boellmann), Grand Chœur and Suite de Trois Morceaux—Marche rustique, Lied, Marche de Fête—(Gigout). The last was especially effective and original. An improvisation on the popular melody "The Minstrel Boy" was heartily applauded by the large audience. Miss Douilly sang a new sacred song, "He is risen," by Arnold Dolmetsch, with accompaniment of pianoforte, organ, and violin, which was much applauded.

THE Primrose Hill Choral Society gave an excellent Concert under the direction of Mr. George Calkin, on Tuesday evening, the 14th ult., at the Vestry Hall, Hampstead, in aid of the funds of the Boys' Home, Regent's Park Road, when Mendelssohn's "Walpurgis Night" was performed, followed by a miscellaneous selection of music. The following performers kindly gave their services: Miss Mary Willis, Madame Bolingbroke, Messrs. Lance, and Arthur Calkin, and Claxton. Instrumentalists: Mrs. Francis Ralph, Mr. T. H. Wright, and Mr. Ellis Roberts; reciter, Mr. Herbert James; and accompanist, Miss Ada Calkin.

THE annual Concert of the Regent's Park Choral Society took place on the 7th ult., at Albany Street, in aid of the Christ Church Visiting Society. The programme included "Lauda Sion" (Mendelssohn), "The three Seasons" (Weber), the Motet "Distracted with care" (Haydn), "The voice of Spring" (Veaco), "O Swallow, pr'ythee stay" (Reay), and the "Fisherman's Good-night" (Bishop), in which the choir displayed good qualities. The solos in the Cantatas were taken by members of the Society, who also contributed a pleasing vocal and instrumental selection. Mr. John C. Ward conducted as usual, and Miss Addison presided at the pianoforte.

THE Wind Instrument Chamber Music Society gave the third and last of its opening series of Concerts at the Royal Academy of Music, on the 3rd ult. A Concertstück, by Rietz (Op. 41), and Rubinstein's Quintet (Op. 55) for pianoforte and wind instruments were the principal works performed, the executants being Messrs. Vivian, Malsch, Clinton, Borsdorf, T. Wotton, and Eugene Dubrucq. Four Trios by Brahms for female voices, with accompaniment of horns and harps (Op. 17), were also given by a select choir of Academy students. The Society, which will hold a meeting on November 8, proposes to give a second series of Concerts next winter.

HERR WALDEMAR MEYER gave a Chamber Concert at Princes' Hall, on Wednesday afternoon, the 22nd ult., at which he played, among other pieces, Bach's Chaconne, Handel's Sonata in A, and a Suite for violin and pianoforte, by Franz Ries. In the rendering of these compositions Herr Meyer exhibited his usual excellent qualities, and he had an able coadjutor in Herr Gustav Ernest. Mozart's "Non paventer," and some songs by Schumann, Brahms, and Lassen were sung by Frau Schoepffer, a Dresden artist, who displayed a powerful soprano voice and good artistic style.

MR. J. T. HUTCHINSON, of the Royal Academy of Music, gave his annual Concert at the Princes' Hall on the 23rd ult., in which he was assisted by his pupils, Miss Amy Brooks, Miss Mildred Harwood, Mr. W. Price, and the members of the Holborn Choral Society. Mr. Hutchinson gave, amongst other selections, Pergolesi's "O Lord, have mercy upon me," Matthay's "There be none of beauty's daughters" (accompanied by the composer), and Gounod's "Le nom de Marie." Mr. Harvey Löhr played Kirchner's Concert arrangement of Dvorák's Bohemian Rhapsody in D most admirably.

THE annual dinner of the Strolling Players' Amateur Orchestral Society was held on the 18th ult., in the Café Royal, Regent Street. Mr. F. Sutton Hawes presided, and there was a representative gathering of members of the Society and guests. The chairman announced his own resignation of the office of chairman of the committee, and that his place would be filled by Lord Herschel. He stated that the aim of the Society was to produce high-class works, and it had been the means of introducing to the world several artists of ability previously unknown to fame. The dinner was succeeded by a musical entertainment.

AT a Concert given by the St. Mary's Choral Society, Islington, on the 10th ult., under the conductorship of Mr. Sidney Hann, Jensen's Cantata "The Feast of Adonis" and Mr. Charles Harford Lloyd's "Song of Balder" were given with good effect. The solos were taken by Miss Emily Armfield. Some violin solos were played by Miss Nora Peache. Mr. Sidney Hann, the Conductor, gave a pianoforte solo by Chopin, which was encored, and in conjunction with Mr. Erskine Allon, who acted as accompanist, he performed some duets by Jensen and Moszkowski. Some part-songs were also sung by the Choir.

MISS MEREDYTH ELLIOTT, a young contralto of considerable promise, gave an Evening Concert at St. James's Hall, on the 1st ult., in the presence of a numerous audience. Miss Elliott possesses a voice of sympathetic quality, which is well produced and, generally speaking, is used in a manner that indicates careful training. She was heard to advantage in Schubert's "Serenade" and in a new song by Mr. Joseph Barnby called "The Lifted Veil," the delivery of which was much applauded. Several well known vocalists also appeared, and Mr. Sidney Naylor accompanied.

AT the Parish Room of the Church of St. Thomas's, Godolphin Road, W., an Evening Concert was given on Wednesday, the 8th ult., in aid of the Organist Fund. An interesting programme was given by Miss Alice Parry, Madame Mina Cheshire, Mr. Gilbert Porteous, and Mr. Reuben Holmes. Solos for violin, violé d'amour, and pianoforte were played by Miss Madeleine Galton, Mr. F. Louis Schneider, and Mr. Charles Fowler. Some recitations were given by Mr. David Beveridge, and the accompanist was Miss Frances Goodall.

MISS ROSE DAFFORNE's third annual Concert took place at the Morley Hall, Hackney, on Tuesday the 14th ult. Miss Dafforne was supported by Miss Julia Jones, Miss Lily Dafforne, Messrs. Dalgety Henderson, Harry Stubbs, W. G. Forington, Mr. Alfred Hollins (the blind pianist), Miss Daisy Ashton (violinist), and Mr. Woodford Reynolds (violoncello). A male voice quartet, under the direction of Mr. R. de Lacy, sang several part-songs effectively, and the accompaniments were played by Mr. Fountain Meen.

THE St. George's Choral Association, Willesden Lane, Brondesbury, concluded their second season on the 10th ult., when Stainer's "Daughter of Jairus" and a miscellaneous selection were given, under the direction of Mr. F. G. Edwards, Conductor of the Society. The vocalists were Mrs. Edwards, Mr. H. L. Fulkerson, and Mr. Charles Copland. Mrs. Smart, the valued accompanist of the Association, gave a tasteful rendering of Chopin's Ballade (Op. 47).

A PERFORMANCE of Sterndale Bennett's "Woman of Samaria" was given at the Parish Church, St. Mary, Newington, on Wednesday evening, the 8th ult., by the choir, assisted by the Newington Choral Society. The solos were effectively rendered by Messrs. J. Hudson and Campton, and two of Mr. Stedman's choir boys. The choruses were admirably executed under the direction of Mr. W. Rayment Kirby, Organist and Choirmaster of the Church. Mr. E. H. Turpin ably presided at the organ.

AN interesting Concert was given at the Birkbeck Institution on Friday, the 10th ult., under the able direction of Mr. G. A. Parker, teacher of the ladies' violin classes, when some capital selections were well rendered by the violin and violoncello classes. The vocalists were Madame Belle Cole, Miss Amy Wagstaff, Mr. Arthur Thompson, and Mr. A. Tucker. Violin solos were played by Miss Grace Carter and Mr. G. A. Parker, and Mr. Claude Hamilton gave some recitations.

MISS MAUD LESLIE gave her third annual Concert at the Surrey Masonic Hall, Camberwell, on Tuesday, the 14th ult., when she provided a miscellaneous programme of an attractive character, contributed by Miss Leslie herself, Madame Reichelmann, Madame Montague Neave, Miss Marchant, Miss Ada Molten (violin), Misses Emily Terry, Kate A. Davies (pianoforte), Messrs. Frank Swinford, James Budd, Sydney Herbert, H. Glynn, R. Rae, and Frank W. Tagg (elocutionist).

MR. ALFRED J. EYRE has been invited to conduct the Salisbury Diocesan Choral Festival at the Cathedral, on Thursday, the 6th inst., and, with the permission of the Directors of the Crystal Palace, has accepted the invitation. The music will include Lloyd's Service in E flat, an Anthem by the late Sir Frederick Ouseley, Handel's Overture to "Saul," and other works; and the choirs will number nearly 3,000 voices, with full orchestra and organ, the latter to be played by the Cathedral Organist, Mr. C. F. South.

THE Choral Society of Merchant Taylors' School gave its fourteenth annual Concert on the 14th ult. The Cantata chosen was Sterndale Bennett's "May Queen." The Conductor was Mr. Edmund Rogers, Organist of St. Michael's, Paddington. The solo parts were sustained by F. B. Wood (May Queen), W. W. Dearle (Queen), Mr. F. Given Wilson (Lover), and Mr. Frederic Penna (Robin Hood). The rest of the Concert consisted of part-songs and instrumental and vocal solos.

STAINER'S Cantata "The Daughter of Jairus" was given at St. Botolph's, Bishopsgate, on the 22nd ult. The choir was reinforced by the choir of St. Andrew's, Stockwell, and the accompaniments were sustained by a stringed band in addition to the organ. The solo parts were sung by Masters Francis and Gregory, Mr. Dan Smith, and Mr. Salisbury. Dr. G. C. Martin, of St. Paul's Cathedral, presided at the organ, and Mr. E. Thatcher conducted.

THE North-East London Choral Society gave the second Concert of the present season at the Morley Hall, Hackney, on the 22nd ult., when an excellent performance of Cowen's "Rose Maiden" and a miscellaneous selection were given. The soloists were Madame Clara West, Miss Anna C. Smith, Mr. J. H. Mullerhausen, and Mr. John Ortnier; pianoforte, Mr. Alfred E. Izard; harmonium, Mr. Louis B. Prout; Conductor, Mr. John E. West.

MISS ALICE GOMES gave a Concert on Tuesday, the 21st ult., at the Princes' Hall. She opened the Concert with a couple of songs by Franz, and in the second part contributed one by Kjerulf, singing all with rare charm of voice and expression. The Concert-giver was assisted by Mrs. Bertha Moore, Miss Netty Carpenter (violin), Miss Jeanne Douste (pianoforte), Mr. Henry Piercy, Mr. Piunket Greene, and Mr. Herbert Thorndike.

THE annual Concert for the benefit of the Postmen's Rest and Convalescent Home at Brighton took place at St. James's Hall, on the 2nd ult. The following performers gave their services: Mesdames Antoinette Sterling, Minnie Gwynne, Miss Effie Clements, and Miss Lena Law; Messrs. Banks, Donnell Balfe, David Hughes, and McCall Chambers. Violinists: Mr. von Czeke and Miss Freda Marsden. Solo pianist, Miss Lily von Kornatski.

THE Clapham Choral Society (Conductor, Mr. Walter Mackway) gave the last of its Subscription Concerts this season on the 6th ult., at Belmont Hall, Clapham. The programme consisted of madrigals, part-songs, and solos by Miss Hilda Wilson and Mr. Braxton Smith; accompanist, Mr. Sydney Hann. The unaccompanied singing of the choir was worthy of great praise.

ON the 8th ult., Bennett's "May Queen" was given in the Defoe Rooms by the West Hackney Choral Society, under the direction of Mr. F. L. Kett. The soloists were Miss Julia Jones, Mrs. Harding Taylor, Messrs. Mullerhausen and J. Webb. Mr. W. Davis presided at the pianoforte. The second part of the Concert comprised a solo by each of the principals and several part-songs by the choir.

MENDELSSOHN'S "St. Paul" was given on Sunday afternoon, the 19th ult., at St. John the Evangelist, Waterloo Road, when the solos were taken by Master H. Warren, Miss Louie Lancaster, Mr. A. Davey, and Mr. Frederick Winton. This was the tenth and last performance given during the winter months at the church.

AT a meeting of the Directors of the Royal Academy of Music, held on the 27th ult., Mr. Joseph Bennett was unanimously elected a member of that body.

REVIEWS.

The National Dance Music of Scotland. Arranged for the pianoforte by Alexander Mackenzie, with additions by his son, Alexander Campbell Mackenzie. Dedicated by express permission to the Queen. (Pianoforte Albums, Nos. 32, 33, 34.) [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

SINCE the days when Oswald published his first Collection of Scottish Melodies, some century and a half ago, his example has never lacked enthusiastic followers. The Collection of Reels and Strathspeys, published by Bremner in 1758; those of Nathaniel Gow (1766-1831); and of the famous Niel, his son (1796-1823); Johnson's Museum, with McGibbon's Scots' tunes; Donald Macdonald's Ancient Martial Music of Scotland, called "Piobaireachd"; the admirable Collection of Strathspeys, &c., by J. T. Surenne; Thomson's Collection, Aird's Reels, Rutherford's Dance Tunes, Albyn's "Anthology," 1816-1818; George Farquhar Graham and John Muir Wood's Collection of Scottish Songs, and other collections of melodies of the north are full of most interesting specimens of this class of music. Books like those of Graham and Wood, accompanied as they are by most copious and learned annotations concerning the history of the tunes given, their authors when known, and the circumstances surrounding them, are among the most valued treasures of the cosmopolitan musical student. Such a collection as that now before us is very welcome. It was compiled by one who in his time was unrivalled for his skill as a performer of the old Scottish tunes, and whose extensive knowledge of them was unequalled. There are three books, containing altogether two hundred melodies, Strathspeys and Reels alternately, with other dance measures. The harmonies are simple, yet full of character, and the tunes are arranged in a convenient order as to key. They begin with melodies in G major, which are followed by others in E minor, G minor, and B flat major, these forming the first book. The second book (No. 33) opens with tunes in D major, followed by some in B minor, in F major, and D minor. The third book has tunes in A major, A minor, and C major. Some of the airs belong to such an accommodating character that they have been claimed as English and even as Irish. "Petticoat loose," given in this collection, is a jig tune which has been printed many times in dance books from about the year 1758. There are English words to it, and the air has been claimed to be Irish. Other melodies here given, such as "Speed the plough," "Orange and the Blue," known also as "Kitty Jones," might be singled out as of the same doubtful origin. It is enough to know, however, that their popularity has been preserved in Scotland, and the spirit of their melodic phrases will make them welcome to wider circles through the medium of their present form. If a suggestion may be made, it would be that an arrangement for the violin with the pianoforte would be very acceptable, and would greatly assist in making known, in a very useful form, one of the best and most copious Collections of the National Dance Music of Scotland that have been given to the world for many years.

Chopin, and other Musical Essays. By Henry T. Finck.
[London: T. Fisher Unwin.]

THAT Mr. Finck—who has already made his mark by a clever work on "Romantic Love and Personal Beauty"—has no affinity with the critical temper of his namesake, Schumann's contemporary, is speedily apparent from the tone of the first essay in this interesting volume. In it he advances claims to pre-eminence on behalf of Chopin which are all the more noticeable because he is at the same time an ardent Wagnerite. His opinions are often heterodox, even audacious, but they never offend one, because, though an enthusiast, he is happily not a bigot. He never seeks to extol his favourite musical divinities by disparaging or vilifying the idols of others. And he is always suggestive—he sets one thinking. Not the least interesting portion of his thoughtful essay on "Music and Morals" is the fragment of autobiography on page 157-8: "It was the irresistible power of Wagner's music that first made me go to Europe, and changed the whole current of my life. After graduating from Harvard I had only a few dollars in my pocket; but instead of trying to find employment and earn my daily bread, I recklessly borrowed five hundred dollars of a good-natured uncle and went to Europe, for the sole purpose of attending the first Bayreuth Festival. . . . It was the wild enthusiasm inspired in me by Wagner's earlier operas that led me irresistibly to Bayreuth, and I really would have been willing to toil as a slave for years rather than miss this Festival." As an instance of the catholicity of Mr. Finck's taste we have mentioned his simultaneous devotion to Wagner and Chopin. The reason why the latter has been denied a foremost position he finds in what, "for want of a better term, may be called æsthetic Jumboism"—in other words, the exaggerated admiration for mammoth dimensions. On this text Mr. Finck enlarges with much force and point. He ascribes the tendency to depreciate Chopin, still to be found amongst ultra-Teutons, to the natural antipathy between the Slavonic and Teutonic mind, and has no hesitation in proclaiming him to be "as distinctly superior to all other pianoforte composers as Wagner is to all other opera composers." We cannot agree with Mr. Finck on this point, but as we have said above, his freedom from animosity disarms hostile criticism, and on many other topics we find ourselves in complete unison with his attitude. For example, all he has to say on the inadvisability of arranging Chopin's pianoforte pieces for orchestra strikes us as most sensible and discriminating criticism. "Chopin," he says, "spoke the language of the pianoforte. His pieces are so idiomatic that they cannot be translated into orchestral language any more than Heine's lyrics can be translated into English." On the legitimate use of the tempo rubato, again, Mr. Finck's remarks are excellent. He is to be congratulated too on the choice of interesting subjects for his essays. That on "How composers work" is full of interesting information for the lay reader. He shows, for example, what a notable part the personal element has played as a motive power of inspiration, and treats the subject of improvisation at considerable length and in a most intelligent fashion. Apropos of the stimulating effect that locomotion seems to exert on the creative faculties, he might have mentioned the case of Berlioz. Of Wagner he mentions several characteristic traits communicated to him by Herr Seidl, the eminent Conductor; but his defence of Wagner's mania for millinery does not seem to us very effective. Under the title "Schumann," Mr. Finck has given a very readable summary of the contents of the two volumes of letters recently published by Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel. Papers on the "Italian and German Vocal Styles" and "German Opera in New York" complete this decidedly attractive and welcome addition to the belles lettres of music.

Twelve Songs. By Dora Bright.
[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THE words of these songs have been selected from Herrick, Shakespeare, Longfellow, Moore, Charles Kingsley, and others, and their musical setting shows a commendable amount of constructive talent and thoughtfulness. There is also an apparent endeavour to avoid the tendency exhibited by some young composers to write their songs more in the form of pianoforte solos with vocal accompaniment, than to adopt the reverse process observed by the old writers whose songs have achieved a lasting popularity. For this we owe a debt to the modern German musicians, who were probably driven to the device by the peculiar qualities of the national vocal organs and the tempting luxury of the tones of modern pianofortes. It would be unfair to expect composers, especially if they be pianists, to be altogether oblivious of the claims of the instrument with which they propose to accompany their vocal designs; but it would be as well if all who write songs were to follow, and, if possible, improve upon the model these twelve songs offer.

Chant du Soir ("Evening Song"). For violin and pianoforte. By J. Jacques Haakman. Arranged as a string quartet by the Composer.

Souvenir. Morceau de Salon for Violin and Pianoforte. By J. Jacques Haakman.

Elégie pour Viola (ou Violon ou Violoncelle), avec accompagnement de Pianoforte. Par G. Saint-George.
[Charles Woolhouse.]

THE Evening Song has already appeared as a violin solo with pianoforte accompaniment, and it is now issued arranged for a string quartet. The subject is eminently suited for the purpose of a quartet, and its beauty is augmented rather than diminished by the arrangement. None of the component parts present technical difficulties, therefore it should meet with favour amongst performers who wish for a means whereby to display their powers of expression rather than execution.

Souvenir is a charming little morceau; and, although somewhat Wagnerian in treatment, it is an excellent piece of writing. The melody is introduced by a short Andante accompanied by arpeggio chords, and the principal theme then follows accompanied by triplets. This effect is very good, but the use of triplets leaves an impression that the climax has been anticipated, which even the doubling of the part does not remove. On the whole, the merits rather than the demerits of the composition are its prominent features, while the entire work is musicianlike and attractive. Each of the Three Character Pieces has its especial attraction, for they are tuneful and respectively characteristic. The thanks of viola players are due to Herr Haakman for giving them some more solos to add to the small répertoire of suitable pieces already published. These compositions, on account of their beauty and excellence, should be in the hands of all viola players. Mr. Saint-George's Elégie for viola (or violin or violoncello) is of a kind which is at once graceful, artistic, and popular. It will make an excellent solo for performers on any of the three instruments for which it is arranged, but the Elégie will be found most effective and most useful as a viola solo.

FOREIGN NOTES.

UNDER the auspices of Signor Sonzogno, Gluck's "Orphée" was revived at the Paris Théâtre Italien on the 9th ult., with Madame Hastreiter in the title part, so successfully sustained by that lady during last winter at Rome, when the opera in question obtained a considerable

"run." The gifted prima donna met with a most flattering reception, orchestra and chorus are described as having been excellent, while the mise-en-scène is said to have scarcely satisfied reasonable expectations.

Besides the Concerts which are to take place during the Paris Exhibition in the Trocadéro, M. Alexandre Guilmant will give his annual Organ Recitals in the same place on the 13th and 27th inst. M. Colonne will conduct the orchestra, and it is proposed to make the Recitals of exceptional interest for the benefit of Exhibition visitors. The first of the five Grand Exhibition Concerts of classical music took place at the Trocadéro on the 11th ult., under the direction of M. Lamoureux. The Conductors of the remaining Concerts will be MM. Colonne, Garcin, Danbé, and Vianesi respectively.

M. Massenet's new opera "Esclarmonde" was brought out at the Paris Opéra Comique on the 15th ult., with Mdlle. Sybil Sanderson and M. Gibert in the principal parts, and was very well received, the work having been, moreover, superbly mounted.

As already announced the Bayreuth Festspiele will be resumed this year on the 21st of next month, and will embrace alternate performances of "Parsifal," "Tristan und Isolde," and "Die Meistersinger." No official announcement has as yet been made concerning the principal artists engaged, but every effort is being made in order to render the performances as attractive and unique as ever.

The entire series of Wagner's music-dramas, from "Rienzi" to the "Nibelungen," will be produced at the Royal Opera of Berlin, for the first time there, during the evenings of the 3rd and 20th inst., "Parsifal" being excluded from the series.

Herr Angelo Neumann's Richard Wagner Theatre is to become a permanent institution, the energetic impresario having projected a series of performances of Wagner's works in the different capitals and other musical centres both of Europe and America. Encouraged by the recent success of the "Nibelungen" Tetralogy at St. Petersburg, "Die Meistersinger" and "Tristan und Isolde" are to be produced at that capital by the same company next year.

Wagner's early opera "Die Feen" having met with such conspicuous success at the Munich Hof-Theater, where it had recently reached its twenty-seventh performance, the directors of that institution are credited with the intention of mounting also the still earlier "Liebesverbot," characterised by Wagner himself as a "peccadillo of his youth," and the score of which is in the possession of the Royal Library of Munich. An interesting and amusing narrative of the circumstances attending the first performance (at Magdeburg) of the "Liebesverbot" will be found in the March number, 1883, of this journal.

Johannes Brahms has been presented with the freedom of the City of Hamburg, his native place.

The reputed last composition from the pen of Beethoven has just been acquired by the Beethoven Museum at Heiligenstadt. It consists of a humorous canon set to the words, "Hier ist das Werk, sorgt für das Geld! 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12 Ducaten" (Here is the work, let the money be forthcoming; 1, 2, 3, &c., ducats). This interesting manuscript, of which mention is made in Nohl's biography of the master, has been hitherto in the possession of the son of Karl Holz, the friend of Beethoven.

A splendid new organ, constructed by Messrs. Sauer, of Frankfurt-on-Oder, has just been consecrated at St. Thomas's Church, Leipzig.

Hector Berlioz's seldom heard gigantic Te Deum was performed by the Porges'sche Gesang-Verein, at Munich, on the 9th ult., and appears to have created a profound impression.

The programme of the first Westphalian Music Festival, held at Dortmund on the 26th and 27th ult., included Handel's "Messiah," a number of excerpts from Wagner's music-dramas, Liszt's symphonic poem "Les Préludes," and Beethoven's C minor Symphony.

The tenth Silesian Music Festival will be held at Görlitz between the 2nd and 5th inst., and will comprise, amongst its more important performances, that of Bach's Magnificat, part of the third act of Wagner's "Parsifal," Joseph Rheinberger's choral legend "Christophorus," and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

At Freiburg-im-Breisgau, a new opera by Wilhelm Bruch, entitled "Hirlanda"—a melodious and effective work, the papers tell us—has just been first produced and has met with a very favourable reception.

Mr. Franz Rummel has been making a tour of nine weeks, travelling through Scandinavia, Denmark, and Sweden. He appeared at the Philharmonic Concerts in Copenhagen, and played also twice before the King and Queen, besides giving five Concerts of his own. In Stockholm Mr. Rummel appeared at the Opera, and gave in addition two Concerts with very great success; he was decorated by the King with the Order of Gustavus Wasa. During Mr. Rummel's stay, the Queen of Sweden played Brahms's Symphony to him.

Mr. Whitney Coombs, the esteemed Organist of the American Church at Dresden, gave a highly successful Concert in the Saxon capital some weeks since, the programme including a number of songs from the pen of the Concert-giver, which met with high favour on the part of the audience, and are characterised in the leading Dresden press organs as being replete with originality and artistic feeling.

"Recensenten-Börse," or Critics' Exchange, is the name of an institution which, we are credibly informed by the Neue Zeitschrift für Musik, has just been founded at Elberfeld, with a view to afford a place of rendezvous for the dramatic and musical critics connected with the leading press organs of the district, and to encourage thereby a regular interchange of opinions amongst these public censors in matters artistic. So far the objects of the institution are undoubtedly practical; they verge upon the domain of the ideal, however, when we are further told that one of the results hoped for is "the avoidance, in future, of the publication in different journals of opinions, concerning the leading artists of our theatre, not unfrequently diametrically opposed to each other." The critical gentlemen will meet "on 'Change'" after every noteworthy performance, and having, by some means or other, persuaded themselves into something like unanimity, will proceed to their editorial offices and report accordingly. Doctors will henceforth cease to disagree at happy Elberfeld!

The well known Cologne Männergesang-Verein has just completed a successful tournee in Italy, extending over twenty-five days. The members—160 in number—under the direction of Herr Heinrich Zöllner, having enjoyed the privilege of eulogising in song the "Italia Unita" at the Quirinal, applied, with characteristic Teutonic thoroughness, for permission to be heard also at the Vatican; a request to which, for obvious reasons, the Holy Father returned a negative reply.

On the 2nd ult., in the Philharmonic Hall, Berlin, under the patronage of Her Majesty the Kaiserin Friederich, a Concert was given for the benefit of the Pestalozzian Association for the assistance of the widows and orphans of school teachers. There was an efficient choir of male voices, under the conductorship of Professor Felix Schmidt; but the main features of the Concert were the performances of Herr Barth on the pianoforte and Herr Professor Emmanuel Wirth (Royal College of Music, Berlin) on the violin. Herr Barth played with great skill and fine feeling a Fantasia by Chopin, and the Polonaise in E major by Liszt; while Herr Wirth, by his masterly renderings of the Beethoven Sonata in C minor, the Beethoven Romance in G major, and two Hungarian Dances by Brahms, won the most enthusiastic applause.

According to the latest reports from Italy, there is to be no celebration of a national character in connection with the forthcoming fiftieth anniversary (in November next) of Giuseppe Verdi's début as an operatic composer, in deference to the expressed wishes of the veteran Maestro himself.

Count Geza Zichy, the well known one-armed amateur pianist, has written an important choral and orchestral work, entitled "Dolores," which has just been successfully produced at Buda-Pesth, under the direction of Herr E. von Bellovits.

Four phonographs, according to American papers, were placed by Mr. Edison in the Metropolitan Opera House of New York on the occasion of the last Concert (2nd ult.) conducted by Dr. Hans von Bülow, the works performed, and presumably faithfully recorded by these instruments, having been, inter alia, Beethoven's "Eroica" and Haydn's B flat major Symphonies, and the Prelude to Wagner's "Die Meistersinger."

Professor F. Nietzsche, of Bâle, the whilom enthusiastic champion of Wagnerian doctrines, a position which, however, in some of his recent writings, he distinctly reversed, is suffering from brain disease and has had to be confined in a private asylum.

Señor de Campos Valdez, the director of the San Carlos Theatre of Lisbon, died at Paris on the 7th ult.

Jean Jacques Louis Dumon, an excellent flute player, and for many years professor of his instrument at the Brussels Conservatoire, died in the Belgian capital on the 4th ult.

The death is announced, on the 6th ult., at Plauen (Saxony), of Friedrich Moritz Gast, Cantor and Organist at that town, and composer of an Oratorio, "John the Baptist," and of numerous other works for the church. The deceased musician was in his sixty-eighth year.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE LATE REV. SIR F. A. G. OUSELEY, BART.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—May I ask for the insertion of this letter as a rider to your remarks upon Sir Herbert Oakeley's letter in last month's issue?

By the death of Sir Frederick Ouseley, the annual income of the College, to which he devoted his life and fortune, has been so seriously reduced as to render it impossible to carry on the work according to his plans unless additional funds are provided from other sources.

Sir Frederick Ouseley devoted at least £35,000 to the building of the Church and College of St. Michael and All Angels, near Tenbury, and during the thirty-two years the College has been open he expended no less a sum than £64,000 on its maintenance, or an annual sum of £2,000.

The yearly sum at the disposal of the Trustees of the College for the future will not, in all probability, exceed £900, leaving an annual deficiency of about £1,100.

It is felt by those who knew Sir Frederick Ouseley best that the creation of an additional endowment sufficient to produce this annual sum of £1,100 would form the most fitting memorial of such a man and such a work. The scheme, which has been in successful operation since 1856, comprises a high-class education for the sons of clergy and gentlemen of moderate means, together with the maintenance of a daily choral service of the highest devotional type. There are thus eight boys who receive an entirely gratuitous education, and eight more who, as Probationers, receive the same education at an almost nominal cost.

Many former pupils of St. Michael's are now filling prominent positions in the Church, in the naval, military, musical, and other professions.

It is believed that not only Sir Frederick Ouseley's many personal friends, but all supporters of church education and lovers of cathedral music will gladly avail themselves of this opportunity to contribute liberally to secure the permanence of this work which he had so much at heart, and promoted with a self-sacrifice which has few parallels.

Subscriptions may be sent to the Rev. J. Hampton, the Warden, or to W. Norris, Esq., the Bursar of St. Michael's College, Tenbury; or to the following banks:—Messrs. Herries, Farquhar, & Co., St. James's Street, London, S.W., and Lloyd's Bank, Tenbury.—Yours truly, B.

MUSIC TITLES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—May I ask the reason of the custom of inscribing nearly all the title-pages of pieces of music in French? No matter if the publisher be English, French, or German, still the title-pages are in French, and the effect is ludicrous in the extreme, for instance: "Morceau de Salon pour le penny whistle avec accompagnement de piano par Guillaume Jones. A mon cher ami John Brown, Esq. Publisher, Henry Smith, London," leaves the impression that "Guillaume Jones" is either ignorant or more probably ashamed of his own language.—Truly yours,

ENGLISH MUSICIAN.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—In reply to the query of your Hartlepool correspondent, I beg to say that I have reason for believing that a choir in which ladies are vested in surplices may be met with at the church of St. Luke, Bristol Road, Birmingham. The vicar, the Rev. W. B. Wilkinson, would no doubt be happy to supply particulars.—Yours truly,

G. ARTHUR JOHNSON,
178, Victoria Road, Aston, Birmingham.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—In reply to your correspondent from Hartlepool, asking where a ladies' church choir exists.

If he will pay a visit to the Parish Church of Skelton, two miles from Saltburn-by-the-Sea, he will there find one of the best conducted services in the kingdom; the choir includes four ladies, the costume consisting of surplice and purple velvet cap, very becoming.

I am, Sir, yours respectfully,
May 11, 1889. STRETTO.

INCONGRUOUS PROGRAMMES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—Herr Richter has for long been raising the taste of the Concert-going Briton, and it is because I am so fully aware of this fact that I ask the explanation of an incident in his Concert of the 13th ult.

We were given the treat of the "Charfreitags Zauber" ("Parsifal"), and if we may credit the audience with an ordinary amount of susceptibility they must have been worked into a state of thrilled reverence; to judge by my own feelings, I imagine some of them must have found themselves in a "religious" mental atmosphere into which the most fervid clerical oration might have failed to bring them.

Imagine, then, the bewilderment felt by some of us when, being barely given breathing time after "Parsifal," we were whisked off into a Wedding Song and Dance Song (Fantasia) by Glinka! If at the end of a choral service in St. Paul's Cathedral a band of Christy Minstrels were introduced into the choir, to perform in their usual style, it would not be more incongruous.

Surely by this sort of "inconsequent sequence" Herr Richter is teaching us to separate music and mind—or soul—and telling us to let our ears be tickled by sweet sounds without meaning? I do not mean to detract from the merits of the Glinka work—it may be a most excellent work in its place; but what I maintain is, that a Richter Concert at which the "Charfreitags Zauber" is performed, is not its place. That Herr Richter gives us less Wagner than usual is a fact deplored by many of us, and we do entreat him at least to let us enjoy the amount he does give us, and not to ruin our musical digestions by making us whirl about in dances after a Wagner feast.—I remain, &c.,

May 16, 1889. K. C. P.

PIANOFORTE AND STRINGS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—The above designation is often given now on programmes when a quartet or a quintet is to be performed, but it is far from logical, considering that a grand pianoforte has at least 233 strings to the four of a violin. Would it not be better to say Quartet (or as the case may be) for Pianoforte and Bow-instruments? People live in these days in a continual hurry, and to save time and trouble the most absurd paradoxical expressions are used. We smile at the old (but correct) titles: Concerto for Pianoforte, two Violins, Viola, Violoncello, Contra-basso, two Flutes, two Oboes, &c., and we put Concerto for Pianoforte and Orchestra, forgetting or ignoring that Orchestra is the place occupied by the musicians, and not an assembly of them, ορχήστρα being derived from ορχηστής, a dancer. Smith, in his dictionary, says about orchestra: "The part of a theatre or other public place appropriated to the musicians. In the Grecian theatres, the orchestra was a circular level space between the spectators and the stage, and was used by the chorus for its evolutions and dances. In the Roman theatres it was no part of the scene, but was situated in front of the stage, and was occupied by Senators and other persons of distinction." Would it not be ridiculous to invite "a house" to a party when meaning the people who live in it? The word "concerto" on a programme would be sufficient, as its real signification means singing or playing in company.—I am, Sir, yours truly,

E. SILAS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

* * Notices of concerts, and other information supplied by our friends in the country, must be forwarded as early as possible after the occurrence; otherwise they cannot be inserted. Our correspondents must specifically denote the date of each concert, for without such date no notice can be taken of the performance.

Our correspondents will oblige by writing all names as clearly as possible, as we cannot be responsible for any mistakes that may occur.

Correspondents are informed that their names and addresses must accompany all communications.

We cannot undertake to return offered contributions; the authors, therefore, will do well to retain copies.

Notice is sent to all subscribers whose payment (in advance) is exhausted. The paper will be discontinued where the Subscription is not renewed. We again remind those who are disappointed in obtaining back numbers that, although the music is always kept in stock, only a sufficient quantity of the rest of the paper is printed to supply the current sale.

CETILIA.—The Clavi-Harp may be obtained of Mr. Thos. Slater, 52, Lee Park, Blackheath, S.E.

E. E. E.—1. The College of Organists certainly does permit the holders of its diplomas to wear hoods. The use of the gown is also open to question. 2. If an organist knows how to play, the question of his religious views does not interfere with his capacity. The Churchwardens and Clergy of the Church of England would certainly give preference, in the case of an appointment, to a member of their own communion.

K. C. PORTAL.—There is a book called "Harmonies of Sound and Colour," by F. J. Hughes, published in 1883, which may serve your purpose.

PROGRESS.—Write to Messrs. Broadwood, Great Pulteney Street, W.

WESTWARD HO.—The composition is by William, not Thomas, Horsley, and is still in MS. The copy belonged to the late George Cooper, and at his death it was probably sold.

WREXHAM.—In the notice of the National Musical Association for Wales, it was stated last month, page 305, that ten papers were to be read at the Eisteddfod at Brecon. It should have been two.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

ASHTON-UNDER-LYNE.—On the 5th ult., Gaul's Sacred Cantata The Holy City was performed in the Parish Church by the choir, assisted by the Philharmonic Society. The soloists were Miss Herod, Miss Morris, Mr. Moody, Mr. Beaumont, and Mr. Schofield. Mr. Irvine Dearnaley presided at the organ, and Mr. Castle conducted.

BASINGSTOKE.—At the second Concert of the season, given by the Basingstoke Harmonic Society, which took place on April 30, an original Cantata, entitled Horsa, for solo voices and chorus, was produced. The libretto is written by Mr. L. B. Goldman, and the music by Mr. W. H. Liddle, Organist of the Parish Church and Conductor of the Society, both being residents in the town. The plot shows that Horsa, the new King of Erga, in defiance of the gods, Odin and Thor, set out to bring a bride from the Isle of Standland. He disregarded their warnings, and was wrecked with his bride on his homeward journey; but repentance following, he was allowed immortality with his bride and kingship beneath the sea. Mrs. Vinycomb sang the soprano song, "Gentle south winds," one of the gems of the evening, most effectively. Mr. J. W. Page took the part of Horsa and Mr. D. Price that of Aegir. The chorus sang well. Mr. W. H. Liddle conducted; and, with Mr. L. B. Goldman, was recalled at the close of the Cantata, which was a most decided success. Miss K. A. Liddle (Newcastle) and Mr. F. W. Webster (Windsor) accompanied most efficiently on the pianoforte and harmonium respectively. The second part of the programme was miscellaneous, noteworthy features being Miss Hunt's rendering of Saraband and Tambourin, by Leclair; and a Quartet for two pianofortes, Andantino and Mazurka (Chopin), by Miss Liddle, Mrs. Vinycomb, Mr. Liddle, and Mr. F. W. Webster.

Woolhouse, Thorowgood, Zerbini, Haydn Waud, and Egerton; Madame Clara Samuelli, Mr. Charles F. Chilly, and Mr. Musgrove Tufinal. The Concert commenced with Gade's Cantata The Crusaders. The choruses were well sung, and the members of the orchestra may fairly be congratulated on their performance. The Conductor was Mr. P. H. Diemer. Mendelssohn's Overture to Ruy Blas, Rossini's "Non più Mesta," Part-song, "Dewdrops," composed by Mr. Diemer for the choir of Haileybury College; the two last movements of Schubert's grand Quintet in A, a Part-song of Mendelssohn's, the March and Chorus from Tannhäuser, with other works, formed the rest of the programme.

BERWICK-ON-TWEED.—On the evening of the 6th ult. the members of the Choral Union gave their twentieth annual Concert in the Corn Exchange. The work performed was Handel's Samson, the chorus rendering their part of the work with vigour and precision. The soloists were Miss Sneath and Miss Bellas, both of Newcastle; Mr. T. Richardson, Berwick; and Mr. Duncanson, of Durham Cathedral. A small but very efficient orchestra played the accompaniments. Miss Barker presided at the organ, and Mr. Barker, who has directed the Society from its inauguration, was the Conductor.

BOURNEMOUTH.—Sullivan's Cantata The Golden Legend was given at the New Town Hall, on the 8th ult., by the band and chorus of the Philharmonic Society—numbering 250—assisted by Madame Nordica, Madame Enriquez, Mr. Iver McKay, and Mr. Robert Grice; the leader of the orchestra being Mr. Charles Fletcher. The chorus singing was good, and the efforts of the band contributed greatly to the enjoyment of the work. Mr. G. D. La Camera was the Conductor.

Harris, Organist of Hayley Parish Church, Stourbridge, presided at the organ, and gave as solos Bach's Prelude and Fugue in C and Mendelssohn's "Cornelius" March. Mr. J. Simpson, Organist of the Church, conducted the Recital, and the augmented choir of ladies and gentlemen sang at the close Handel's "Hallelujah" Chorus.

BURNLEY.—Stainer's Cantata St. Mary Magdalen was given in Yorkshire Street Chapel, on the 5th ult. The solos were entrusted to Misses Falkner and Dews, and Messrs. Blacow and Kinnell, the honours being carried off by Miss Dews. The chorus singing, both as regards tone and style, was good, the tenors and basses deserving special praise. A small band, led by Mr. Booth, gave the accompaniments, the playing of Mr. Myerson on the oboe being one of the features of the performance. Mr. Pickles acted as Conductor and Mr. Jackson as Organist.

The accompaniments were played by a band composed of members of the College. Mr. H. Drury (of Derby) was at the pianoforte, and Mr. R. E. Parker (Organist of the College) conducted.

WATFORD.—A large audience assembled in Oxhey Parish Church on Thursday, the 9th ult., to hear a performance by the members of the Church Oratorio Society of the first part of Mendelssohn's Elijah. The soloists were Miss Ryding, Miss Ethel Green, Miss Barker, Mr. Bloxham Brown, and Mr. Wilson. Mr. W. G. Wood accompanied on the organ, and Mr. Charles Marshall was the Conductor.

WHITBY.—The Choral Society gave a Concert on the 7th ult. The programme contained madrigals and part-songs of the times of Queen Elizabeth and Queen Victoria. The contrast was very instructive and was highly appreciated. Messrs. Hoggett, Hallgate, and Greenwell played some instrumental items, and Mr. Rickards sang some songs. Mr. H. Hallgate conducted.

WINCANTON.—The Choral Society finished up its meetings for the season in the Town Hall, on the 8th ult., with an open night. On this occasion the members presented a very handsome clock to their accompanist, Mrs. Knight. Mr. Hayter, Organist of St. Mary's Church and Musicmaster of the King's School, Bruton, was the Conductor, and a performance of Cowen's Cantata The Rose Maiden was given in a way that was creditable both to the Conductor and to the members of the Society. It is hoped that the Society may become a permanent institution in the town.

WINCHESTER.—The Choral Society gave a performance of Mendelssohn's Elijah at the Guildhall, on Thursday, the 9th ult. The principal vocalists were Madame Eva Scorey, Miss Mary Hickley, Mrs. F. Brown, Mr. Walter Clinch, and Mr. Musgrove Tufnail. The band and chorus consisted of ninety performers. The choruses were sung with vigour. The orchestra was adequate to the performance. Mr. C. Gamblin was the Conductor.

YORK.—On April 28 Alan Gray's The Widow of Zarephath was sung in the Church of St. Mary, Castlegate, by the church choir, who achieved a very satisfactory rendering; the Choirmaster, Mr. A. McColl (of the Minster Choir), delivered the recitation in admirable style.

RUTH

EDWARD OXENFORD

MUSIC BY

ALFRED R. GAUL

SUITABLE FOR

THANKSGIVING SERVICES.

"The Biblical story of which Ruth is the central figure lends itself with remarkable suitability to an illustration of a harvest celebration.
 The country landscape, the ripened corn, the sturdy reapers, the standing sheaves, the active gleaners, and the busy farmer, all combine to fill the mind's eye with a pleasant scene of excitement. Set to music by a competent composer such as Mr. A. R. Gaul, the narrative of Ruth's eventful episode lends itself to a pathetic, picturesque, and pleasant performance. The bereaved and sorrowful trio of women on whom the calamity of poverty and famine has fallen, as if to give intensity to their greater grief, and the unexpected and happy influence of patriarchal benevolence displayed by the mighty Boaz, who so quickly transforms sorrow into joy, are all introduced and aptly take their allotted place in the melodious music of Gaul's interpretation of the tale."—Gloucester Citizen.

"The work, like the 'Holy City,' is full of beautiful orchestral passages, while the vocal score abounds with charming numbers."—Bucks Herald.

"Ruth" is a work of sterling power; its musical form is that of perfect tunelessness combined with simplicity and strength. . . . The composer has grasped his theme in a thoroughly sympathetic manner, and has produced a work which is worthy of the subject."—Bradford Observer.

"Bright, tuneful, fresh, and musically—this work will be a great favourite, and will add to Mr. Gaul's reputation."—Birmingham Weekly Dart.

"Ruth" has been set to music by several composers; none, however, has become so worthily popular as the Cantata under notice. . . .
 It contains some charming music, and is highly characteristic of the story it so vividly illustrates."—South Wilts Express.

"Full of flowing melody."—Salisbury Times.PERFORMED IN THE TOWN HALL, BIRMINGHAM,

MUSIC BY

ALFRED R. GAUL

(Composer of the "Holy City," "Ruth," &c.)

"There are in this series of duets the sweetest things of the kind we have ever met with. No. 4, 'April,' and No. 5, 'May,' are our special favourites, the one being delightfully playful, the other tenderly melodious. Things to be treasured in households where sisters or friends delight in joining voices. The pianoforte accompaniments are well written, and such as an ordinary pianist may successfully undertake."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

THE LIGHT OF ASIA

A CANTATA

THE WORDS FROM THE POEM OF

EDWIN ARNOLD

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

DUDLEY BUCK.

Price, in paper cover, 3s.; paper boards, 3s. 6d.; cloth gilt, 5s.

THE TIMES.

The composer has done well in going to Sir Edwin Arnold's well-known poem for his subject, and he has with great ingenuity arranged a number of its most important passages into a libretto that is excellent as a vehicle for musical treatment. . . . In the opening chorus the composer declares himself as a musician of earnest aim; its musical treatment is well carried out. . . . The choruses around him delicious gardens bloom'd and "O come and see the pleasure of the spring," are graceful and show the influence of Sterndale Bennett, though no want of originality is felt. The duets between Siddārtha and Yasôdhara are full of passion, and the canonic passage in the second, "When most my spirit wanders," is so skilfully written that no feeling of dry scholasticism is produced.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

One rises from hearing "The Light of Asia" with a sense of charm and satisfaction. To what is this feeling due? In the first place, to truth of expression. The music and the poetry blend, and their harmony—we attach no importance to an occasional exception—is sensibly complete. Next, the expression never goes beyond the necessities of the case, and thus a most important, though much neglected, law of art is observed. . . . The music is intelligible, and exercises its influence upon the heart without hindrance from a dazzled head. Then, the work is essentially melodious, being full of tune which, if not strongly characteristic, lights the ear, while the choral writing, sometimes gorgeously descriptive, has often a grace and elegance that cannot be resisted. . . . We see no reason why "The Light of Asia" should fail to become a favourite among English choral societies. It has all the qualities requisite for a popular composition of the kind.

STANDARD.

There is much in the work worthy of praise. Mr. Buck is technically a master of his art, and he has not wedded himself to any particular school. . . . The orchestration is admirable, being picturesque without extravagance. In several numbers a pleasant vein of melody is discernible, the best being the chorus, "O, come and see the pleasure of the spring," the wedding chorus, and the bridal duet, in which some canonic passages are introduced with excellent effect.

MORNING POST.

Mr. Dudley Buck, though well known and honoured in America, has hitherto only been known in England by his song "When the Heart is Young." . . . Few, however, even of the admirers of that ballad were prepared to hear a work so beautiful in its treatment as "The Light of Asia." . . . The work itself possesses many qualities which tend to secure popularity. Its several portions are for the most part interesting. The choruses are vocal and effective, and such attractive to that section of the public which delights in melody.

DAILY NEWS.

The opening chorus, the "Spring song," the four-part male chorus of councillors, and the march of Indian maidens round the Prince's throne, are all excellent. So to a higher degree is the delicious seven-part chorus which describes the Indian night and the "rare company of Indian girls" lulled into dreams in the Pleasure House; while in the fine scene of the temptation the composer is able to indulge in strong contrasts, and to prove his possession of real dramatic power. . . . The love duet which the Prince and Yasôdhara sing at their first meeting, and the still more beautiful duet sung by the Prince and his wife when he has resolved upon his "Great Renunciation," are worthy melodic gems of a purely unconventional order.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

His instrumentation is full, rich, and varied, but never departs from its proper function of illustrating the scene or situation. It does not attempt to thrust the vocal portion of the score into the background. . . . There is undoubtedly very much in the composition to admire, enough, indeed, to create the hope that American musical productions may no longer be stranger to us than the latest productions of France, Germany, or the far North.

ATHENÆUM.

In "The Light of Asia" Mr. Dudley Buck shows himself a decidedly able musician, the construction of the various numbers, the part-writing for voices, and the orchestration being alike excellent. Indeed, we cannot point to a single flaw of a technical character from first to last.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY POST.

Mr. Buck is an accomplished musician, as his scoring shows. He has also the gift of melody. His choruses are grateful to sing, and his accentuation is careful and correct. He has the power to touch the sympathies of his hearers, as the performance more than once evidenced. . . . That "The Light of Asia" has the power of impressing and pleasing an audience, the one assembled in St. James's Hall, including many prominent musicians, gave unmistakable evidence.

AMERICAN MUSICIAN.

The general verdict in Newark is that the work is worthy to rank with the best cantatas of the day.

NEWARK (U.S.) DAILY ADVERTISER.

The work is replete with the sweetest melodies, and at times is decidedly dramatic. The orchestration is elaborate and striking.

SIX PIECES FOR VIOLIN

A. C. MACKENZIE.

(Op. 37.)

Full Score, 5s.; Orchestral Parts, 3s. 6d.;
Also, as originally written for Violin Solo with Pianoforte
Accompaniment, 2s.

THE DAILY TELEGRAPH.

As an exceptional case, this movement absolutely gains by the change to which it has been subjected, the impassioned religious melody acquiring force by being played in chorus, and added beauty by a rich accompaniment of strings, horns, and wood-wind. The audience at once pronounced the piece a success, and the composer bowed his thanks for sustained applause from his place in the gallery.

STANDARD.

Dr. Mackenzie's "Benedictus" was originally written for violin, with pianoforte accompaniment. Since then the author has appreciated the capabilities of the music in an orchestral sense, and after several attempts—this composer, like Mendelssohn, never being satisfied at the offset—has written his score for a small orchestra. . . . So charming did this piece prove that the applause was unanimous, and was maintained until the composer had appeared at the end gallery and bowed his acknowledgment.

DAILY NEWS.

The remaining novelty was a brief but charming "Benedictus," originally written by Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, as one of a set of violin pieces which Lady Hallé last summer introduced to London. The pianoforte accompaniment has, however, now been scored for wind orchestra by the composer, and the solo is given to all the violins of the orchestra.

MORNING POST.

There are beautiful harmonies accompanying the phases of melody, and the whole piece, which is replete with dignity and distinguished by originality, forms a most grateful addition to orchestral répertoires.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

The clever musician has since scored it for a small orchestra, assigning the violin solo to the whole of the violins, and providing work for the other strings, flutes, clarinets, bassoons, and horns, in which form it is likely to obtain as much popularity on the platform as the first setting in the salon. It is a beautiful, quietly flowing melody, with such an elegant accompaniment as only a composer of genuine taste and sympathetic nature, having a perfect knowledge of the means of the instruments he introduces, could place upon paper.

THE OBSERVER.

The two leading themes are in themselves beautiful, and their scenic beauty is enhanced by exquisite orchestration, in which the wind instruments above-named, in conjunction with the violas, violoncellos, and double-basses, are happily employed. . . . This "Benedictus" is likely to become popular throughout the musical world.

THE GLOBE.

Dr. A. C. Mackenzie's new "Benedictus" for violins and orchestra (first public performance) is short and comparatively simple, but will add to his fame. . . . The "Benedictus" is a polished gem.

SUNDAY TIMES.

Dr. A. C. Mackenzie's new "Benedictus for Orchestra," a transcription of one of his "Six Pieces for Violin and Piano," Op. 37, is a gem of melody encased in a beautiful instrumental setting.

DESCRIPTION OF CONTENTS.

Those written in March form, though not necessarily in the style of a March, embrace Nos. 1, 2, 7, 11, 12, 15, 21, 28, 30, 31, 32, 42, and 50. In that of the first movement of a Sonata, but without development, 6, 8, 16, 19, 23, 29, 36, 38, 40, 41, 44, 55; and with brief development, Nos. 9, 10, 22, 27, 48, and 53. In Minuet and Trio form, 5, 13, 20, 45, 46, and 51; or without Trio, 17, 33, 54. In Rondo form, 4, 14, 24, 26, 35, 43, 49. Nos. 18, 39, 47, and 52 are in the style of a Passacaglia upon a ground bass; while No. 3 is fugal.

No. 1.—7 pages, key A flat. Trio is Dr. Stainer's tune (230 A. & M.) as solo for right hand, while left hand plays a running 12-8 accompaniment against it. Last movement resumes first subject, with theme as tenor solo underneath it; then second subject, with theme simultaneously as pedal solo, and finally the theme harmonised in the right hand, while the first subject is played as a tenor solo under it. Not difficult to play, yet most effective. No. 2.—7 pages, key E minor and major. Trio is Dr. Dykes' tune (160 A. & M.) with a quaver accompaniment underneath it. Reprise of first subject (now in major) as tenor solo, while theme appears above it; then second subject, with theme as tenor solo below it; then, lastly, first subject on the manuals, while pedals announce the theme. Makes a dignified and deliberate Voluntary, getting utmost effect by very little exertion. Contains very explicit directions for pedaling, to enable a large use of the swell pedal to be made. No. 3.—6 pages, key E. In fugal form. Dr. Dykes' tune (370 A. & M.) given out as tenor solo accompanied. The first strain is then taken as fugue subject. The other strains episodically introduced. After dominant pedal and stretto, theme played over on loud organ in conjunction with the accompaniment of its first introduction. Any organist accustomed to play fugues will find this easy enough. No. 4.—6 pages, key C. Though this number is not in the generally accepted sense a set of variations on "St. Ann's" tune (for it is one continuous piece), the theme is kept in existence throughout in seven different ways; three of them being upon the pedals, but each time differently, and the various accompaniments are clearly indicated. No. 5.—5 pages, key E flat. Professor W. H. Monk's tunes (Nos. 94 and 269 A. & M.) are treated in this piece. The first as a tenor solo, with a moving 9-8 accompaniment against it, then, on third repetition, inverted. The second tune with independent accompaniment, which is afterwards inverted, forms the trio. A Voluntary which may be almost read at sight. No. 6.—6 pages, key E flat. Professor W. H. Monk's tune "Eventide" (27 A. & M.) is here given as tenor solo against the reprise of the first subject; then on the pedals against the second. Not difficult, but will require knowing. Character, slow and majestic, and would be spoiled by too fast a time. No. 7.—6 pages, key F. No. 28 A. & M. (2nd tune) first appears in the trio in the subdominant key, just a little concealed, and is kept up from this point to the end in various ways. This can be made an attractive Postlude without giving much trouble, and plays with the tune more than most of the others, so that it sounds more like an extemporaneous performance upon the theme. No. 8.—6 pages, key E flat. No. 193 A. & M. appears in this as second subject in the mediant key; again in the reprise in the submediant; and finally in the tonic, while pedals play the first subject. Not at all taxing to play. No. 9.—6 pages, key E flat. While the first subject is being given out the first time, the theme (260 A. & M.) appears at once upon the pedals. The second subject is 207 A. & M., and both subjects re-appear with different treatment in the reprise, after which they appear simultaneously together, the one on the pedals and the other on the manuals. Moderately easy. No. 10.—6 pages, key D minor and major. A. & M. 234, first tune, forms the second subject and at reprise of first subject, the theme transposed to a minor key appears on the pedals; then the second subject (the theme) re-appears in the tonic major, while the first subject forms the pedal part. Should not be taken too fast. No. 11.—7 pages, key E. A. & M. 223, first appears as trio, then as tenor solo at reprise of first subject, and secondly on the pedals in conjunction with second subject. Pedal work in this is very simple. No. 12.—6 pages, key G minor and major. A. & M. 287 is given out twice to make up the trio, first in harmony, then as solo. At the reprise of first subject, now turned to major, theme is started upon the pedals, but continued upon the manuals, while pedals keep to first subject. Pedals then give the theme out complete, while manuals play second subject. No. 13.—6 pages, key D. A. & M. 184, after a brief introduction, is at once harmonised for right hand, while left hand plays a flowing counterpoint against it. Theme is then taken as tenor solo, with a 12-8 accompanimental melody in the right hand, and thus forms the trio, or episodical portion. Reprise, theme on the pedals with the flowing counterpoint, which was before in the left, now assigned to the right hand; then finally the 12-8 accompanimental melody is again put against the theme, but this time as a tenor solo. Nothing intricate to play in this. No. 14.—6 pages, key C. Redhead's tune (399 A. & M.) is at once given out in detached strains upon the swell, while broad unisonal passages are played alternately with it on the great. Theme then appears straight ahead on the pedals, while manuals play a harmonised version of the unison passages, which may be called first subject. A second subject, in dominant key, allows theme to drop till the pedals take up the first subject in conjunction with it, and after the enunciation of a third and fourth subject, the theme is kept up unflinchingly till the end. Pedals are largely used in this Voluntary. No. 15.—6 pages, key E flat. On very similar lines to No. 1, but with a different disposition of the theme (A. & M. 21, second tune). No. 16.—4 pages, key B flat. Theme (A. & M. 290) is the second subject, afterwards appearing as tenor solo in conjunction with first subject, and then repeated in a slightly varied form. No. 17.—4 pages, key E flat. A diapason movement giving out two subjects, the second being then repeated as a bass to old "Rockingham," and followed by the first with the pedals playing the tune. A rather simple little piece. No. 18.—4 pages, key F minor. Theme (A. & M. 205) is here treated as a ground bass, after the style of a Passacaglia, and continues throughout on the pedals, against eight different accompaniments, while for a final time it is at last given to the manuals. This Voluntary can be made productive of excellent effect with but little trouble. No. 19.—6 pages, key F. A. & M. 17 forms the second subject, and is then transposed to the minor, and in addition to this it appears in the reprise, in conjunction with one subject or another, four times, in as many different ways. Makes an attractive Voluntary. No. 20.—5 pages, key B flat. A. & M. 299. The opening subject is the tune by contrary motion, repeated in the minor key in a varied form, then again in the major in a still further varied form, and with it the theme itself as a tenor solo. The trio in 9-8 is quite distinct, and has no connection whatever with the theme; but the theme occurs three times during the course of the reprise. Not difficult. No. 21.—6 pages, key G. Theme (A. & M. 79) first appears in the trio as a treble solo, with an accompanimental 12-8 melody against it, and then inverted into a tenor solo. In the reprise it appears on the pedals against both subjects, then on the manuals with the first subject below it. No. 22.—7 pages, key F. Theme ("French" or "Dundee") is second subject in the piece, as well as in the reprise, and in addition to this the theme is placed on the pedals, as a bass to the first subject. Has clear indications for the use of the swell pedal, the pedal work being arranged to make this practicable. No. 23.—5 pages, key A. "Old Hundredth," at the reprise, forms the pedal bass of the first subject, and is then raised above the second subject. One of the most effective pieces. No. 24.—5 pages, key E flat. "Franconia" is started as second subject close upon the ending of the first, the strains being divided by contrasted sentences on another manual. First subject then returns with theme as pedal bass; next the theme is given out as tenor solo, with moving accompaniment; and finally on full organ, with first subject telling out clearly as pedal bass. No. 25.—5 pages, key F minor and major. The first part is built upon rhythmical imitations of the theme (Haydn's "Austrian Hymn"), chiefly by contrary movement. A new melody is then given as second subject. Later, the theme is given out by the bass, chiefly on the pedals and in the minor form, then in the major form upon the manuals, while pedals play second subject. Should be taken in a decidedly slow time, or the effect intended will not be attained. No. 26.—5 pages, key C. This piece, constructed upon A. & M. 98, is a martial movement in rondo form, like the tune itself. After the short introduction of detached scale chords, the theme is started while the pedals and manuals simultaneously continue the detached scales, and from this point to the end the tune is continued in some form or other, so that the hymn could be sung to it as an independent accompaniment. Very effective at little cost. No. 27.—5 pages, key G minor. "St. Bride's" first appearance is as second subject; then in the major key, accompanied with the former attendant counterpoint, but with the addition of a new melody. Next, it appears on the pedals in the reprise, by way of bass to the first subject; then on the manuals with both hands, while pedals play the contrapuntal melody of the second subject. It, no means difficult to play. No. 28.—6 pages, key C. "St. Matthew," attended with some accompanimental activity, forms the trio, after which the theme forms the pedal bass of the reprise of the matter of the first part. Not so hard to play as it looks. No. 29.—5 pages, key A. A martial movement, relieved by a change of time to 6-4 at the change of key, when the theme is introduced; reprise on the pedals, which before were on the manuals, and which in this latter case will need practice. No. 30.—5 pages, key E flat. "Bedford" is introduced as second subject, and then in the trio it appears as an alto part, in a piece of harmony in which it can have no prominence as it is not intended to stand out, and similarly is repeated as an unimportant bass. Final part places theme on pedals underneath the first subject, and then gives it to the right hand on a loud organ, while the left hand plays an independent melodic accompaniment of ascending and descending scale passages. Pedal work very simple. No. 31.—5 pages, key C. "Winchester New" or "Crassellus" here appears as bass to the trio, and on the pedals under reprise of the first subject. Rather brilliant in effect. No. 32.—5 pages, key C minor and major. A. & M. 302 forms the theme piece, which is similar in plan to Nos. 1 and 12. The tune is heard five times, once being in the minor key. Capable of much effect. 33.—6 pages, key D. "Christians, awake," is given on the pedals in a varied form, as a bass to the opening subject. Theme now appears more recognisable form as second subject. Reprise of the first part gives the activity to the manual work, which before distinguished the ed theme on the pedals. This enables the theme to come out with unmistakable clearness through four of the strains, when it is transferred to manuals. Moderately easy. No. 34.—5 pages, key A. "St. Michael" is first introduced by florid manual work at a change of time. Afterwards it appears as tenor solo, and then upon the pedals. No. 35.—5 pages, key D minor. "St. Mary" forms the pedal part of the first subject. In the reprise this is inverted, and the theme is also worked up with both second and third subjects. Makes a religious voluntary. 36.—5 pages, key G. Dr. Gilbert's popular tune "Maidstone" (A. & M., 240) is first introduced as a quick counterpoint in a different form, attended with imitation, and will not attract notice, being in an under part. It then appears as pedal bass for the reprise of first subject, after which the quick counterpoint idea is repeated in tonic key. Would require but little work. No. 37.—6 pages, key D. Ewing's "Jerusalem the golden" tune is here treated, the different strains coming in (as tenor solo) in different keys, after the various episodes come in between. After the strains of the theme have been thus rendered a second time, accompanied in a different way, the theme is intact in its own key, and accompanied by the opening strains. Contains very clear instructions as to the detail of construction. No. 38.—5 pages, key D. "St. Peter" at once announced in broad unison, soft interpolations being played between the different strains. It then reappears intact as pedal bass to the first subject. The reprise reverses the order, giving theme to manuals and first subject to pedals, and brings the theme also into contact with the second subject. Repetition in a different way, of the detached strain treatment, concludes the voluntary. 39.—5 pages, key D minor. A. & M. 92 is treated in this piece as a ground bass, after the style of a Passacaglia, and similar to No. 18. Somewhat easy to play. No. 40.—5 pages, key E. A. & M. 51 appears twice in this piece, firstly as pedal bass of first subject at the reprise, and secondly as an accompaniment above the melody of the second subject. Must be taken in slowly. No. 41.—5 pages, key E flat. "Abridge" forms the tenor solo of the second subject, and is afterwards used as pedal bass to the first subject in the reprise, and finally appears as upper part at the close. Decidedly easy. No. 42.—7 pages, key D minor and major. Trio first imitates the old tune to "Jesus Christ is risen to-day" as pedal solo, accompanied in the "Alleluia"; and, at the close, the theme appears imitated by the first subject. No. 43.—5 pages, key E. "Innocents" is here set somewhat after the plan of No. 4, the theme being always in tenor. No. 44.—5 pages, key G minor. "Windsor" first appears as second subject, and in the major key, then as pedal bass to first subject, and lastly as second subject in tonic, in the reprise. Rather easy. No. 45.—6 pages, key D. "London New" only appears once in the first part, the middle movement being like that of No. 20, quite independent. Not difficult. No. 46.—6 pages, key C minor. "Burford" form is akin to several, like No. 12, which starts the theme in the trio, and afterwards works it with the two subjects. Will require but little variation. No. 47.—6 pages, key G. Like Nos. 18, 39, and 47 is a ground bass treatment of the theme, which in this case is "Carey." Moderately easy. No. 48.—5 pages, key D minor and major. In this piece "St. Flavian" is introduced five times in a major and twice in a minor in conjunction with the various subjects. Not at all difficult to play. No. 49.—3 pages, key F. A very simple piece, and the one nearest to variations, though it is a continuous piece. "Winchester Old," A. & M. 62, is first given to the upper part, and then to alto solo, tenor, and bass solo; next to the pedals, and finally over a pedal. Could be almost read at sight by any organist. No. 50.—5 pages, key A minor and major. "St. Magnus" is treated similarly to No. 46. Theme comes out effectively at the end against the moving pedals. No. 51.—5 pages, key B flat. "Wareham" introduced as an alto part to the trio, and afterwards on the pedals in detached, then attached strains. Moderately easy to play. No. 52.—6 pages, key F. A. & M. 107 is treated upon a ground bass after the plan of Nos. 18, 39, and 47. It is worked up to a brilliant conclusion. No. 53.—6 pages, key G. A. & M. 76 only appears twice, as the pedal bass of the first and second subjects in the reprise. Somewhat pompous and martial in character. No. 54.—4 pages, key A. "Martyrdom" is here treated after similar plan to No. 17. A canonical imitation of the varied theme will be observed at the close. No. 55.—5 pages, key A. "St. Stephen" is placed as pedal bass to the first subject at the outset and at the reprise, and finally appears over imitations of the second subject.

FREDERICK CHOPIN

AS A MAN AND MUSICIAN

BY

FREDERICK NIECKS.

IN TWO VOLUMES, CLOTH GILT, PRICE TWENTY-FIVE SHILLINGS.

WITH A PORTRAIT, ETCHED BY H. R. ROBERTSON, AND FAC-SIMILES OF THE COMPOSER'S MS.

EXTRACTS FROM PREFACE.

My guiding principle has been to place before the reader the facts collected by me as well as the conclusions at which I arrived. This will enable him to see the subject in all its bearings, with all its pros and cons, and to draw his own conclusions should mine not obtain his approval.

Whatever the defects of the present volumes may be—and, no doubt, they are both great and many—I have laboured to the full extent of my humble abilities to group and present my material perspicuously, and to avoid diffuseness and rhapsody, those besetting sins of writers on music.

My researches had for their object the whole life of Chopin and his historical, political, artistical, social, and personal surroundings, but they were chiefly directed to the least known and most interesting period of his career—his life in France, and his visits to Germany and Great Britain. My chief sources of information are divisible into two classes—newspapers, magazines, pamphlets, correspondences, and books; and conversations I held with, and letters I received from Chopin's pupils, friends, and acquaintances.

Prefixed to the first volume of the present biography the reader will find one of the portraits by Kwiatkowski, an etching after a charming pencil drawing in my possession, the reproduction of which the artist has kindly permitted.

"The two volumes are so rich in absolutely new facts concerning Chopin's life, and so valuable in interesting and, for the most part, unprejudiced analytical comments upon the composer's works, that in the future we may reasonably expect the book to be frequently quoted whenever the writings of the 'Ariel of the pianoforte' are in question. To the large majority of readers, however, the true story—told with all the evidence that can be collected from letters and from the reports of onlookers to support the truth—of the romantic love of the pianist-composer for the eminent novelist, Madame George Sand, will be of the supremest interest. Nearly 200 pages are devoted to this episode, which was not only the most momentous incident of Chopin's career, but which also practically broke his heart and led to his early death. . . . The volumes likewise contain a full list of Chopin's works, an index, an etching from one of the portraits by Kwiatkowski (so different from the glorified drawing by Ary Scheffer), and a fac-simile of Chopin's delicate penmanship from one of the 'Etudes,' which, with the preludes, mazourkas, waltzes, polonaises, and the rest, are a great deal more popular in English drawing-rooms now than they were at the date of the composer's death, a few months short of forty years ago."—Daily News.

"Mr. Niecks's work at once takes its place among standard biographies of Great Musicians—the first complete and wholly satisfactory life of Chopin that has been written. Mr. Niecks may be assured that its successful achievement places him in the front rank of musical biographers; while, at the same time, the production of so able and adequate a work adds one more to the laurels earned by the distinguished firm that has already given us in English form Otto Jahn's 'Mozart' and Spitta's 'Bach.'"—Sunday Times.

"It is an admirable, well-contrived, and interesting biography, in which one of the most important items is formed by Chopin's own letters. . . . How the work is brought out is said in two words: it is published by Novello & Co. That is sufficient guarantee."—The World.

CHAPPELL'S PENNY OPERATIC PART-SONGS

FOR SOPRANO, ALTO, TENOR, AND BASS.

The present Collection of Part-Songs is entirely new, being selected and adapted from the most striking and popular Choruses in the favourite Foreign Operas. The Arrangement is purely Vocal, such Choruses only being chosen as can be sung without the aid of an Instrumental Accompaniment. The words have been expressly written for the work, and the harmonies arranged in four parts, as likely to be most useful in small Classes.

STEINWAY AND SONS

Are the only Manufacturers who make all component parts of their Pianofortes, exterior and interior (including the casting of the Full Metal Frames), in their own Factories.

GRAND AND UPRIGHT PIANOFORTES

With the Patent Double Cupola Frame of Solid Steel, and cast in the Steinway Foundries; also the New Patent Capo d'Astro Bar; Patent Overstrung Scaling and Patent Harmonic Duplex Scales; Patent Soundboard Resonator; Patent Ring-Bridge; Patent Repetition Action and Patent Metallic Action Frame; Patent Indestructible Hammers; Graduating Soft Pedal Cased in Metal; Three Strings to each Note; Seven Octaves; &c.

Every one probably has heard something of the Steinway Inventions and Improvements, which have both revolutionised the construction of the Pianoforte and rendered the Steinway Instruments THE MOST PERFECT PIANOFORTES IN THE WORLD.

It need, therefore, only be mentioned that public opinion throughout civilisation amply recognises their unrivalled merits, the Steinway Instruments having by far the largest annual sale of any Pianofortes in the world.

THE STEINWAY GRAND AND UPRIGHT PIANOFORTES chiefly appeal to the taste of the cultured and musical classes. It may be truly said that the Steinway Piano is the CHEAPEST, because the BEST and most DURABLE.

THE STEINWAY UPRIGHT PIANOFORTES (which, in respect to their internal Construction, are really Grand Pianofortes in an upright form, and have therefore almost nothing in common with the productions of the European makers) HAVE ALSO A FAR GREATER ANNUAL SALE THAN THE UPRIGHT PIANOFORTES OF ANY OTHER MAKER IN THE WORLD.

Attention is now directed to the NEW UPRIGHT MODEL, which is intended to meet the requirements of those who have wished for a "Steinway" at a somewhat lower price than had previously existed, and at the same time without any sacrifice of the Steinway characteristics, either in respect to the quality of the tone or the solidity of the construction.

JULY 1, 1889.

"MUSIC OF THE WATERS."

MISS LAURA ALEXANDRINE SMITH, whose handsome volume with the above title has recently come into our hands, is to be congratulated upon the choice of her subject. A certain nameless charm has always attached itself to music when heard on the sea or on the water, a charm which did not escape Byron when he wrote—

There be none of Beauty's daughters
With a magic like thee;
And like music on the waters
Is thy sweet voice to me.

Music heard under certain conditions exerts a peculiar spell on the hearer, and if we were asked to particularise, we should say without hesitation, invisible music, and music on the waters. Some things linger long in the memory, and in our own individual experience we have never heard anything more impressive than the carols sung on the first of May on the top of Magdalen Tower at Oxford, or the sound of the Dorchester bells as one rows down the Thames. It may be imagination, but all sounds seem to be endowed with a different quality when heard above the "watery ways" of sea or stream. On the west coast of Ireland we have seen seals following a boat for quite a long distance, attracted by singing on the part of the occupants. Have any of our readers listened to good singing in a cave on the sea? If not, they are incapable of estimating the full beauty of the human voice when heard under these truly romantic conditions. It is not therefore to be wondered at that the sea, and the waves, and the waters should have acted as a powerful stimulant to the creative powers of many musicians. In the music of nature the voices of the great deep are the most impressive of all. Many instances occur at once without going far afield: Handel's "Water Music" for one; Wagner's "Flying Dutchman" for another—inspired, as his biographers generally agree, by his own individual experiences in early life on a stormy voyage. Siegfried's "Rheinfahrt," again, is another striking case in point, and if we turn from Wagner to Brahms, we shall find that he, too, has been inspired by the mystery and romance of the sea, as illustrated in the legend of Vineta, the buried city on the Baltic—inspired to write what is perhaps the most wonderful part-song that even Brahms has written. Even if we descend to the nethermost depths of composition, we shall generally find that the least detestable effusions have something to do with the sea. The least vile drawing-room ballads are the pseudo-nautical, as becomes a nation whose goings, in spite of steam and science, are still largely on the great waters.

The water music, however, with which Miss Smith has to deal is of a particular sort, and is primarily confined to those songs known as "chanties" (pronounced shanties, probably from the French chanter), which are sung by the sailors of the mercantile marine at their work, at the fo'c'sle head or during the dog watches. On vessels of war, as Miss Smith correctly reminds her readers, "the drum, fife, or boatswain's whistle furnish the necessary movement regulator," whereas in the merchant service "the heavier work is done by each man doing his utmost at the same moment. This is regulated by the 'chanty,' and here is the true singing of the deep sea—it is not recreation, it is an essential part of the work. It will masthead the topsail-yards on making sail; it will start the anchor, ride down the main-tack with a will; it will break out and take on board cargo, and keep the pumps going. A good voice and a stirring chorus are worth an extra man." Or, as Mr. Dana puts it in "Two years before the mast," "A song is as necessary to sailors as the drum and fife to a soldier. They cannot pull in time, or pull with a will, without it. Many a time when a thing goes heavy with one fellow yo-ho-ing, a lively song, like 'Heave to the girls,' 'Nancy oh!' 'Jack Crosstree,' &c., has put life and strength into every arm. We often found a great difference in the effect of the different songs in driving in the hides. Two or three songs would be tried, one after the other, with no effect; not an inch could be got upon the tackles. When a new song struck up it seemed to hit the humour of the moment, and drove the tackles to blocks at once. 'Heave round hearty,' 'Captain gone ashore,' and the like, might do for common pulls; but on an emergency, when we wanted a heavy, raise-the-dead pull, which should start the beams of the ship, there was nothing like 'Time for us to go,' 'Round the corner,' or 'Hurrah! hurrah! my hearty bullies!' 'Cheerily, men,' when we came to masthead the topsail-yard, with all hands at the halyards, might have been heard miles away." Mr. Dana also gives a practical illustration to prove the truth of the line—

For the tired slave, song lifts the languid oar.

[which may supply a new commentary on that difficult phrase in Virgil, rumore secundo], when he says: "We pulled the long distances to and from the shore with our loaded boats without a word spoken, and with discontented looks, while they not only lightened the labours of rowing, but actually made it pleasant and cheerful by their music." The effect of a military band on terra firma is too well known to need our insisting upon it here. It not only helps the tired soldier to step out, but it forces the loafer and loungers to strut along in strict time. This invigorating and exhilarating effect of music suggests an allusion to its therapeutic properties. Mr. Finck, whose interesting volume of essays was noticed in the columns of our last issue, quotes in this connection the testimony of an eminent physician who states that while he knows of no case of insane people having been cured by music, he has often witnessed the soothing and tranquillising influence it has exerted on his patients. The case of King Saul occurs to one as the best known instance of the healing power of music. But, on the other hand, one must not lose sight of the disastrous and exasperating effect wrought on Babbage and John Leech by barrel organs.

The fact that a large number of sailors' songs are primarily employed to regulate their movements in the performance of some manual labour, may prepare us for the apparently meaningless and perfunctory nature of the words attached to them. No doubt there is a substratum of sense somewhere, but one has to dive very deep to discover any coherence in the literature of the capstan-bar. Take, for example, "Old Stormy," of which the following lines may serve as a sample:—

Solo. Old Stormy he is dead and gone:
Chorus. To me, way, hay, storm along, John!
Solo. Old Stormy he is dead and gone:
Chorus. Ah, ha! come along, get along, storm along, John.
Solo. Old Stormy he was a bully old man:
Chorus. To me, way, you storm along.
Solo. Old Stormy he was a bully old man:
Chorus. Fi-i-i, massa, storm along.

The foregoing lines are decidedly difficult to construe—almost as difficult as the astounding English versions set to Brahms's new Part-songs (Op. 104), by Mrs. John P. Morgan, of New York. There are, of course, some good songs—from the literary point of view—in the repertory of the sailor, whether blue jacket or merchant mariner, but they are few and far between. "Home, dearie, home," given on page 25, is a touching and pathetic ballad; but Miss Smith has erred in imagining it to be an old established favourite, and beguiled some of her reviewers into the same error; the words being really an admirable imitation of the old style from the clever pen of Mr. W. E. Henley. Miss Smith has a superabundance of enthusiasm, but she is conspicuously bereft of all critical instinct. One instance of this want is too delicious to be passed over. In a hauling "chanty," the hero of which is Bonny—i.e., Bonaparte—the line occurs "Bonny went to Elbow," obviously a marine variant for Elba. On this the author sagely comments as follows in a footnote: "Where is 'Elbow'? I think it is a sly hit at Bonny's want of elbow-room when immured." Again, what are we to say to the want of lucidity which induces this genial authoress to sandwich the Eton boating song between two classical songs of the sea—"True Blue" and the "Ballad of John Dory." It is as though one should see a gilded youth of to-day, in flannels and "blazer," walking arm in arm with Drake and Raleigh. This want of arrangement pervades the whole book and deprives it of all value as a work of reference. Furthermore, the musical illustrations are almost invariably characterised by blunders of the grossest order. For example, on page 255, the Russian National Anthem is given with no less than eight solecisms—an inexcusable proceeding when one reflects that Miss Smith could have found it correctly given in at least a dozen collections. But we can almost forgive Miss Smith anything in our gratitude for the delightful bull which she has perpetrated on the following page. We transcribe the paragraph in extenso: "The singular peculiarities of the double-bass voice (sic), which supports the chords of the chants of the national worship, together with the players of the horn-bands' automatons of one note in Russia, are attributed by many to the state of serfdom, of no more real value in regard to art than so many organ pipes, since the singers or players can be little more than machines, comprising each a few select notes, whose owners are fit for small other service. However this may be, the Russian voice, be it free or slave, is universally allowed to be most melodious, and, like most northern countries, it would be impossible to overrate the freshness and vigour of its song melody. The sadness of it is seldom tintured with languor; the sweetness has something in it that braces as well as charms the sense. This may even be remarked when the minor key predominates, as it does so largely in Russian music." "The singular peculiarities of the double-bass voice" is worthy of Boyle Roche, and recalls somehow Artemus Ward's famous remark about the Mormon apostle, "his religion is singular, but his wives are plural." And then the "horn-bands' automatons of one note"! This is as obscure as Sordello or Persius. The last two sentences, be it observed, have already figured on page 203 as a quotation from Chorley, but Miss Smith has here incorporated them in her text without quotation marks.

One whole chapter in Miss Smith's book is devoted to Gaelic boat songs and Scotch sea songs. One cannot help feeling struck—if we accept Miss Smith's airs as correctly given—at the peculiar tessitura of these Gaelic songs. That given on page 88 ranges from D below the line in the G clef to B second ledger space. Again, the song noted on page 90 never rises above the middle B. On the following page, however, we encounter a song, a "Skye boat song," the form of which sadly shakes our belief in Miss Smith's accuracy. It is transcribed by permission from "Songs of the North," with five mistakes in two lines. The chapter winds up with a "Scotch Fisherman's song for attracting the seals." There is of course no accounting for the musical taste of a seal, but we hope that it has been misrepresented, for the air is singularly devoid of all alluring properties. As to the French sailors' and boatmen's songs given on pp. 139-169, no one with a rudimentary knowledge of the Gallic tongue can fail to be struck at the license which the author has allowed herself in her translations. For example, she renders parents as parents; pilote des étoiles qui naviguent aux cieux becomes "Thou pilot of the stars who steers in the heavens." The nautical terms, too, are frequently mistranslated. Halle dessus! means "pull away," whereas Miss Smith paraphrases it semi-phonetically "Hallo there, feather gently." On page 222 she uses the word "rig" as "rigging," whereas even a landsman knows the difference. Amid the German section we encounter our old friend the Lorelei, bedizened with strange grace notes and still stranger harmonies. The chapter on Greek water songs rather reminds us of a historic chapter on the manners and customs of the Caribbee islanders. Miss Smith wrote to Sir George Macfarren about "ancient Greek water songs," and received a reply to the effect that there were none extant. However, nothing daunted, she applied to other authorities, and succeeded in discovering in Miss Garnett's "Greek folk-songs" a lay of "The siren and the seamen," which ends up with the following delightfully enigmatical lines:—

But so sweet was the melody, so passing sweet her warbling,
The skipper turned him once again, and to the shore it drew him
And to the masts the mariners kept hanging in the rigging.

From Greece we proceed to Japan, where Miss Smith tells us something about the sacred mountain and "partially triangular-shaped boats" called sampans. Her lucubrations are summarised in the following lucid sentence. Incomplete and inaccurate her remarks may be, "but the distance that separates our world from theirs, the scanty communication that up till a few years ago existed between us, and the general ignorance shown in their country government and social life, may suffice to explain the difficulty of obtaining facts concerning so small a portion of the history of a people as their sailors' songs." We have spoken of Miss Smith's harmonies already, but the subject is recalled by the Indian boat song given on page 304—a truly naive setting. The chapter on sailors' superstitions contains one piece of perfectly novel information—to wit, that sailors consider whistling as very unlucky. We have always believed the contrary to be the case. The last words in the book are an appeal to the critics: "Gentle breath of yours my sails must fill, or else my project fails." Now there is a good deal to admire in this strange scrap-book of Miss Smith's—notably her enthusiasm in her subject. But it would be idle to pretend that she has fulfilled her aim. That aim, as we said at the outset, is an admirable one, but it has not been achieved by Miss Smith. Only a scholar and a musician could do justice to such a subject, and she unfortunately is neither.

THE OXFORD PROFESSOR OF MUSIC.

THE University of Oxford has made a wise choice in selecting Sir John Stainer from among the many applicants to fill the Professorial chair of music. His appointment will give the greatest satisfaction to all who are interested in the progress of musical art in this country. For reasons which are needless to specify, the position is one which hitherto has not been so completely commanding as all would wish to see. It is therefore to be hoped that the University, in making its choice of a musical representative whose views of art are liberal and comprehensive, has been guided by sentiments fully in accordance with the spirit of the age. If it be impossible at present to institute a course of musical teaching in the University, so that candidates for degrees may find within its boundaries all that is necessary for proper preparation, something may certainly be done by the moral influence which the new Professor may be able to exercise over the art as practised in the various centres within his cognisance.

Sir John Stainer is eminently fitted to direct the plan of study, should such a plan be decided upon, inasmuch as he has passed through every stage of a complete musical career. He comes of a family within whose circle music was studied as a labour of love. In his eighth year, in 1847, he was admitted a chorister in St. Paul's Cathedral, and at the early age of fourteen was appointed organist at St. Benet's, Paul's Wharf, a church now used by a Welsh congregation. Stainer was chosen organist at St. Michael's, Tenbury, in his sixteenth year, by Sir Frederick Ouseley, his predecessor in the Chair of Music at Oxford, and in 1861 he removed to Oxford, where he held the post of organist at Magdalen College, and, on the death of Dr. Stephen Elvey he was appointed organist to the University. He became a Commoner at St. Edmund Hall, and in due course took his degree as Bachelor of Arts in 1863, proceeding shortly after to that of Master—the unusually brief interval between the two degrees in Arts being accounted for by the fact that the proper number of terms had been passed since his matriculation for his degree in Music, which he took as a member of Christ Church in 1859, while he was yet organist at Tenbury. Stainer became Doctor of Music in 1865, his exercise for that degree being an oratorio. Upon the resignation of Sir John Goss, in 1872, Stainer became organist of St. Paul's, and in 1882 succeeded Dr. John Hullah as Inspector of Music. Stainer was one of the Commissioners at the last Exhibition at Paris, where he received the cross of the Legion of Honour, and having resigned the post of organist of St. Paul's last year, he was knighted by the Queen. Stainer's compositions are known throughout the world; and as the author of several theoretical works on music, and as joint compiler with Dr. W. A. Barrett of a most valuable standard work of reference in music, "The Dictionary of Musical Terms," he has done much not only to foster a love for the art of music, but to spread its knowledge. These are the qualities which undoubtedly helped the judgment of the electors in their choice of a Professor, and they are also those which, being recognised by the world of music at large, will strengthen the applause which follows the delivering of the verdict.

It has been long felt that the University was scarcely fulfilling its mission in the matter of music. The powers of the Professor were extremely limited; and it is possible also that the fact that he has hitherto been non-resident has, in a great measure, weakened what influence he may have possessed. The new Professor is resident in Oxford, and is bound by many ties of affection for and sympathy with the place. He is a member of Congregation, and would command attention for himself and for his office whenever he thought proper to express his views in Convocation. Since the Chair of Music was founded, in 1627, by Dr. William Heyther, it has been occupied by many worthy and eminent musicians, all of whom are credited with the honour of having done the best within their power to lend dignity to the art of music. It is scarcely necessary to recapitulate their services, but it is known that Sir Frederick Ouseley did much to elevate the Degrees in Music to a height more honoured than that in which he found them.

The continuance of this work and the further elevation of the art under the rule of the present Professor may be confidently looked for. Sir John Stainer has already accomplished much; and, although he has earned his retirement from active work of another character, the duties he will be called upon to exercise are likely to be more moral than manual. In this moral force will probably be found his greatest strength. The present actual labours of his office will not, perhaps, make great demands upon his time and talents, but those who know him need not to be told that he will be thorough in all that he undertakes. The musical world, which rejoices most heartily at his appointment, will also watch with curiosity, if not with anxiety, the effect of his sway. Sir John Stainer has, by his geniality of character, the power of attracting men to him; it may therefore be confidently expected that whatever changes he may think fit to suggest in the matter of music at Oxford will be dictated by good sense and propriety, so as to induce, if not to command, the support of those upon whom he may count to assist him in the endeavour to elevate the position of Music in the University as well as in the city of Oxford, and in due course throughout the world.

By JOSEPH BENNETT.

"FARAMONDO," with which Handel entered upon the last phase of his career as a composer of opera, was produced at the King's Theatre, under Heidegger's management, in January, 1738. It failed; for the master's unlucky star was still in the ascendant, five performances exhausting its interest for the public—a fact of which, Burney pretty broadly hints, the public should have been ashamed. Handel's friends, however, determined that he should make some profit out of the work, and caused it to be published by subscription. A pasticcio, entitled "Alexander Severus," followed, on February 25. This in turn giving way, on April 15, to a new opera, "Xerxes," in which there is a good deal of somewhat low comedy. But it mattered not what Handel at this time produced. Tragedy or comedy, an original work or a pasticcio, the town would have none of it, and "Xerxes" was withdrawn after the fifth representation. In the midst of so much misfortune, pursued by failure after failure, weighed down by debt, and even threatened with imprisonment by Del Po, the husband of Signora Strada, one of his creditors, Handel happily experienced the value of true friendship. Those of his once multitudinous admirers who remained faithful exerted themselves to secure the success of a benefit concert, which the London Daily Post thus announced: "On Tuesday, March 28, 1738, for the benefit of Mr. Handel, will be performed an Oratorio, with a Concerto on the Organ. Tickets, half-a-guinea; gallery, five shillings. N.B.—For the better convenience, there will be benches on the stage." The response to this appeal showed that the great master's unmerited misfortunes had excited sympathy among the public, though they would not go to hear his operas. There was a full house; and the receipts are given by Burney as £800, by Mainwaring as £1,500. The money, whatever it was, enabled Handel to get rid of his tormentor, Del Po, and thus to relieve himself of a distressing apprehension.

With regard to the sympathy just mentioned, Mainwaring would have us believe that, had Handel chosen to unbend a little, he might have been restored to his former favour with "society." The biographer says: "Had he been disposed to make any concessions his friends might easily have effected a reconciliation between him and his opponents. All parties would, in that case, have been glad to have seen him again at the Haymarket, for at this time all the sources of Opera music seem to have been drained to the very dregs. The sense of his abilities, the present exigency in which they were so much wanted; the recollection of his losses and sufferings; time itself, which, as it consumes many valuable things, so it often happily wears out resentments—in short, everything seemed to concur, and nothing was wanting, to ensure his future prosperity excepting a spirit which knew how to yield on proper occasions. . . . No prospect of advantage could tempt him to court those by whom he thought he had been injured and oppressed." Of course not. This great musician was no sycophant and time-server. With such a nature as his, accumulating misfortunes only intensified self-respect; and, vehemently believing himself to have been in the right, it was not for Handel to go, cap in hand, beseeching reconciliation with men who had prostituted high position and influence to his ruin. How completely after events justified the composer's attitude we shall have to show. Enough now that the composer remembered his dignity as a man and made no concessions.

By way of further consolation and encouragement, the successful benefit concert was followed by the erection of a Handel statue in Vauxhall Gardens. The Daily Post of April 18, 1738, thus anticipated this conspicuous homage: "We are informed, from very good authority, that there is now near finished a statue of the justly celebrated Mr. Handel, exquisitely done by the ingenious Mr. Raubillac [Roubilliac], of St. Martin's Lane statuary, out of one entire block of white marble, which is to be placed in a grand nich, erected on purpose in the great grove at Vauxhall Gardens, at the sole expense of Mr. Tyars, undertaker of the entertainment there, who, in consideration of the real merit of that inimitable master, thought it proper that his effigies should preside there, where his harmony has so often charmed even the greatest crowds into the profoundest calm, and most decent behaviour. It is believed that the expense of the statue and nich cannot cost less than three hundred pounds." The same paper, on May 2, informed its readers: "Last night, Vauxhall was opened, and there was a considerable appearance of persons of both sexes. The several pieces of music played on that occasion had never been heard before in the gardens. The company expressed great satisfaction at the marble statue of Mr. Handel." Bartolozzi's engraving of Roubilliac's work—published as a frontispiece to Arnold's edition of the master's compositions—has been reproduced in many forms, and we need not describe the statue, concerning the after history of which Mr. Rockstro says: "It remained at Vauxhall until the property was sold, in 1818, when it was removed to the house of the Rev. John Tyers Barrett. In 1830 it was offered for sale, but bought in for £210. In 1833 Mr. Brown, a distinguished connoisseur, obtained possession of it for £215 5s., and, wishing to obtain for it a permanent and honourable resting-place, generously sold it to the Sacred Harmonic Society for a nominal fee of one hundred guineas, in June, 1854. The dissolution of that admirable association has once more (1882) thrown it into private hands." The private hands, we may add, were those of the late Mr. Henry Littleton (Novello, Ewer and Co.), of whose establishment in Berners Street the statue was for some time a conspicuous ornament. It is now among the treasures of Westwood House, Sydenham, the residence of Mr. Alfred H. Littleton. "In all the history of the fine arts," writes Schœlcher, "this is, I believe, the only instance known of a statue being erected in honour of an artist during his lifetime. Human folly reserves exclusively that kind of glory for generals and kings; but it must be confessed, to the praise of Great Britain and to the honour of its intelligence, that the finest minds of the age—Pope, Fielding, Hogarth, Smollett, Gay, Arbuthnot, Hughes, Colley Cibber, &c., never for a moment misunderstood the great man, but all loudly manifested their admiration for him, and were not afraid to range themselves upon his side. His partisans were not to be daunted by anything; they recoiled neither before the blind hatred of the nobility, nor from the failure of his theatre, nor the fall of his later operas. They had protested against the judgment of the public by causing 'Faramondo,' 'Arminio,' and 'Atalanta' to be engraved by subscription, in spite of their failure. And it also deserves to be remarked that how strong soever was the party which opposed him, his operas were all of them published, and frequently by three publishers at once, whilst the greater part of those of his rivals remained in manuscript, or were only published in the form of selected airs." After all, the dark cloud that overhung Handel at this trying period of his career had a silver lining.

Returning to the unfortunate King's Theatre, we find Heidegger prematurely closing its doors on June 6, 1738, and returning a part of their subscription to his patrons. Italian opera was now very far gone indeed; so that when Heidegger invited subscriptions for another season the response was of a nature which led him to put forth the following notice: "Whereas the operas for the ensuing season at the King's Theatre in the Haymarket cannot be carried on as intended, by reason of the subscription not being full, and that I could not agree with the singers, though I offered one thousand guineas to one of them, I therefore think myself obliged to declare that I give up the undertaking for the next year." Handel was now, as far as concerned Italian opera, out of work, and produced nothing during the remainder of the year 1738. The position was one to which Providence had been leading him for some time. It made him reflect; and out of his reflections came the movement which, though it took him away from the theatre, raised him to prosperity and secured for him by far the largest part of his present glory.

Notwithstanding bad health, our master did not idle away the latter half of 1738. Between July 3 and September 27 he composed "Saul," following on with "Israel in Egypt," which occupied the first twenty-seven days of September. With these great works at command, he rented of Heidegger the unoccupied King's Theatre, and appealed once more to public appreciation of his merits. "Saul" was produced on January 16, 1739, "with several new concertos on the organ," and "Israel in Egypt" on April 4. No information has come down to us with respect to the reception of the first, but history has a good deal to say about the vicissitudes of the second—that master-work which must have been written, as Nelson fought at Copenhagen, with a blind eye to signals of recall. What sort of an impression it made at the first performance may be gathered from the announcement of the second, which said that "Israel" would be given "with alterations and additions, and the two last new concertos on the organ, being the last time of performing it." The process of dilution thus begun was carried on to a pitch for which we find it difficult to make excuse. The "songs," by the way, were Italian airs; yet, even with their aid, only three representations of the work were given during the year of its production. Revivals of "Alexander's Feast," and "Il Trionfo del Tempo e della Verità," helped to carry on the season, for which Handel, still clinging fondly to the lyric stage, provided a pasticcio opera, "Jupiter in Argos." Burney says of this work that, "this production, whatever it was, seems to have died in its birth, as I can find no other memorial of it" than a newspaper advertisement. Schœlcher was more fortunate, and tells us: "I have found, in the Fitzwilliam Museum, a great part of the MS. comprising the last pages dated—'fine dell' opera Jupiter in Argos, April 24, 1739. G. F. Handel,' which coincides with its conjectured performance on May 1. . . . I am inclined to believe it was never performed, because it is only to be found in the MSS. of scattered pieces, and there is no copy of it either in Buckingham Palace, or in Mr. Lennard's collection, or in Smith's collection."

We see no cause to believe that Handel's first season of oratorio was a brilliant pecuniary success; but the master felt encouraged to go on, and in November, 1739, we find him the tenant of the theatre in Lincoln's Inn Fields, where he brought out his music to Dryden's "Ode on St. Cecilia's Day," coupling it with "Alexander's Feast"; "Saul" and "Israel" followed—these works, with the Ode, keeping the enterprise going until "L'Allegro, Il Penseroso, e Il Moderato" was ready on February 27, 1740, having been written in the space of fourteen days. This work caused an admirer of Handel's to "drop into poetry" and sing or say:—

If e'er Arion's music calm'd the floods,
And Orpheus ever drew the dancing woods,
Why do not British trees and forests throng
To hear the sweeter notes of Handel's song?
This does the falsehood of the fable prove,
Or seas and woods, when Handel harps, would move?

Schœlcher, who quotes the feeble but well-meant effusion, grimly adds: "But 'L'Allegro' could no more move the people of those times than it could the 'seas and woods.' The season of 1739-40 was as unfruitful as its predecessors." Here let us quote Burney's tribute to the indomitable musician whom the storms of fate could no more move from his purpose than they could uproot the everlasting hills:

"Handel's activity and spirit of enterprise, at this time in his fifty-sixth year were truly wonderful. Opposed and oppressed by the most powerful nobles and gentry of the kingdom; suffering with bodily and mental disease; with rivals innumerable; when a Spanish war was just broke out, which occupied the minds and absorbed the thoughts of the whole nation—amidst all these accumulated misfortunes and impediments, he composed his twelve grand Concertos and Dryden's Second Ode, brought out 'Saul,' 'Israel in Egypt,' 'Jupiter in Argos'; published seven sonatas, and revived 'Il Trionfo del Tempo,' 'Acis and Galatea,' and 'Alexander's Feast.' And yet this seems to have been one of the most idle years of his public life."

In November, 1740, Handel was again the tenant of Rich's theatre in Lincoln's Inn Fields. He began the new season with revivals, and on the 22nd produced the opera of "Imenes" (Hymen), which he had composed in the intervals of his labour upon "Saul." It was performed only twice, and followed, first, by a revival of "L'Allegro," and, next, by another opera, "Deidamia," which ran for three nights only. These disasters, for such they were, brought Handel to see, at last, that he should give up Italian opera altogether. Having discovered this—with how much reluctance and pain we can imagine—he acted manfully upon the knowledge. "Deidamia" was his last opera; and when the curtain descended upon its final performance, he turned his back upon the lyric for which he had done and suffered so much. Now, at the age when many men think of resting upon their laurels, Handel began a new and greater life. To this point, as we have again and again insisted, circumstances had long been steadily urging him. He arrived at it late, but not too late for the most brilliant achievements of his career.

The season 1740-41 closed in April with a performance, which Handel announced in these terms: "This being the last time of performing, many persons of quality and others are pleased to make great demands for box tickets, which encourages me (and I hope it will not give offence) to put the pit and boxes together at half-a-guinea each." It was with reference to the closing night that a letter, signed J. B., appeared in the Daily Post—a letter not in the best taste, perhaps, as regards Handel himself, but well-meant, and now valuable for its evidence as to the master's environment at the period. Schœlcher quotes it, and from his pages we make the following extract:—

"If we are not careful for him (Handel) let us be, for our own credit, with the polite world, and if old age or infirmity—if even a pride so inseparable from great men have offended, let us take it as the natural foible of the great genius, and let us overlook them like spots upon the sun. . . . I wish I could urge this apology to its full efficacy, and persuade the gentlemen of figure and weight who have taken offence at any part of this great man's conduct (for a great man he must be in the musical world, whatever misfortunes, now too late, may say to the contrary)—I wish I could persuade them, I say, to take him back into favour and relieve him from the cruel persecution of those little vermin who, taking advantage of their displeasure, pull down even his bills as fast as he has them put up, and use a thousand other little acts to injure and distress him. But, in the meantime, let the public take care that he wants not—that would be an unpardonable ingratitude; and as this Oratorio of Wednesday next is his last for the season, and, if report be true, probably his last for ever in this country, let them, with a generous and friendly benevolence, fill this his last house, and show him, on his departure, that London, the greatest and richest city in the world, is rich and great in virtue as well as in money, and can pardon and forget the failings, or even the faults, of a great genius."

Two points in the foregoing are of great interest. We see the extent of the petty malignancy to which the "little vermin," whom we should now call "swells," degraded themselves in their hatred of Handel. Imagine the fine gentlemen of 1741 pulling down the bills of the gallant musician who was trying to get a living in spite of them! Lower than this he could not go. And all for what? Simply because Handel recognised the dignity of himself and his calling, and would not stoop to curry favour with men, most of whom were infinitely inferior to himself in all that constitutes true greatness. But the "classes" were then, as now, jealous for their privileges—one of which was to be fawned upon and flattered by literary men and artists, whom they kept waiting in their ante-rooms as trophies, as Napoleon kept the Kings at Erfurt. The second point is a report that Handel had resolved to leave the country. We honestly wonder why he did not. Germany would have killed the fatted calf in his honour; Italy would again have opened her arms to the "divine Saxon." It was, however, like Handel to hold on. He had the grim determination of General Grant, who, amid the slaughter of The Wilderness, telegraphed that he should "fight it out on this line, if it takes all summer." If it took all his life, Handel would "fight it out" in London. He did, and, like Grant, came off conqueror. Handel left London on November 4 or 5, and made his way to Chester, where he remained awhile, on account of contrary winds. Here, for the sake of completeness, we must quote a well-known passage from Dr. Burney, who in it has handed down to us one of the most often repeated Handelian jokes. Burney, then a mere boy, was living in Chester when the great master halted there, and he tells us: "I was at the public school in Chester, and very well remember seeing him smoke a pipe over a dish of coffee, at the Exchange Coffee House, and, being extremely curious to see so extraordinary a man, I watched him narrowly as long as he remained in Chester, where he stayed on account of the wind being unfavourable for his embarking at Parkgate. During this time he applied to Mr. Baker, the organist, my first music master, to know whether there were any choirmen in the Cathedral who could sing at sight, as he wished to prove some books that had been hastily transcribed, by trying the choruses which he intended to perform in Ireland. Mr. Baker mentioned some of the most likely singers then in Chester, and, among the rest, a printer of the name of Janson, who had a good bass voice, and was one of the best musicians in the choir. At this time, Harry Alcock, a good player, was the first violin at Chester, which was then a very musical place, for, besides public performances, Mr. Prebendary Prescott had a weekly concert, at which he was able to muster eighteen or twenty performers, gentlemen and professors. A time was fixed for a private rehearsal at the Golden Falcon, where Handel was quartered; but, alas! on trial of the chorus in the 'Messiah,' 'And with His stripes we are healed,' poor Janson, after repeated attempts, failed so egregiously that Handel let loose his great bear upon him, and, after swearing in four or five different languages, cried out, in broken English, 'You scoundrel, did you not tell me that you could sing at sight?' 'Yes, sir,' says the printer, 'and so I can, but not at first sight.'"

Handel reached Dublin on November 18, and Faulkner's Journal told its readers: "Last Wednesday, the celebrated Dr. Handel arrived here on the packet boat from Holyhead; a gentleman universally known by his excellent compositions in all kinds of music, and particularly for his Te Deum, Jubilate, anthems, and other compositions in church music (of which, for some years past, have principally consisted the entertainments in the Round Church, which have so greatly contributed to support the charity of Mercer's Hospital) to perform his oratorios, for which purpose he hath engaged Mr. MacLaine, his wife, and several others of the best performers in the musical way." Handel was now among warm-hearted friends, and in that pleasant condition we will, for the present, leave him.

By WILLIAM H. CUMMINGS.

THE Gentleman's Magazine of January contains an article, under the title "Wine and Music," full of mis-statements and libels on the art of music and its professors; indeed, it is not asserting too much to declare that the essay is untrue from beginning to end. I am not at present concerned to expose all the fallacies contained in the author's harsh and uncharitable romance; but, having made a deep study of Henry Purcell's life and work, I am desirous of showing how grossly his memory has been defamed. Here are some quotations from the article referred to:—"Purcell's Head,' Westminster, savours unmistakably of some close proximity to the Abbey, where one of music's brightest sons was organist and master of the choristers some decades gone. That the tavern was named after, and of course patronised by, England's greatest musician, folks would conclude, despite what every antiquarian and old collector could endorse about the signboard outside, whereon was painted a half-length portrait of Henry Purcell—in a nightgown and wig—such part-undress uniform doubtless having reference to the late hours which the organist of the neighbouring Abbey kept, and the untidy way in which he went to bed when at length he could be got there. Who was the Dean in those days need not transpire, but there is little doubt that the house was the rendezvous of the vicars-choral of the Abbey, and that night after night it resounded with the convivial strains of glees and catches which flavoured very strongly of the genius who figured at the front of the house. Harmless enough in themselves, perhaps, were those festive meetings, though possibly less wine would have been better for the Abbey choir, and less music for the repose of the neighbours. How many similar institutions to the 'Purcell's Head' abound might shock deans and incumbents to know; but they are plentiful enough, though not often as barefaced in their signboards as that which graced the public house in St. Anne's Lane, Westminster, two hundred years ago."

Let us examine the above statement. It is true that there was a tavern in Westminster called the "Purcell's Head"; Sir John Hawkins mentions it in his "History of Music" as "a house in Wych Street, behind the new church in the Strand, within time of memory known by a sign of Purcell's head, a half-length; the dress, a brown full-bottomed wig, and a green nightgown, very finely executed; the name of the person who last kept it as a tavern was Kennedy, a good performer on the bassoon, and formerly in the opera band." Sir John Hawkins purchased the signboard, and from it was engraved the print which adorns his history. This tavern was very far removed from Westminster Abbey. It was probably a theatre house, and the adoption of the sign may be regarded as an honour to and recognition of the public fame of "England's greatest musician." Handel's Head was a common tavern sign in the last century. At the present day "Jenny Lind" figures in a similar way. Is it possible that some future writer will therefore come to the conclusion that this noble woman was in the habit of exhibiting her vocal skill at that particular house?

The writer in the Gentleman's Magazine goes on to say: "Mrs. Purcell objected to the late hours which the presidency of the Purcell's Head festivities necessitated, and, as pleading was vain, she put her foot down, and, acting upon the principle of facta non verba, strictly enjoined the servants to lock the door at twelve, and not to let their master in after that hour—toleration enough, in all conscience! Unfortunately, bachelor habits were too strong for Mr. Purcell, and he returned one winter's night only to find the door barred and bolted against him. He knocked, but in vain; and although it was a bitter night, he had to pass the time in the streets, which incident accelerated a too early death, and stands, I hope, a warning to all modern wives to allow a latch-key." This wonderful story is all built upon a passage in Sir John Hawkins's history, where he says: "There is a tradition that his (Purcell's) death was occasioned by a cold which he caught in the night waiting for admittance to his own house. It is said that he used to keep late hours, and that his wife had given orders to his servants not to let him in after midnight; unfortunately, he came home heated with wine from the tavern at an hour later than that prescribed him, and through the inclemency of the air contracted a disorder of which he died. If this be true, it reflects but little honour on Madam Purcell, and but ill agrees with those expressions of grief for her dear lamented husband which she makes use of to Lady Howard in the dedication of the 'Orpheus Britannicus.' It seems probable that the disease of which he died was rather a lingering than an acute one, perhaps a consumption." We see that Hawkins doubted the truth of the so-called tradition; and his daughter some years after, in her "Biographical Sketches," referring to this slander and a similar one on her mother, says: "Mrs. Purcell, I should conjecture, had other modes of attracting Mr. Purcell; yet perhaps the whole may have been as gross a falsification as that by which Lady Hawkins is vilified."

The testimony of Purcell's son as to the lingering nature of his illness may be worth something here. He remarked that an oil portrait of his father was very like him, as he appeared a few years before his death, but that for some long time he had been getting gradually thinner and thinner.

Hawkins, in his history, gave publicity to another tradition that Purcell was intimate with Tom Brown, the author, "who spent his life in taverns and ale-houses"; but in that case also the tradition was false, as we know by certain verses published by Brown, in 1693, addressed "to his unknown friend, Mr. H. Purcell."

When we consider the immense amount and the varied kind of labour Purcell accomplished during his short life of thirty-seven years, we must conclude that, although of a bright and joyous nature, he was of temperate habits. He had not only his duties at Westminster Abbey and the Chapel Royal, but also constant occupation in composing for the Church, the Court, and the theatre; he had numerous professional pupils, and gave lessons in the families of some of the most distinguished gentry and aristocracy; he was in frequent attendance on Queen Mary, and was often engaged to preside over and direct the concerts given in private assemblies, amongst others at the Lord Keeper North's, in Queen Street. This nobleman was the author of the "Memoires of Musick," and, knowing Purcell well, often speaks of him, but never to his disparagement. The Rev. Arthur Bedford, chaplain to the Duke of Bedford, author of a book published in 1711 on "The Great Abuse of Musick," bears eloquent testimony to the genius and personal worth of Purcell. Similar evidence can be deduced from the writings of Dr. Tudway, Purcell's contemporary. In 1702, a few years after Purcell's death, a long eulogy of him was printed. Here are some of the lines:—

Make room, ye happy natures of the sky,
Room for a soul all love and harmony;
A soul that rose to such perfection here
It scarce will be advanced by being there.

Ah, most unworthy! should we leave unsung
Such wondrous goodness in a life so young?
In sight of Practice, he this truth hath shewn
That Harmony and Virtue should be one.

So justly were his Soul and Body join'd,
You'd think his Form the product of his Mind;
A cong'ring sweetness in his Visage dwelt;
His eyes would warm, his Wit like light ning melt.
Pride was the sole aversion of his eye,
Himself as humble as his Art was high.
Oh! let him, Heaven (in life so much ador'd)
Be now as universally deplor'd!

Dr. Burney, the music historian, who wrote at the same period as Sir John Hawkins, and had similar opportunities of converse with persons who had known Purcell, never refers to the slanderous story, but in a biographical notice of the great composer says: "As an amiable and pleasing man he has been as much celebrated as for his professional abilities. The writer of this article is old enough to remember the affectionate rapture with which he was mentioned by those who knew him personally."

I have omitted to refer to the fact, well known to antiquaries, that immediately before, and in Queen Anne's reign, it was the fashion for grand folk to promenade the streets, and to have their portraits taken, in night-robes—the ladies called them night-rails. Purcell's portrait was, therefore, taken à la mode, and had no reference to untidiness or other fancied bad habit. Dr. Burney possessed an original drawing of Purcell by Sir Godfrey Kneller, described as follows: "In which there is a glow of beauty, expression, and genius above humanity; it might with propriety pass for the head of Apollo." From that sketch Kneller painted the portrait of the composer, which is now one of the many artistic treasures possessed by Mr. Alfred Littleton. Purcell died of consumption, and his end was accelerated by daily attendance at Westminster Abbey during the severe winter of 1694-5. Visitors to the Abbey at the present time find the atmosphere comfortably warmed; but I can testify to the fact that, before the introduction of artificial heating, it was no uncommon thing for the breath to freeze on the veils worn by ladies attending the services. In the accounts given of the funeral of Queen Mary, which took place in March, 1695, we read of the heavy snow, and of the robin which, having taken refuge within the walls of the Abbey, flew down and perched on the coffin. For this ceremonial Purcell composed his magnificent funeral music, and of course assisted in its performance. In conclusion, I would protest against the too common practice of concocting highly spiced articles for popular journals, in which the desire for "smart writing" is permitted to thrust aside all regard for truth and fact, and all reverence for the memories of the "great and dear departed."

It has already been observed in these columns that the general tendency of modern songs is to exalt the accompaniments to a position beyond their merits and requirements. The true test of the value of a song is to be found in the independence of the melody, which should possess sufficient interest to secure its own reception as an artistic creation. Its form should be suggested by the requirements of the words with which it is associated, and the accompaniment should be an adornment rather than a necessity of construction. The reason of the success which attended the older songs was found in the fact that there was some degree of natural sequence in the phrases, which being once suggested, supplied, as it were, the chain of succession which was required to impress it upon the mind. Words and music were in apt fellowship, and the one recalled the other. In the vast number of songs continually poured forth from the press every day at the present time, only those become popular which have some melodic attraction. The observance of principles which have served as a guide to song-writers of all nations in every generation, still stands as a basis for construction. It is useless dwelling upon the assertion that the older composers were compelled to make their melodies complete in themselves, inasmuch as in the days that are past, the pianoforte, the household orchestra as it has been called, was not so common an article of furniture as it is now. One or two clever writers make harmony serve the place of melody. They find work for the hands rather than for the voice, and construct songs upon a plan which gives the singer little to do beyond reiterating one note, or ringing the changes upon the several notes of which a chord is composed. This sort of thing is forced into popularity by a principle which is in-artistic and mercenary, and Art is forgotten. Composers are, in their way, as gregarious as the audiences to whom they appeal, and the community of treatment which distinguishes all songs produced during certain periods indicates a desire to profit by the dictates of a fashion not always founded in good taste. That these things do not pass unobserved, except by those who blindly follow the fashion, may be proved by the many caricatures and burlesques of the style which are made in the humorous prints and on the stage. All artistic efforts that are new are subject to burlesque. None that are good are crushed by it. If all the sarcasm which has been levelled against the songs of modern times has an ultimate effect in improving their quality and character, it will not have been called into exercise in vain. Art will survive and artfulness be found to be unremunerative.

HAD Hogarth's "Enraged Musician" lived in the days of the Salvation Army there can be little doubt that he would have taken some decisively active measures to silence the horrible din under his window, instead of relieving his mind by those distortions of countenance with which the artist has endeavoured to represent the intensity of his agony. That it is not necessary, however, to be a "musician" in order to feel the full force of the annoyance to which all quiet citizens are now subjected, is fully proved by the fact of a large number of Islington tradesmen recently waiting upon a police magistrate, requesting him "to put a stop to the nuisance caused by the beating of drums, blowing of noisy horns, and general disturbance of the peace of the neighbourhood by a noisy band of people perambulating the roadway, ruining the business, and depreciating the property every evening, desecrating the Sabbath at three different times on Sunday, and robbing us at our homes of our day of rest, and disturbing us at our places of worship." As, upon being remonstrated with, one of their body said that "when the Spirit of the Lord seized the big drummer he was bound to beat," it is evident that the definition of music as "organised noise" would not apply to the band of the Salvation Army, especially if all the other instrumentalists are moved by the same influence. The Police Act tells us that "any person blowing a horn, and thereby attracting a crowd to gather together may be proceeded against"; but these instrumentalists appear to have laws peculiar to themselves, and we can imagine, therefore, that they may blow a horn, as they beat a drum, in so eccentric a manner as to disperse, rather than to attract, a crowd, and thus effectually to evade the law. At all events, we think that if they desire to evangelise the world by their preaching, they should not commence by repelling us with their music.

It is announced that the Leeds and Huddersfield School Boards are encouraging the teaching of the Staff, in preference to the Tonic Sol-fa, notation in its advanced classes; and we are glad to find that a correspondent has, in the pages of a contemporary, called attention to this fact as likely to lead to the establishment of village orchestras; for it is obvious that, excellent as is the spread of music in schools, so long as it is mainly confined to the formation of choirs by the aid of the Sol-fa notation, there can be little hope of any extensive development of instrumental music. It gives us much pleasure to lend our assistance in ventilating this important subject, for there can be no doubt that, whilst we are debating on the relative value of the two notations for vocal music, the study of orchestral instruments can be but partially carried on, and indeed, without more active State encouragement, it is likely to die out altogether as a national movement. A portion of the sum annually spent by our Government for the promotion of music in elementary schools should be devoted to the teaching of instruments, with a view to the organisation of orchestras, so that not only open-air music may be more often heard, but that bands may be trained for performance in village concert-rooms. We know that the well-drilled band of the Boys' Home, in the Regent's Park Road, is often hired for fêtes and garden-parties; why therefore should not other large institutions of this kind form a class for the practice of orchestral instruments which will in time be equally available for similar engagements? Surely such an undertaking would bring not only pleasure but profit to its promoters.

THE gifted word-artist who occasionally adorns the columns of various newspapers with glowing records of things musical, does not appear to hold a special local habitation. His kaleidoscopic descriptions appear in various journals in places far apart. His influence would therefore seem to be less endemic than epidemic. Now he shines in a suburban print, now in a provincial sheet, and now the columns of the London dailies are in his hands. Here he tells of the higher flights of operatic endeavour, there of a village penny reading. His language is equally vivid in all cases. Mark how he speaks of the prima donna at a Concert given in connection with a local flower show:—"The magnificent singing of Miss Gomes was an event which Llanelleyvites will only regret they have not heard before. Her nightingale tones shadowed the non-appearance of Signor Foli, and the large audience dispersed, not filled with heart-burnings at the fickleness of the great basso, but suffused with a glow of admiration for the unrivalled singing of Miss Gomes. Holding as she does so prominent a place among the leading sopranos of the world, it would seem almost presumptuous to add to the flood of praise under which her name is already buried. Quivering with native excellence in the slurs, she was as firm as a rock in the sustained notes, no matter how high they went to, while the 'timber' of her voice was something which left those who heard it richer than before. After a brief silence, the audience broke out in rapturous applause and insisted on her return. She graciously responded with 'Caller herrin'."

It is often asserted that poets as a rule make mistakes when employing technical musical expressions. The only exception hitherto admitted being Shakespeare, who always uses a musical term appositely. A "Concordance to the Poems and Songs of Robert Burns," recently published by Kerr and Richardson, of Glasgow, proves that the Ayrshire bard, though included in the general list of wrong-doers, is not so much at fault in the matter as his accusers suppose. A casual examination of the references made to music and musical expressions in this most comprehensive and valuable book, brings to light an astonishing evidence of the accuracy of his judgment if not of his knowledge. If therefore the work, which is a monument of patient and skilful industry, shows that Burns knew how to employ his musical knowledge with correctness, many musicians and writers on music may take heart of grace and enter into a new field, for the words of Burns—most quotable of poets—may be as safely repeated in reference to the divine art as they have been in expressing the varieties of thought and character in human nature.

"BUFFEREE" is another new word just added to the vocabulary of terms to be employed in music. This time it is of positive application. Many of the words lately imported into our speech are of negative significance. The "indisposition" of a performer may be interpreted variously. The word "rendition," as applied to a performance, has an application which is the reverse of complimentary, for if it means anything at all, it signifies "tearing to pieces." There are other words which, though of questionable English, we need not now stay to mention or to discuss; we will only say that as they are based upon slang terms they will pass away as the fashion changes. It is only when a term like "bufferee," applied to the new musical piece by Mr. Edward Solomon, is brought prominently forward, that the reader may pause and ask—What is a "bufferee"? Has it any affinity with a "bummaree," who is what Shakespeare calls "a snapper up of unconsidered trifles"? or with a "kedgerie," which is a compound of warmed-up scraps highly seasoned to suit the jaded palate.

FACTS, RUMOURS, AND REMARKS.

OUR contemporary, the Musical World, has given the benefit of its circulation to copious extracts from what we take to be a silly novel called "Ardath." In the course of fulsome eulogy of Sarasate, the writer of this book makes an attack upon musical critics, from some part of which our readers may derive amusement. She says: "You might as well shake a dry clothes-prop and expect it to blossom into fruit and flower as argue with a musical critic, and expect him to be enthusiastic. The worst of it is, these men are not really musical—they perhaps know a little of the grammar and technique of the thing, but they cannot understand its full eloquence. In the presence of a genius like Pablo de Sarasate they are more or less perplexed—it is as though you asked them to describe in set cold terms the counterpoint and thorough bass of the wind's symphony to the trees, the great ocean's sonata to the shore, or the delicate madrigals sung almost inaudibly by little bell-blossoms to the tinkling fall of April rain. (Oh, beautiful exceedingly!) The man is too great for them—he is a blazing star that dazzles and confounds their sight—and, after the manner of their craft, they abuse what they can't understand. Music is distinctly the language of the emotions, and they have no emotion. They therefore generally prefer Joachim—the good, stolid Joachim who so delights all the dreary old spinsters and dowagers who nod over their knitting needles (!) at the Monday Popular Concerts, and fancy themselves lovers of the 'classical' in music." This extraordinary tirade becomes the more interesting when we recall the fact that its writer once tried her hand at musical criticism in a monthly journal, the "Theatre."

OUR contemporary, the Musical Standard, has upon its staff a contributor who is of exceeding value in that he contrives to diversify reports of Concerts in a most engaging and sometimes surprising manner. It is not given to many so to arrest the attention of readers when dealing, as often musical critics needs must, with the commonplace. Our readers, accustomed to less spicy fare, will thank us for a few examples. The contributor in question advises Miss Nettie Carpenter to practise violin playing "before a looking-glass, and watch herself attentively." He informs the world that Mr. Thorne's Concert "collided with Señor Sarasate's over the way," but that "Mr. Osborne, of the Philharmonic Society, was present."

We are told also, with reference to Mr. Pachmann's Recital, that the artist was highly complimented by a "veteran Philharmonic director," probably Mr. Osborne, and, à propos to a Concert of the Guildhall School, that Mr. Richard Dressel "has also done good work at the West End, and his two sons bid fair to be good instrumental performers." Then there is a tendency on the contributor's part to quote the sayings of a lady connoisseur, "which, perhaps, her name is Harris." This person, "who can play Beethoven's Sonatas to admiration, went so far as to denounce a portion of the work (Cherubini's Quartet in A minor) as exceedingly stupid." All this gives unwanted life to routine reports and should make our contemporary's opening pages exceedingly welcome to their readers.

THE old battle between clergyman and organist was fought over again at the Norwich Police Court, on the 4th ult., the Rev. E. R. Ward, of St. Lawrence Church, and his organist, Mr. E. G. Scott, having taken out cross-summonses, in the one case for "indecent behaviour" under the sacred roof, in the other for an assault. A more trumpety affair cannot be imagined. The rector wanted the practice day changed, and the organist objected. The rector said he was master, whereupon, according to his own account, the organist rushed at him in a threatening manner, following him from the vestry into the church, and calling him a pig and a cad. The organist's statement charged the clergyman with accusing him of drunkenness, and with pushing him "with what looked like an umbrella." Having heard evidence on both sides, the bench decided that the two men were equally guilty of a technical offence, and dismissed the cases, regretting that the matter had been brought before them at all. Are Christian charity and forbearance so scarce in Norwich that even officials of the church have none? In the organist's case, it may certainly be pleaded that possession of those rare virtues is not considered in a salary of twelve pounds.

WE congratulate the South Hampstead Advertiser on possession of a musical critic who has a just claim to the credit of individuality. Nobody writes like him, and among the best of his recent efforts is the following, having reference to an Organ Recital by Mr. Pettmann: "Perhaps the selection which afforded him most scope for his powers was an improvisation, which was played by desire, to show the solo stops of the organ. To give a work 'with no settled idea or plan' is a test of any musician's skill, and Mr. Pettmann proved that his abilities are not only of the manipulatory order, but that he has considerable powers of imagination, an acquirement of almost vital necessity to a successful player. The stops were shown, and we were glad to notice how very sweet and full their tones are. A little more graduated work in the terminations would perhaps have improved Mr. Pettmann's contributions, but with this small exception they were successfully rendered in every detail." It is to be hoped that, in future, Mr. Pettmann's contributions will have their terminations a little more graduated, whatever that may mean.

WE take from the Somerset and Wilts Journal a conspicuous case of "piling up the agony":—"But what shall we say of Dr. J. F. Bridge? It would be presumptuous on our part to criticise, even if there were room for criticism; but with such a master of the instrument, whose enthusiasm and soul for music seem to be infused into the organ, and from thence to the listener, nothing short of profound admiration and delighted wonder can adequately express one's feelings. There seemed to be every variety of manipulation, from the gentle tripping of a maiden to the tramp of a battalion; from the whisper of a summer zephyr to the crash of thunder; from the merry tinkling of silver bells to the roar of a storm-tossed ocean; from the dulcet strains of a shepherd's pipe or an Æolian lyre to the blare of a thousand trumpets; from the staccato touch of a little child to the dance of an army of giants; from the sweetest of airs playing at hide and seek to the chase of exquisite melodies in the mazes of the grandest and most majestic of fugues." The author of this effusion would make his fortune in the West of America.

OUR readers may have been interested in the singing competition of Working Girls' Clubs, at which Mr. W. Henry Thomas recently presided. The whole matter will be worthy of attention when next it comes up for notice in the same form; meanwhile we give publicity to part of a letter received from a lady connected with the Club which carried off the prize. Our correspondent observes:—"They (the girls) are engaged in factories and places of business in the day-time, and come home often very weary, but never too tired to practise their glees, as the one strong attraction of an elevating kind to this class of girls is music and singing. We have tried in vain to rouse their interest in study of any kind involving brain exercise. They are incapable of fixing their attention after the day's drudgery, while to music or singing they respond at once." Here then we have a well-defined course marked out for benevolent action. Music sweetens the lives of those poor hard-working girls. Give them plenty of it, and make their enjoyment both abundant and easy.

THAT the late Ilma di Murska died in poverty and distress is now denied by Mr. Joseph Eder, of Vienna, who describes himself as the father of her daughter. Mr. Eder says:—"The above-mentioned daughter is a child of her marriage with me, and during the summer of last year she had in vain sought for her mother's address by letters, and even with the assistance of the German Consulate she could not ascertain her New York address until Di Murska had landed in Europe. To pacify admirers of the eminent and talented Di Murska, I can inform them that she was placed by her daughter in one of the best boarding houses in the beautiful Maximilian street in Munich, and as the inhabitants of the boarding house will readily bear witness, she was cared for and tended like a princess, for the space of eight weeks, down to the end of her life, for which purpose my daughter had sufficient resources in hand." If this be truth we are glad to know it.

WE give our readers, as something to think about, an extract from the San Francisco Examiner:—"The enjoyment of music is a purely sensual enjoyment. It 'tickles the ear' and it does nothing else. The ear being skilfully tickled after a fashion which the composer and the executant understand, emotion ensues; but no thought, save by association—memory. Music does not touch the springs of the intellect. It never generated a process of reasoning, nor expressed a truth, artistic or other, which could be formulated in a definite proposition. It has no intellectual character whatever. I have heard this disputed scores of times, but never by one who had himself an intellectual character. And, in truth, musicians—if I must say it—are not commonly distinguished above their fellows by mental capacity.

The greater their gift the less they know; and when you find a tremendously skilful and enthusiastic executant you will have as nearly sensual an animal as you cared to catch."

THE Globe has fallen foul of "a person called G. W. L. Marshall-Hall" on account of certain views about music contributed by him to "one of the Radical halfpennies." Mr. Marshall-Hall—who is known to us by some obstreperous music performed at a Henschel Concert—holds that "the masses alone are musical, while the classes are stumbling-blocks in the way of musical art." He further considers that "the patrons of music among the classes are guilty of wearing collars of huge dimensions, smooth, oily hats, and clean gloves; they are mouth-educated, heart-ignorant, dilettanti; they write long programme descriptions about the way in which they suppose the work was manufactured, lounge late into their cushioned stalls, and generally are the musician's bugbear." Mr. Marshall-Hall has even a worse opinion of the professional critics; but what does it matter?

AMERICA has taken to producing comic operas, and this is how the American Musician handles an example named "Ardrielle": "The book is tiresome, and there is not one scene in the entire opera which is interesting in the least; it has no amusing situations, though there are at least two comic personages who might have been used to advantage to enliven the monotony of the dialogue, and give variety and colour to the music; as it is, the librettist seems to have laboured under the impression that to render his work acceptable as a comic opera nothing more was needed than a lot of ridiculous horseplay of the rough-and-tumble order. The music has no particular character of its own." If this be the way in which Americans treat their native muse, European librettists and composers need not tremble for the transatlantic market.

THE Parisians have been listening to "The Messiah" (first time since 1875), and we should be glad to know of their agreement with the Ménestrel, which speaks of the "charming freshness" of some among its numbers, and the "irresistible power" of others. We seldom meet with a criticism of the "Hallelujah Chorus," but our French colleague (to whom the subject may be novel) ventures upon one, and says: "The chorus, 'Hallelujah,' remains a masterpiece of grandeur, but it wants the special character that should distinguish a religious hymn from a war song. Handel's piece would have done better to receive, at the Capitol, a victorious general of ancient Rome, than to welcome the peaceful coming of the Messiah." Our friend is all abroad as to the purport of the chorus in Handel's great work.

No stronger proof can be adduced of the excellent results now effected by the spread of music amongst the poor than the fact of 500 children recently assembling in St. James's Hall at the Annual Meeting of the Reformatory and Refuge Union, and singing, under the direction of Mr. Proudman, a selection of music to some well-chosen words. Considering that all the young performers were taken from London "Homes" affiliated to the Union, the pleasurable excitement consequent upon appearing before a number of ladies and gentlemen, and joining in songs of joy and thanksgiving may be readily imagined, the beaming face of every member of the choir lending a brightness to the scene which will not be easily forgotten by the large audience attracted on this interesting occasion.

A CURIOSITY of criticism lately appeared in a Croydon journal, à propos of a performance of Stainer's "St. Mary Magdalen." Our suburban contemporary remarked: "The tenor recitative 'See'st thou this woman,' introduced the audience to a most pleasing and effective voice and rendering, which at once made Mr. Gawthrop (H.M. Chapel Royal) a favourite. Then we had the first effort of the Society (Croydon Choral) in the chorus 'Come, ye sin-defiled and weary.' In the subdued harmonies which enrich this item even numbers can breathe expressive strains, beyond the mere noting of piano and forte, which may be automatically adjusted with the result of a change and nothing more." The writer should be called upon for an explanation.

A CONTEMPORARY regales its readers with a delightful non sequitur which we cannot refrain from borrowing: "It may not be generally known that Mr. T. E. Gatehouse, the popular violinist, and master at the South London Institute and the Birkbeck Institute, was a pupil of Mr. E. Polonaski. We are pleased to be able to state that these gentlemen continue on terms of intimate friendship, and that they speak of each other, as master and pupil, in the highest terms." Why it should be a pleasure to state that these gentlemen, having been master and pupil, are now on good terms is, we take it, the special knowledge of our contemporary's paragraphist, who churlishly keeps the secret to himself.

WE recently drew attention to the numerous and remarkable errors in a little book, entitled "Catechism of History of Musicians," by M. J. Bell. Since then a second and revised edition has reached us, but, we are sorry to say, there is need of a third to revise the reviser, who passed such mistakes as these: Weissinfals, peace with Utrecht, Gemeniani, Sabastian, Glück, Düssek, Wörte, Biset, Tannhäuser, Liedertafal, and Les Huguenot. Unfortunately the book contains graver errors than those of orthography, as when the author tells us that Beethoven wrote the nine symphonies "after he became deaf." For all this there can be no excuse.

LAST month we nailed a lie to the counter, and concerning it Madame Minnie Hauk writes to us: "Your notice in the esteemed MUSICAL TIMES was sent me a few days ago, and great indeed was my surprise to read of my being 'hissed off the stage at Posen.' Such a thing has never been done to me, and never will be, I trust, and, as you rightly say, it is a gross slander. The notice appeared in America, where, unfortunately, the penny-a-liner is at home, and à tout prix must get up something striking so as to attract attention, be it personal or artistic slander. I can bear it. Fortunately my English friends know me, and I am grateful to them for defending me."

It is a healthy sign that the Americans know how to get fun out of their own big notions. We read in the American Musician:—"A project is under way to have 60,000,000 people of the United States join in singing the 'Star Spangled Banner' at a fixed hour on the 4th of July next. Should such a scheme be finally determined upon, about 20,000,000 of our people will sail for Europe in June, and the other 40,000,000 would explode cannon crackers during the 'fixed hour' on the 4th. But this, come to think of it, would leave no one to do the singing—and it would be just as well."

THOSE who desire to appear musical without studying music have now, it seems, every facility offered to them for effecting their object. Should they wish to pass an examination, they may be "coached" instead of taught; ambitious composers can have their crude works corrected, revised, and prepared for publication; and aspiring young pianists, with the aid of a book just issued, called "How to Vamp to Songs, Chords, &c.," can create an effect in drawing-rooms as ready accompanists. Let us hope that the time may speedily arrive when all sham teachers and their pupils will be estimated at their true value.

WE have often directed attention to the extraordinary want of knowledge upon musical matters displayed in the writings of some of our best authors; but should scarcely have expected that Mr. Frederick J. Crowest—who evidently wishes to be regarded as an authority upon subjects connected with the art—would, in an article called "Music, Love, and Marriage," in the Gentleman's Magazine for June, have spoken of the "field of life and work which indulges in fugues and quavers," and afterwards have alluded to musicians as "a class of people who dabble in quavers and harmonics."

THE following advertisement appeared lately in a morning contemporary: "Floating Safety Bathing Machines, usable at all hours of tide, and convertible at night into theatres, music-halls, &c." Remembering Max Adeler's story of the step-ladder which, by a set of springs, was instantaneously turned into an ironing-table, there is a reasonable fear that this structure in its music-hall form might, without any warning, become a bathing-machine, and perhaps even float out into the water ready for use. The "trick" would prove excessively inconvenient, and the danger suggests precaution.

It is well for some of us that we do not live under the wings of the German eagle. The Frankfort Gazette informs the world: "A contributor to a Wiesbaden journal has been expelled for having published criticisms against the Court Theatre. This journalist had paid for his seat. The decree has been confirmed by the Court of Appeal." Should any Philistine of the pen think of going to Bayreuth when the Wagner theatre is transformed into a Court theatre by the presence of the Emperor William, we trust he will take warning by the fate of his Wiesbaden brother, and "mind his p's and q's."

AN American contemporary, speaking of Hans von Bülow, tells us: "Only once was the real Adam revealed in his conduct. At the first orchestral rehearsal held upon the Broadway theatre here, the harpist had come unequipped and, later on, some carpenter kept hammering while the band was at work. Dr. von Bülow was furious, and his wrath took the shape of cries and capers that reminded the beholder of the crimson-faced passion of a three-year-old infant." In the matter of self-restraint, it would appear that three is the figure of Von Bülow's age.

MISS MINNIE EVERETT and Miss Blanche Owen are American young ladies, and, therefore, eager for information. Moreover, they are Chicago young ladies, and jealous for the honour of the lake city. So they write jointly to an editor: "We, pianoforte students in Chicago, would like to know why Dr.

Hans von Bülow snubbed our city by not giving us at least one Concert, when he gave five in Boston. We do not claim that Chicago is as musical a city as Boston, nor even one half as musical, but we do think it is one-fifth as musical." Admirable young ladies, decided and yet modest!

A CORRESPONDENT writes from San Francisco to the American Musician:—"At a recent wedding, in an Episcopal church here, some innovations were made in the musical part of the ceremonies. After a preliminary performance on the violin, accompanied on the organ, the approaching victims, both of whom had 'been there before,' being a widow and widower about to re-marry, were welcomed by the singing of the 'Bridal chorus' from 'Lohengrin,' the words of which are addressed to a 'Star of renown' and a 'Maiden all glorious.'"

THE Echo, discoursing upon Mr. Santley, observes: "If Mr. Santley's singing voice were to fail him, he might earn his own living by his elocutionary abilities, or by the use of the brush and mahlstick, for he can paint well in either water or oil. . . . Then he can translate a play admirably, and as to wielding the bâton, he is an ideal Conductor, with just enough of the fortiter in re to give his leadership decisiveness." We feel sure that Mr. Santley does not wish to pose as that doubtful person, an Admirable Crichton. Enough for him that he is a great singer.

MR. SPURGEON has some curious notions about psalmody. He thinks that new tunes are introduced not only to please public taste—which we are disposed to look upon as natural and right—but, also, "to pay profits to publishers, who of course must live, and thirdly for the sake of the organ and not the people." On these grounds, the pastor of the Tabernacle would go back to the rattling old "repeat" and "imitation" tunes, with all their risk of irreverence, and their musical inanity. Mr. Spurgeon had better stick to his sermons.

SOME of our contemporaries have fallen into error by supposing that the three principal characters in Verdi's "Otello" will be played at the Lyceum Theatre, on the 5th inst., by the artists who "created" them at Milan. When the opera was first produced, Madame Pantaleoni appeared as Desdemona, whereas here the hapless heroine will be impersonated by Madame Cataneo. Mr. Tamagno and Mr. Maurel resume their original rôles. The change of prima donna will most likely be for the better, seeing that Madame Pantaleoni was quite unsatisfactory.

Is it at all possible that the "Recensenten-Börse," or Critics' Exchange, which we find has just been formed at Elberfeld, will give rise to a similar institution in England? If so, as the avowed object of the members is to persuade one another into something like unanimity of opinion before writing of art and artists, there can be no question that the power which has been accumulating in the critical musical journals of this country for many years will very soon dwindle into a feeble echo of the strongest voice.

THE Press Register of Newark, N.J., has made a contribution to the curiosities of criticism by speaking of Dudley Buck's "Light of Asia" thus: "It is soft, mellifluous, and dreamy. It swells and pulses in great surge of harmony so indescribably soft and delicate, and then crashes into magnificent crescendoes, through all of which the minor chords are exquisitely blended." Evidently the young gentleman who looks after the fires and coroner's inquests was "on hand" at the writing of this.

WE read in an American paper:—"From the pulpits of two of our city churches last Sunday were delivered addresses upon Richard Wagner's theological struggles as evidenced in his musical compositions. Rev. Heber Newton, the Unitarian-Episcopalian clergyman, found Christianity rampant, as it were, in Wagner's latest works, and Mr. Albert Ross Parsons' discourse on 'The Finding of Christ through Art, or Richard Wagner as Theologian,' was interesting." What next?

IN the notice of a Concert given by Mr. C. J. Bishenden at All Saints', Stepney, in aid of a new peal of bells for that church, we are told that every piece in the programme had a "bell title." This at least is a novel feature; but it would be difficult, we fancy, to carry out the idea to any extent. For example, at a musical performance for the benefit of the "Home for Lost Dogs" it would be a hard task to make a selection of compositions all of which should have a "dog title."

A "PUZZLED" reader informs us that the same artist who, in a testimonial to one pianoforte maker, says that he "has attained the utmost degree of perfection in the art of instrument making," tells another that his pianofortes are "unrivalled," and that during an extended tour he has used them "exclusively." We confess to sharing our correspondent's surprise; for although it is well known that doctors disagree with one another, it is not usual for a doctor to disagree with himself.

THE "indignant old gentleman" to whom we referred last month as having protested against Smoking Concerts, has since been told by the Globe that "he does not know how pleasant a smoking concert song can be, and, on occasion, how refined and sympathetic." This ignorance is highly probable, and shared, we venture to say, by many who have not yet discovered the affinity connecting tobacco smoke, whisky and soda, and music.

AN advertisement lately issued: "A Giant wanted to deliver handbills," although somewhat startling, is perfectly intelligible, the size of the bill-distributor being, no doubt, intended to indicate to passers by the character of the show to which he is attached; but we cannot understand why, when a "lady pianist is required," the announcement should be coupled with a stipulation that she "must be tall."

THE prima donna, having had her jewels stolen in various ways, and gone through much tribulation of sensational kinds, now gives the rein to imagination and takes higher flights. Nevada is at present an easy first at this game. She has given out that in Spezia there was a plot to assassinate her by blowing up the opera house with dynamite. Her rivals will find this hard to beat.

VON BÜLOW's sayings in America are coming over to us by instalments. Here is one of the latest: "I detest the Cæsar-Mark-Antony crowning business. In Wiesbaden, after a performance, I was offered a crown of flowers, but I declined such salad glory, saying that I was no vegetarian. I am fond of beef-steak, and would have accepted an honorarium of that kind much quicker than flowers."

MR. ROBERT MACHARDY, of Edinburgh, has composed some versés in honour of Mr. Sims Reeves. Here is one of them :—

Every Briton loves thy name,
Is proud to speak of thy great fame,
Paradise would welcome thee
If thy great voice on high could be.
Rapture comes in every note
From thy wondrous, heaven-born throat.

Shades of Burns and Tannahill, tremble !

A GOOD story passes through many forms. Here is one. Unwelcome Suitor: "That's a lovely song. It always carries me away"! She: "If I had known that I should have sung it earlier." Here is the original. Scene—the European coffee-house, Haymarket. Man (who has been to the opera opposite): "That air, 'Casta diva,' always carries me away." Douglas Jerrold: "Can anybody here whistle it?"

THE Bristol Orpheus Glee Society had but a poor audience in St. James's Hall a while ago, but a good thing never misses its mark in the long run, and now we learn that Mr. Riseley and his capital singers are coming to London next spring, at the instance of the Duke of Abercorn, and under the patronage of the Prince of Wales.

CHARITY never faileth. The sum of £750 has been gathered by a Plymouth Committee for the benefit of the children of the late Mr. Frederic N. Löhr. Out of this amount £50 will be set apart for placing a memorial brass in Plymouth Guildhall. All this is very graceful, and most creditable to the denizens of our "far West."

PASSING a shop a short time ago where some musical instruments were placed in the window for sale, we were amused at seeing a violin ticketed at a low price, and announced (we presume to account for its cheapness) as "second-hand." It was difficult to resist the temptation of enquiring what would be the cost of a new one.

IN consequence of the great success achieved in this country and throughout the Continent by Señor Sarasate, in the performance of Dr. Mackenzie's fine Concerto for Violin, the gifted Spanish artist has induced Dr. Mackenzie to write another important work, which will be played for the first time at the coming Leeds Festival.

THE Handel and Haydn Society of Boston gave three Concerts last season, and sustained a loss of 402 dollars. Happily this admirable institution has a reserve fund of 27,000 dollars, soon to be increased to 31,000 dollars by a bequest from the late Mr. Oliver Ditson. No fear but that the "Hub" will look after its own.

VOCAL "artists" announced at the music-halls of the metropolis have, as a rule, such strange descriptions that we rarely attempt to divine their meaning; but we should like to know what are the characteristic peculiarities of a "Sprightly Serio" and a "Burlesque Serio."

"MANY deadheads," says a contemporary, "are now agitating the question whether or not they have a right to hiss at the opera. We think not. If a deadhead does not like a performance, he always has a means of redress: he can go to the box-office and get his money back."

MISS AUGUSTA HOLMES has written and composed a Cantata, "Lutèce," in which there are lines for a reciter with orchestral accompaniment. That there is a future for such works we do not doubt, and it may have unexpected developments.

WE need hardly assure our readers that the statements, referring to THE MUSICAL TIMES, made in a Society Journal, and copied in other papers, do not contain one word of truth.

A SMART contributor to the Chicago News writes:—"Now that the Wagner opera has adjourned sine die, our most distinguished local musical circles are getting their hair cut."

NOTICE to benevolent amateurs.—Should a man introduce himself as an eligible candidate for charity on the ground that he is a son of the late Mr. William Winn, send for the police.

THE critic of a local paper who, in a concert notice, says that Mr. W. S. Hoyte "contributed an organ soli, and also played piano soli," has got mixed in his "numbers."

AMERICAN audiences never hiss. "There is no hissing at a funeral," says an American journalist, "no matter how bad a person the corpse may have been."

A PROVINCIAL journal, commenting upon an Organ Recital, calls attention to "the splendid effect of the tubular pneumatic action."

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

SINCE our last notice Mr. Harris has kept his great establishment in active work, but we have not to speak of novelties, since none have been forthcoming. "Mefistofele" was produced on May 28, and was followed by "Lohengrin" on May 30, and "La Traviata" on the 1st ult. In connection with the first of these Miss Macintyre (Marguerite and Helen) considerably heightened the esteem in which she is held, but Mr. Massini (Faust) was less successful. In the second work Mr. Barton McGuckin, who was to have played the title-role was, owing to an accident, replaced by Mr. A. d'Andrade. Madame Nordica was the Elsa, Madame Fursch-Madi, an excellent Ortrud, and Mr. F. d'Andrade, Telramund. "La Traviata" served for the return of Madame Albani, who had a sort of gala night—personal consideration being first, and art, by comparison, nowhere. But the opera has again become a fashionable resort, and those who pay have a right to call the game. For the début of Miss Van Zandt (3rd ult.) "La Sonnambula" was put up, its somewhat faded prettiness being tolerated for the sake of an engaging artist whom the character and music of Amina suit perfectly. Miss Van Zandt made a decided success by acting naturally and intelligently, while singing with great fluency, neatness, and expression. For various reasons the repertory of this young lady must be a limited one, but there can be no question that the parts which she can play at all are safe in her hands. A new tenor, Mr. Montariol, appeared as Elvino and met with acceptance. He is, however, a useful rather than a brilliant artist. The return of Mr. Edward de Reszke (Count) was hailed with pleasure on very sufficient grounds. Mr. Harris is rich in baritones, but De Reszke stands before all others. His brother, Mr. Jean de Reszke, appeared on the following evening as Radames ("Aida") and he also, with equally good reason, met with a warm reception. Among his associates in the Egyptian opera were

Madame Nordica, Madame Scalchi, and Mr. Cotogni. "Le Nozze di Figaro," with Albani, Ella Russell, Van Zandt, F. d'Andrade, and Cotogni in the cast, drew a full house, not entirely, we hope, because of a remarkable combination of artists. Mozart deserves a hearing on his own account, even by "society." "Rigoletto" (6th ult.) gave Madame Melba, the Australian soprano, a chance of making her re-appearance as Gilda, and of establishing herself as a favourite for the season. Her acting and singing were an improvement upon the "form" of last year, and often made a striking impression. The title character served for the re-entry of Mr. Lassalle, who, of course, sang the music splendidly; but the part calls for the highest qualities of a tragic actor, and the French baritone did not seem able to supply them in required measure. As Rigoletto goes, he is, no doubt, entitled to high rank; but that is not saying very much. We want Ronconi back again. "Faust" was given on the 7th ult., with Nordica, Talazac, and E. de Reszke, and "Lohengrin" on the 8th ult. The cast of Wagner's opera, being an exceptionally fine one, helped the popularity of the work to secure an overflowing house, and the result was much satisfaction all round. We need not discuss Albani (Elsa), Fursch-Madi (Ortrud), Jean de Reszke (Lohengrin), and E. de Reszke in this familiar opera. Mr. Seguin, a new baritone, appeared with moderate success. He was seen to much more advantage later, as the hero of "Guillaume Tell."

A repetition of "Aida" (the 10th ult.) introduced Madame Valda in the title-part, Jean de Reszke playing Radames. The splendid tenor made the principal figure, the soprano having little better than a "success of esteem." The 11th ult. brought the revival of "Guillaume Tell," to which reference has already been made. There was a new and very nervous Mathilde in Miss Lita, about whom a definite opinion should be reserved. There was also a new Arnold in Mr. Lestellier, of whom we are scarcely likely to hear much more, unless he can play other parts better. On the 13th ult. "Don Giovanni" was given, with Miss Van Zandt, Madame Fursch-Madi (who replaced Miss Toni Schläger), Madame Giulia Valda, Messrs. d'Andrade, Lestellier, and Ciampi. "Le Nozze di Figaro" was repeated on the 14th. On the 15th ult. Mr. Harris produced Gounod's "Roméo et Juliette" in the original French, and the house was crowded to hear an opera that of late has been put aside. With Madame Melba, E. de Reszke, Seguin, Montariol Winogradow and Jean de Reszke in the cast, the more important parts were assured of adequate representation. As far as regards the performance a success must be recorded, but the work no more recommended itself than on former occasions. We fear that Gounod will remain a single-opera composer. "Lohengrin" was repeated on the 17th for the début on the Italian stage of Mr. Barton McGuckin. The Irish tenor achieved a good result under anxious and trying conditions. "Les Huguenots" (18th ult.) completed Mr. Harris's revivals up to the time of writing. In it appeared, with no special effect, a soprano, Miss Toni Schläger, who is much thought of in Vienna. London is a terrible place for these Continental favourites. Up to the 26th ult. only repetitions have to be recorded.

Messrs. Mancinelli, Arditi, and Randegger have throughout shared the Conductor's work, and the performances generally have given satisfaction. At the same time, it is right to say that a considerable improvement might easily be made in the stage management.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

MR. MAPLESON, having taken and refurnished Her Majesty's Theatre, opened it for Italian Opera on the 4th ult., and is still continuing a season conducted upon principles which hardly become so shrewd and experienced a manager. The works performed, for example, have been the most hackneyed in the Italian repertory—"La Sonnambula," "Lucia," "Il Barbiere," "L'Elisir d'Amore," "Il Trovatore," and, by way of a change to French opera, "Faust." Mr. Mapleson is mistaken if he supposes that anybody particularly wishes to be regaled again and again upon these works, but the manager, perhaps, is obliged to play operas in which his new artists believe they can make the best effect. All the same, nothing of a brilliant character has been done, and we must excuse ourselves from entering upon details, hoping that Mr. Mapleson may do better as the season proceeds, and supply us with matter worth discussing. He is provided with an adequate chorus, and a fair orchestra, conducted by Mr. Bevnignani.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

SINCE our June issue this Society has given the last two Concerts of its seventy-seventh season, so far emulating previous success that the guarantors, we believe, are in no danger of being called upon for more than a nominal contribution to the fund. In the case of an institution not carried on for profit, and purely artistic in its character and aims, the condition just described does not necessarily represent the highest good. It may be well for the directors to act, with circumspection of course, upon knowledge of the fact that the guarantors are prepared to be useful as well as ornamental, and that the guarantee fund enables them to consider what may be advantageous to the progress of art rather than what the public will most readily pay to hear.

The programme of the 6th ult. contained no absolute novelty, the nearest approach to which was Mr. Frederic Cliffe's Symphony, not long before produced at the Crystal Palace. A rehearing of this remarkable opus 1 confirmed the opinions formed on its first acquaintance, and so much is all that need now be said. Let us hope that Mr. Cliffe recognises the seriously-changed position in which he stands. "To whom much is given, of him much shall be required," and having made great gifts evident, the young composer comes under the rule "Noblesse oblige." But we do not ask him to be in a hurry. There are too many serious interests at stake for that. Nevertheless, the public will, after a decent interval, look for his opus 2, and expect a good deal from it. The Concerto at the Concert under notice was Beethoven's in E flat, for pianoforte and orchestra, the solo being taken by the Norwegian pianist, Madame Backer-Grøndahl, whose English reputation as a classical performer of the highest rank was thoroughly established. This artist exemplifies the true school of pianoforte playing as do few others who come amongst us. She deals with the great masters as their interpreter, not as one to whose opportunities of personal glorification they have ministered. Perfectly modest, doing as little as possible to attract attention, and with every faculty consecrated to the art of the moment, Madame Backer-Grøndahl is an example which artists and amateurs alike might study with advantage. Her playing on this occasion was marked by all the breadth, finish, and power which attracted instant regard on her first appearance. Other pieces in the programme simply require to be placed on record. They were the "Anacreon" Overture, the Introduction and Closing Scene from "Tristan und Isolde," and the Overture to "Die Zauberflöte." Miss Fillunger was the vocalist, and missed the mark in attempting "Ocean, thou mighty monster."

The last Concert of the season took place on Saturday afternoon, the 22nd ult., when three remarkable artists made their appearance. Miss Teresina Tua led the procession, and so played Bruch's Violin Concerto in G minor as to leave a more decided feeling in her favour than ever before. Besides elegance of style and finish of detail, the young lady showed power and emotion—qualities which, it is to be hoped, she will ultimately possess in full measure. Miss Hermine Spies followed with a performance of the air "Return, O God of Hosts," such as proved her to be an accomplished Handelian singer. Foreign interpreters of Handel's oratorio music rarely satisfy English ears, but this German artist did so most completely—exciting, no doubt, a wish that she would make the composer's adopted country her residence. Mr. Pachmann followed with a rendering of Chopin's Andante spianato and Polonaise (Op. 22) which simply enchanted the audience. It was unapproachable for delicacy and exquisite refinement. The orchestral selections—Overture to "The Flying Dutchman," the "Eroica" Symphony, and Sullivan's "Overture di Ballo"—were admirably executed under the direction of Mr. Cowen.

The Society's Annual Dinner took place at the Criterion on the 24th ult., and was attended by a large company. Lord Coleridge presided in his happiest manner. The speakers were, besides the Chairman, Mr. C. E. Stephens, Mr. W. H. Cummings, Mr. Hersee, Mr. Francesco Berger, Mr. Joseph Bennett, Mr. Southgate, Mr. Cowen, and Dr. A. C. Mackenzie.

THE RICHTER CONCERTS.

THE first appearance in England of the celebrated German Lieder singer, Miss Hermine Spies, was by far the most important feature of the fifth Concert, on the 3rd ult. When the lady stepped on the platform to sing Gluck's "Che farò," she was unknown to the majority of the audience; but when she finally left it she had made a reputation which is likely to prove enduring. To say the exact truth, the initial impression as to her gifts was not wholly favourable. It was apparent, of course, that she had a fine voice, and that she managed it well, but her pronunciation of Italian was so imperfect that her good qualities were to some extent overlooked. It was otherwise when she sang a series of four songs in her own language, by Schubert, Schumann, and Brahms. Then every one perceived that an artist of the first rank had come among us, and Miss Spies retired amid enthusiastic applause. The rest of the Concert was made up of familiar works. Wagner was represented by his Overture to "Tannhäuser" and a selection from "The Nibelung's Ring," the remaining pieces being the Overture to "Euryanthe" and Brahms's Symphony in F (No. 3).

There was no Concert on Whit-Monday, and the sixth performance took place on the 17th ult., when one of the promised new Wagnerian selections was brought forward. This was the entire closing scene from "Die Walküre," the last portion of which, generally known as "Wotan's Farewell" and the "Fire Charm," is already very popular. The long duet between Wotan and Brünhilde which precedes it can only be fully appreciated by those who are familiar with the entire work and able to recognise the significance of the various motives as they appear and disappear. The vocalists were Miss Fillunger and Mr. Carl Mayer. Very fine performances were given of Schubert's great Symphony in C, and Dvorák's remarkably clever and original Symphonic Variations in C. Schumann's "Manfred" Overture, and Hans Sachs's beautiful monologue from the second act of "Die Meistersinger," expressively sung by Mr. Carl Mayer, completed the programme.

The London branch of the Richard Wagner Society, a small but energetic body, was connected with the Concert of the 24th ult., though in what way was not precisely stated. However, the programme was composed entirely of Wagnerian excerpts, among them being two for the first time. These were Hans Sachs's address and the concluding chorus from "Die Meistersinger," and the Graal scene from "Parsifal." This last loses immeasurably in effect by transplantation to the concert-room. At Bayreuth it is mystic and awe-inspiring, every means being at hand to heighten the impression. Those who heard the music for the first time at St. James's Hall could have formed but little idea of its real solemnity and power. The orchestra was loud and strident, and the choir paid very little attention to such matters as light and shade. Far more enjoyable was Mr. Lloyd's magnificent singing of Lohengrin's "Farewell" and the Schmielieder from the first act of "Siegfried." Excellent also was Mr. Max Heinrich's rendering of Hans Sachs's monologue "Wahn, Wahn!" from the last act of "Die Meistersinger." The Overture to "Rienzi" and the Kaiser March completed the programme.

LINCOLN MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

THE Cathedral Churches of Peterborough and Lincoln having combined to establish an "Oratorio Festival," the first celebration took place last year at the city first named. This year it was the turn of Lincoln, and, due preparation having been made, two performances—called "services" because very properly combined with a religious observance—were given, on the 19th ult., in the magnificent edifice which towers above the ancient north-eastern town. The event, being unique, we believe, in the annals of the district, attracted a good deal of attention, there were large congregations, and the promoters, we trust, reaped the reward of enterprise—at all events, to the extent of being able to dispense with a call upon the guarantors.

Rightly enough those who had charge of the musical arrangements took care to utilise the resources of the immediate district. They drew their chorus of five hundred voices from Lincoln, Peterborough, Nottingham, Grimsby, Grantham, Gainsborough, Louth, and Boston, their orchestra, of about fifty instruments was obtained from Birmingham, Leicester, Nottingham, &c., with Mr. Val Nicholson (leader) and four other players from London. The force as a whole, therefore, represented the capacity of the country around the place of gathering, and this was as it should be always and everywhere to the utmost extent possible. It is scarcely necessary to add that the principal vocalists went down from the metropolis. They were Miss Anna Williams, Miss Agnes Wilson, Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. Barton McGuckin, and Mr. Watkin Mills. An organ, specially erected by Messrs. Nicholson and Co., of Worcester, to some extent secured the proper balance between instruments and voices. This was important under the circumstances, and, viewed with due regard to the fact that the occasion was a first attempt, the executive force got together under the bâton of the Cathedral Organist, Mr. J. M. W. Young, must be pronounced satisfactory.

"Elijah" was performed at the afternoon service, and attracted an audience which, as far as could be seen, filled nave, aisles, and transepts. To this service came, in full municipal array, with maces, swords, halberds, and other paraphernalia, the Mayors of Grimsby, Peterborough, Louth, Grantham, Boston, Nottingham, Retford, Stamford, and Newark; joining their brother of Lincoln and some twenty clergy, including the Bishop and Dean, in a procession from the choir to reserved places in the nave. Something of state and dignity marked therefore, the opening of the first Lincoln Festival. After a few collects and the singing of a hymn, the performance of "Elijah" began, continuing to the end without a break, and being followed by a short prayer and the blessing. We are not called upon to notice the work done by the solo artists, whose qualities, as displayed in "Elijah," are familiar. Enough that they were worthy of their reputation. It is much more important to observe that both orchestra and chorus, brought together from many places for the first time, justified the confidence reposed in them. The chorus was particularly good, singing with excellent quality of voice, great confidence, and almost unflinching correctness. If we must speak of the orchestra in terms slightly more qualified, it is only because the conditions were more exacting. But there was very little of which to complain, and the audience certainly heard "Elijah" to considerable advantage.

The evening service, carried on under precisely similar conditions, presented Handel's "Dettingen" and Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise" to a smaller gathering than that of the morning. Being, as we may assume, less familiar with these works than with "Elijah," the performers did not reach the standard of the previous occasion. Nevertheless, there was much to praise in their rendering of both works, and especially did the orchestra win good opinions by playing the symphonic movements of the "Lobgesang" with greater effect than, looking at its "scratch" character, could reasonably have been expected. The ensemble was fine, also, in the great chorus "The night is departing," and in Handel's "To Thee, Cherubin." With the soloists ably doing their part, the one-day Festival was thus carried through with encouraging musical success, and we trust that the result has strengthened the infant enterprise.

"ELIJAH" AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE.

THE grand performance of "Elijah" at Sydenham, on Saturday, the 22nd ult., resulted in a well-earned triumph. The last time that a selection from Mendelssohn's favourite Oratorio was tried on the Handel orchestra was as far back as 1867, and it was then generally agreed that the work was unsuitable for performance on such a large scale. But it is evident that the fault was in the executants and not in the music. To the amateur choralist, "Elijah" is now as familiar as "The Messiah" itself, and when Mr. Manns called his 2,900 singers together, his work consisted chiefly in securing unanimity of attack, and a due observance of light and shade. His efforts were crowned with complete success. The huge force moved with machine-like accuracy, and the volume of tone and unflinching precision in the Baal choruses, "Thanks be to God," &c., were not more remarkable than the beauty of the phrasing and delicate gradations of tone in "He watching over Israel," "He that shall endure," and "After the fire there came a still, small voice." It would need far more space than is at command to describe all the beautiful and startling effects gained in this memorable performance. Suffice it to say that Mendelssohn's music has never before been heard to such advantage, and the "ovation" which Mr. Manns received at the close of the afternoon was but a slight tribute to the artistic skill and energy which had brought about such excellent results. Regarding the soloists, there is but little to say. Madame Albani's clear and penetrating voice told well in the vast arena, Madame Patey and Mr. Lloyd repeated familiar successes, and Signor Foli threw all his energies into the rôle of the Prophet, winning unqualified success save where the music proved a little too high for his voice. Good service was rendered in the concerted music by Miss Emily Squire, Miss Jessie King, Mr. Maldwyn Humphreys, Mr. Ffrangcon Davies, and Mr. Plunket Greene. The attendance at the Palace reached 24,133, the largest on record at these gatherings, so that the undertaking was a popular as well as an artistic success.

NONCONFORMIST FESTIVAL.

ON the 1st ult. about 3,000 singers mustered, at the Crystal Palace, under the banner of the Nonconformist Choir Union, whose purpose is "the development and improvement of the music of our services, the mutual co-operation of our choirs, the holding of festival services on a large scale, and annual choral festivals." Manchester, Margate, Kettering, High Wycombe, Bedford, Tunbridge Wells, Bournemouth, St. Albans, Ipswich, Northampton, Poole, Wellingborough, Burton-on-Trent, and many other centres supplied contingents to the festival. As a preliminary to the programme, the choir sang the hymn "O worship the King," then followed Handel's "And the glory of the Lord," Mendelssohn's "How lovely are the messengers" (from "St. Paul"), the part-song called "Morning Prayer," Macfarren's Anthem, "A day in Thy courts," Sterndale Bennett's Anthem for St. Thomas's Day, "O that I knew where I might find Him," Dr. Bunnett's Magnificat in F, Goss's "I will magnify Thee," Stainer's "Ye shall dwell in the land," Elvey's Anthem, "Praise the Lord and call upon His Name," William Rea's "My soul truly waiteth," Purcell's "Thou knowest, Lord," Gaul's "The Children's Hour," Leslie's "The Pilgrims," and Reay's "The Dawn of Day," with the National Anthem as a Finale. Mr. E. Minshall conducted the first part, and Mr. T. R. Croger the second part. The organ accompaniments were played by Messrs. J. R. Griffiths and Ernest W. E. Blandford. Mr. F. G. Edwards played an organ solo between the parts.

MR. SARASATE'S CONCERTS.

THE orchestra was again in its place at the fourth Concert, on the 1st ult., and the Spanish violinist played two lengthy Concertos—Beethoven's and Saint-Saëns's in F (No. 3). His rendering of the former, which by common consent is regarded as the greatest of all works written for violin and orchestra, is open to controversy. We miss the masculine breadth and dignity of style which characterise Herr Joachim's interpretation of Beethoven's lofty ideas, but it cannot be denied that Mr. Sarasate's exquisite finish atones to a considerable extent for the absence of these higher qualities, and the cadenza introduced in the first movement is simply unsurpassable as a display of technical skill, if it is not altogether in harmony with the spirit of the work. The Concerto of Mr. Saint-Saëns exhibits the French composer in a decidedly favourable light, and it is surprising that it is not more frequently heard, considering the paucity of really good violin concertos. Tchaikowsky's Overture to "Romeo and Juliet," which commenced the Concert, might with fitness be termed a symphonic poem. It is very lengthy, and to a large extent vague, pretentious, and extravagant; but it contains some fine ideas, which the Russian composer might have used to great advantage had he paid more regard to the laws of symmetry and proportion.

The fifth Concert, on the following Saturday, consisted entirely of works for violin and pianoforte, Madame Berthe Marx being again the pianist. Our remarks concerning Beethoven's Concerto, as played by Mr. Sarasate, will apply with equal force to his rendering of the "Kreutzer" Sonata. The faultless accuracy of the execution and the beauty and purity of tone were again conspicuous, and the audience became so excited that they broke into applause after the second variation in the middle movement, and insisted upon its repetition. Schubert's Fantasia in C (Op. 159) was the only other concerted piece in the programme. Madame Berthe Marx played two of Schumann's Studies for pedal pianoforte (Op. 56) and Liszt's Rhapsodie (No. 12) with perfect neatness, and showed the possession of a sympathetic touch, if she was somewhat deficient in warmth of expression.

At the final performance, on the 15th ult., there was an enormous attendance, and so loth were the listeners to part from their favourite artist that they demanded encore upon encore, Mr. Sarasate complying with their wishes in the most obliging manner. The principal works in the programme were Dr. A. C. Mackenzie's Concerto, which the Spanish violinist has played all over Europe, and Lalo's so-called Symphonie Espagnole, which suits him to a nicety; after the first-named work Mr. Sarasate was three times recalled, being on his last return to the platform accompanied by the composer. A piece for two violins from his own pen, entitled "Navarra," in which he was assisted in excellent fashion by Miss Nettie Carpenter, proved to be very showy and characteristic if nothing else. The Concert opened with Beethoven's Symphony in F (No. 8) and closed with Lalo's Overture to "Le Roy d'Ys," which we noticed on its performance at the Crystal Palace last season.

THE HERKOMER PLAY.

PROFESSOR HERKOMER followed up his tentative effort of last year by the preparation and production (on the 4th ult.) of a "pictorial music play," entitled "An Idyl." Several invitation performances were given in the little theatre at Bushey, and the series ended with two or three representations, for admission to which payment was asked in the cause of charity.

The story of "An Idyl" is exceedingly slight, and in no sense original. It was not invented, we may assume, so much for its own sake, as for reasons connected with pictorial and musical effect, which, we hasten to add, it very admirably serves. The "argument" is sufficiently told when we say that the heroine, Edith, the daughter of a village smith, has a lowly lover in one of her father's apprentices. She also has a noble admirer in the Lord Fitz-Hugh, whose attentions are observed and his purpose divined both by the lover and the father. The apprentice makes a strong appeal to his dangerous rival, and succeeds so well that among the first to congratulate the rustic pair on their marriage morning is the Lord Fitz-Hugh. Around this central position are grouped many incidents, humorous and pathetic, the whole having a simple and natural interest, which is enhanced by mediæval English surroundings. The play, in fact as well as in name, is just what the title declares it to be. Save that the lyrics, through which alone the characters speak, were written by Mr. Joseph Bennett, and that the orchestral score was submitted to the inspection of a professional musician, the entire work is the product of the versatile, accomplished, and indefatigable Professor. The story, the music, the scenery, the dresses, the stage business, and everything else contributing to the ensemble—they are all Mr. Herkomer's. Never, we should say, was such singleness of authorship; and never, perhaps, did such an author play one of his own parts (the Smith) and sing his own music.

The principal features in the representation received all the notice they deserved from admiring audiences. No doubt to many of the Professor's artistic brethren, the scenery stood first. Nothing could be more beautiful than the picture of the mediæval village, with its quaint, timbered houses, backed by rising ground, covered with corn-fields, trees, and outlying cottages, all modelled, and not painted on a drop scene. With this the groups of actors were cunningly blended in a manner becoming the art of a great painter. The only other scene was a cottage interior, rudely realistic, and, in its way, as interesting as the first-named. With regard to the Professor's music, although we are unable to say that the stamp of the amateur was not upon it, it can truthfully be urged that every number, and the orchestral accompaniments to the dumb show, exhibited remarkable tunefulness, sense of effect, natural expression, and, indeed, most of those qualities necessary to a dramatic composer. Sufficient technical knowledge only was wanting to a score which, nevertheless, musicians looked on with satisfaction and no little surprise. The performance, musically superintended by Hans Richter, went off, even at the first, with much smoothness, and only one opinion prevailed as to the beauty and general merit of the production. Save that the leading female parts were played by Miss Dorothy Dene and Miss Florence Wilton, and that the young lord was represented by Mr. Howden Tingey, all the characters were sustained by the professors and students of the Bushey School of Painting, who deserve the utmost credit for their devotion to the task and the success they achieved.

MR. DE PACHMANN'S CHOPIN RECITALS.

THE aspect of St. James's Hall, on the 13th ult., when the second of these unique performances was given, afforded sufficient refutation of the idea, entertained in some quarters, that Mr. de Pachmann is losing his hold on the public. So encouraging was the attendance, that arrangements have been made for a third Recital, which will take place on the 8th inst. It would be idle to enter again into the description of those qualities which render the Russian pianist an ideal interpreter of Chopin's music. Enough that when he is at the keyboard the listener feels that the Polish composer is being presented in the best possible light, and does not pause to enquire whether the result is due to special study or the artistic temperament of the player. A work, such as the Sonata in B minor (Op. 58), which, as ordinarily played, is to a considerable extent dry and tedious, becomes invested with a significance unlooked for with Mr. Pachmann as the executant. This was the most important work in the programme of the Recital under notice, others being the Ballade in A flat, the Scherzo in B flat minor, the Polonaise in E flat minor, which is rarely heard in the Concert-room, and the Barcarolle in F sharp.

SIR CHARLES HALLÉ'S CONCERTS.

At the fourth of these performances, on May 31, the second of the three newly published String Quartets of Cherubini was introduced to the notice of English musicians. The first movement is somewhat dry, but the rest of the work is full of interesting features of which the expressiveness of the slow movement and the novel effects in the Scherzo and Finale are perhaps the most striking. The Quartet is not a very valuable addition to the repertory of chamber music, but it is well worthy of the attention of amateurs if only on account of the distinguished name of its composer. The only other concerted piece in this programme was Dvorák's genial and characteristic Pianoforte Quartet in D (Op. 23). Sir Charles Hallé played Schubert's beautiful Sonata in B flat, a work which is unfortunately too lengthy to be generally popular.

On the following Friday the novelty was Raff's Pianoforte Quartet in C minor (Op. 202); on the whole, a showy and effective work. There are some excellent thoughts in the C minor Quartet, but it cannot be regarded as a valuable contribution to modern chamber music. Bach's Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue, Brahms's Sonata in F, for pianoforte and violoncello (Op. 99), and Schumann's Quartet in E flat (Op. 47) completed the programme.

The third of the three recently published String Quartets by Cherubini was introduced at the Concert on the 14th ult., and proved to be, like the others, an elegantly written work, but not remarkable for freshness of style. It is in A minor, and is Cherubini's last effort in quartet writing. It cannot be said with certainty why he did not publish these works, but it is possible that he did not feel quite at home in this branch of musical art, and that he imagined that his reputation would not gain by further challenging comparisons with the great German masters. At the same time, if it cannot be said that the present Quartets are on the whole equal to those which Cherubini gave to the world in his lifetime, they are scholarly and effective works, and Sir Charles Hallé should be thanked for introducing them. Beethoven's Sonata in F (Op. 54), Rheinberger's Pianoforte Quartet in E flat (Op. 38), and Brahms's new Sonata in D minor (Op. 108), for pianoforte and violin, were included in this programme.

Dvorák's recently published Quartet in E (Op. 80), first performed in London at Mr. Harvey Löhr's Concert in April last, headed the scheme on the following Friday. There is nothing remarkable in the first movement, but the next, Andante con moto in A minor, is very characteristic of the composer, being founded, in the Slavonic manner, upon a theme which is subjected to all sorts of modifications but never abandoned save for a few bars at a time. The Allegro scherzando, which follows, and the spirited and contrapuntal Finale are also capital movements. The rest of the programme does not call for criticism. It included Grieg's Sonata in C minor, for pianoforte and violin (Op. 45), Brahms's Trio in E flat, for pianoforte, violin, and horn (Op. 40), and some pianoforte solos by Chopin.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

At the Royal Academy Chamber Concert, given at St. James's Hall, on the 17th ult., some interesting work was done. A Sonata in G, for violoncello and pianoforte, by Miss Amy E. Horrocks (played by the composer and Mr. B. P. Parker), elicited very favourable opinions. Mr. A. L. Spittle gave a capital rendering of Max Bruch's Violin Romance. Miss Beatrice Copland, Miss Llewela Davies, Miss Plaistowe, and Miss Helen Ogilvie distinguished themselves in their pianoforte solos. Miss Lizzie Neal, one of our rising young contraltos, did full justice to a couple of charming songs by Miss Ada Brown, a pupil of Mr. Prout's, and other vocal pieces were creditably rendered by Miss Mary Rough, Miss Mary Hooton, Miss Nettie Wood, and Mr. Dicksee, the work of accompaniment being divided by Messrs. Stanley Hawley, Arthur E. Godfrey, and Frank Idle. The Academy choir also took a prominent part in the Concert, which opened with Wesley's Anthem, "The Wilderness," the solos being sung by Miss Broadbent, Miss Kirton, Mr. P. Edmunds, Mr. F. Pearce, and Mr. Broadbent; this, and the part-songs by Byrd and Purcell, sung later on, were among the most satisfactory portions of the afternoon's proceedings. Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, the Principal, conducted with his usual tact and judgment.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

THE fine orchestra of 110 performers associated with this institution was heard to signal advantage at the Concert directed by Mr. Weist Hill on Saturday afternoon, the 15th ult., in the hall of the City of London School. The programme opened with a Marche Joyeuse by Fanny Archbutt, a pupil of Mr. Henry Gadsby at the Guildhall School. As the title indicated, it proved a bright animated piece, being, furthermore, finely orchestrated and altogether a very creditable exercise. The opening Allegro of Beethoven's "Choral" Symphony, played more than once before by the Guildhall orchestra, was now given with increased finish and refinement, while the Overtures to "Dinorah" and "Les Diamants de la Couronne" were excellently rendered under Mr. Hill's steady guidance. The chief individual success of the afternoon was Miss Amy Porter's performance of the Allegro from Popper's dry but difficult Violoncello Concerto (Op. 24). This was in all respects an admirable piece of playing. The vocal efforts of Miss Magdalena A'Bear, Miss Isabelle Ikin, Mr. John G. Hooker, and Mr. Arthur Bonner met with hearty approval.

LONDON ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

THE Annual Summer Concert, in connection with the above institution, took place at St. James's Hall, on the afternoon of the 5th ult. There was, as usual, a crowded attendance. A notable feature was the excellence with which the orchestral portion of the day's selection was executed. The Overtures to "Le Nozze di Figaro" and Gluck's "Iphigenia" were capitally played, as were also the accompaniments to the various Concertos, all being ably conducted, as usual, by the principal, Dr. Wylde. Among the individual efforts, Miss Clara Fisher's performance of the Adagio and Finale from Max Bruch's Violin Concerto in G minor, and Miss Ethel Fisher's rendering of the first movement from Chopin's E minor Concerto may be mentioned as deserving of especial praise. Also to be noted was a very creditable interpretation, by eight young ladies, of the first movement of Mendelssohn's Octet for strings. The vocal concerted pieces included Lassen's cantata for female voices "The Holy Night," and an excerpt from "Euryanthe," in both of which Miss Teresa Blamy distinguished herself.

MUSICAL GUILD.

THE youthful band of artists styling themselves the Musical Guild have met with sufficient encouragement to warrant them in contemplating a second series of Concerts, to take place in the autumn, when they will necessarily engage more attention than it is possible to bestow at the height of the London season. The programme of the second Concert, on May 29, included Mozart's String Quintet in G minor, Bach's Concerto in D minor for two violins (played by Messrs. Haydn Inwards and Arthur Bent), and Mendelssohn's Octet in E flat (Op. 20). At the third Concert, on the 12th ult., another excellent programme was carried out; while at the fourth and last, on the 19th ult., were performed such interesting works as Beethoven's String Quintet in C, Brahms's Pianoforte Quartet in G minor, Beethoven's rarely heard Sonata in F (Op. 17) for pianoforte and horn (well executed by Miss Macdonald and Mr. J. Smith), and the Romanza from Joachim's Hungarian Concerto, played by that talented young violinist, Mr. Jasper Sutcliffe. So far, in an artistic sense, the Musical Guild has done remarkably well.

BRISTOL ORPHEUS SOCIETY.

THE Concert given by the Bristol Orpheus Glee Society in St. James's Hall on May 28 was one which deserves special mention, because of the excellent manner in which the eighty voices composing the choir performed the several pieces in the programme. The voices were admirably balanced, so that the quality of tone produced in certain of the glees, written for and intended to be sung by a single voice to a part, did not suffer to the extent expected. In such a work as the "Hohenlinden" of Tom Cooke, written as a glee, the augmentation of the parts gave it an effect which could scarcely be realised under any other conditions. In the part-songs, notably those written by Mr. George Riseley, the accomplished Conductor of the Society, the capacities of the vocal body were measured to a nicety. Without entering into further details of the works presented, it will be enough to say that the Society deserves the hearty congratulations of all lovers of vocal part-writing for the worthy example it has shown. The claims of vocal harmony have been brought well before the public by this admirable performance. The pattern thus set will do much towards extending a love for the forms of composition which the Society has studied with so much intelligence and to such good purpose. Mr. George Riseley conducted the Concert in a manner which clearly showed a deep appreciation of the several works, and Mr. Harper Kearton and Mr. Watkin Mills gave valuable help in those pieces which were written for chorus with tenor or bass solos. The artistic success made by the Society in London has so impressed some of the distinguished company then present that the members are invited to pay a return visit. The Duke of Abercorn and other noblemen have had an interview with the officers of the Bristol Society, when the matter was discussed, and it is understood that upon the occasion of this visit of the Society to London the Prince of Wales will be present.

MISS HERMINE SPIES' RECITAL.

IT was not surprising to find the Princes' Hall more than usually well attended on the afternoon of the 13th ult., when Miss Hermine Spies gave her first Vocal Recital, for the gifted German singer had made an extraordinary impression at the Richter Concert a few days previously. The favour accorded to Mr. and Mrs. Henschel shows that song recitals of the highest class command a large amount of patronage, and there is no reason to doubt that Miss Spies will receive a hearty welcome whenever she comes among us. The only fault to be found in her present programme was its brevity. It contained in all only eleven pieces, of which two were pianoforte solos. Still, it enabled the vocalist to display her remarkable versatility, and to show that in every style she is equally at home. Her voice is mezzo-soprano rather than contralto, and is not remarkable for power, though it is pure and sympathetic in quality. The method of production is absolutely irreproachable, the blending of the different registers being singularly perfect. It is not, however, in the excellence of her vocal mechanism that the charm of Miss Spies' singing consists. There is an indescribable amount of intelligence in the manner in which she renders every song, whether cheerful or pathetic. Thus she passed with complete success from the lofty style necessary for the interpretation of Schumann's "Mit Myrthen und Rosen" to the prettiness of D'Albert's "Das Mädchen und der Schmetterling," and from thence to the delicate piquancy of Bizet's "Pastorale." It was probably not the fault of Miss Spies that Schubert's "Wer nie sein Brot mit Thränen ass" was attributed to Schumann, and Giovanini's "Willst du dein Herz mir schenken" to J. S. Bach. The pianoforte solos, contributed by Miss Ethel Bauer, afforded agreeable relief to the vocal music.

WORCESTER CHURCH CHORAL ASSOCIATION
TRIENNIAL FESTIVAL.

THE sixth triennial general Festival of the associated choirs of the archdeaconry of Worcester was held in the Cathedral, on the 6th ult. There were in all sixty-six choirs (of which fifty-nine were surplised) which took part in the service, numbering 1,800 voices. A large gathering of clergy was present.

The choirs having robed in the cloisters, entered the Cathedral by the west door and marched up the central aisle in two divisions, bearing their respective banners. The procession lasted for nearly half-an-hour, and was very imposing. A voluntary was played on the organ during the entrance of the first division, and as the second division entered the church, the hymn, "Salve! festa dies!" by the Rev. J. Baden Powell, was sung as a processional, the verses being given by ten cantors, comprising several members of the Cathedral choir and a few picked voices, stationed on the choir steps.

The service was chanted by the Revs. E. Vine Hall and H. Clifford. The responses were arranged to be sung in unison by the choirs and the congregation. The harmonies were sung by the Cathedral choir only, the united choirs sustaining the plain song. Both organs were used, Mr. Hugh Blair playing the great organ and Mr. L. A. Brookes the choir organ. Mr. O. Milward, the chief Conductor, was stationed on the choir steps. He was assisted by the Rev. H. H. Woodward, Mr. W. M. Dyson, and Mr. E. J. Spark. For the purpose of keeping the voices together there were five cornets played by Mr. A. W. Gilmer, of Birmingham, and assistants, who were stationed at different points. The Magnificat and Nunc dimittis were by Wood. The Anthem was Henry Gadsby's "O Lord, our Governor." The hymns "O God, our help in ages past" (St. Anne's tune), and "The splendour of Thy glory," composed by the Rev. H. H. Woodward for this Festival, were given. The blessing having been pronounced, the service terminated with the hymn "Saviour, blessed Saviour."

THE CHICAGO AUDITORIUM ORGAN.

MR. CLARENCE EDDY furnishes an elaborate description of a new organ to be built for the Chicago Auditorium or Concert Hall by Mr. Frank Roosevelt, of New York, of which the following abbreviated account will be interesting to many of our readers.

Many novel features of remarkable interest and usefulness will be found in the scheme, and although a few organs, perhaps three or four, in the world are a trifle larger in the mere number of speaking stops, yet the advanced methods upon which this instrument will be built, including its many mechanical attributes, will certainly place it at the head of the list in resources and practical completeness.

The key-box will be placed in the orchestra on the side nearest the organ, about seventeen feet below the floor of the organ-chamber, in such a manner that the player can observe the conductor in choral or other ensemble performances, and can yet be seen by the entire audience. This position will also enable him to judge accurately of all the various effects produced.

The Echo organ will be located in the attic over the hall, more than 100 feet away from the player. The pipes being enclosed in a swell-box, most marvellous effects of distance and echo can be produced. Another great novelty will be found in the Stage organ, which will be placed on the stage, or against the stage wall, sufficiently high to allow head room beneath. The design of this adjunct is to assist the chorus in operatic and choral performances, and at times it will be of inestimable value. The pipes will be enclosed in a swell-box, with a special view to protecting them from dust. This organ, like the Echo organ, will be played from one of the keyboards in the orchestra, by means of electric action. Perhaps the most strikingly novel feature of the entire organ will be the cathedral chimes, suspended in an elevated position above the stage, or on one of the "fly galleries." They will consist of twenty-five pieces of heavy, seamless, drawn-brass tubing of proper length and size. Their tone is mellow and resonant, exceedingly rich in harmonics, and, if anything, superior to that of real bells. The tubes will be struck by hammers actuated by pneumatics, which in turn will be controlled by electric action from the solo organ key-board. The compass of the cathedral chimes will be two complete octaves, from tenor F up, in chromatic scale, which will enable the player to make innumerable changes. A set of carillons, composed of forty-four steel bars, furnishes still another feature of special interest, which in orchestral transcriptions and other brilliant concert pieces will prove particularly pleasing to the ear.

The stops of the different departments are symmetrically grouped, beginning always with those of the lowest pitch, and arranged in such a manner that the reeds all come nearest the keys, thereby being most accessible to the player. The couplers are all placed over the fourth manual, and arranged with equal care in their order. The pedal movements are in accordance with the same system, and the combination pistons are situated over instead of under the manual they are intended to affect, a plan which will doubtless meet with approbation.

There are four Manuals, compass CC to 94, 61 notes; and pedals, compass CCC to F, 30 notes.

An idea of the magnitude of the organ may be gained from the following summary of its contents:—

	Stops.	Pipes.
Great Organ	20	1,611
Swell Organ	23	1,733
Choir Organ (Carillons)	17	1,210
Solo Organ (Chimes)	15	851
Echo Organ	11	842
Stage Organ	4	244
Pedal Organ	19	630
Total Speaking Stops.....	109
Couplers	10
Mechanical Accessories.....	13
Adjustable Combination Pistons	25
Pedal Movements	20
Total	177	7,124
Total Bells		69
Total Pipes and Bells		7,193

The seven different departments of the organ—namely, Great, Swell, Choir, Solo, Pedal, Echo, and Stage organs—are all controlled from the key-boards in the orchestra by means of the Roosevelt Patent Electric Action. The key-box, which is a marvel of compactness, will extend downward into the basement beneath; and in this extension the great labyrinth of combination action and electric contacts will be contained. Every particle of this action, however, is easily accessible, and, notwithstanding the magnitude of the organ and its wealth of mechanical resources, the system of construction is a paragon of simplicity and perfection.

A most valuable and ingenious contrivance is the Full Organ pedal, which brings on instantly every speaking stop of the entire organ by simply locking the pedal down. The registers are not disturbed in the least; therefore when the pedal is unhooked the condition of the organ remains precisely as it was before using the pedal, unless the combinations have meanwhile been altered. A startling sforzando is thus obtained with the least possible effort, and no derangement of the stops is occasioned. The Pedal Ventil silences any adjustable selection of pedal stops, without, however, throwing in the knobs. By this clever device the player need never be caught with a loud pedal organ on when he needs instantly a soft stop; and in many other ways this pedal will be found exceedingly useful.

The Crescendo and Diminuendo pedals are of a novel character, and furnish complete control over the entire instrument. By a single stroke on the former pedal a gradual crescendo or increase of tone, from the softest stop to the full organ, is obtained, without disturbing the existing arrangement of knobs, the rapidity of the crescendo being regulated by the degree of speed used in pressing down the pedal. A diminuendo or reverse effect is accomplished by using the other pedal. Directly above the uppermost manual will be placed a dial to indicate the exact amount of organ being used.

Particular attention is called to the unusual number of swell-boxes in this organ. Every stop in the entire instrument, excepting the pedal organ and seven great organ foundation stops of 16, 8, and 4 feet pitch, is enclosed. Separate swell-boxes are used for the Great, Swell, Choir, Solo and Echo organs, the shutters of which are controlled by three balanced pedals centrally situated at the back of the pedal keys in such a manner that they can be operated with either foot, or simultaneously with both feet. The middle pedal controls Great and Choir shutters, while that to the right is for Swell organ, and that to the left for Solo and Echo departments. At the extreme right of these balanced pedals will be found an ordinary pedal to close all the boxes, and another to open them all together.

The Roosevelt Patent Windchests, which will be used exclusively in the Auditorium organ, are admitted by experts to be the most perfect yet constructed; and they are not only indorsed by leading authority in England, but have already been adopted by certain organ-builders in this country. These windchests may be briefly described as tubular pneumatic in principle and action, affording a separate pallet for each and every pipe.

One long side of the basement under the auditorium floor is to be devoted to the bellows. These bellows, of which there will be two or three large ones for the manual and pedal wind, and a somewhat smaller one for the high pressure solo organ and pneumatic work, will all be worked by belts from one main line shaft, which shaft will be driven by a large electric motor.

An arrangement, called an automatic belt shifter will be used, there being one for each bellows. By this device, the belt connecting the tight and loose pulleys of the bellows shaft to the tight pulley on the main shaft, is shifted and controlled by the rise and fall of the bellows; so that, though the line shaft maintains a uniform speed, the feeders will operate only as demanded by the actual consumption of wind.

The pitch of the instrument is to be what is known as the French Normal Diapason, which is the standard of all the leading orchestras of Europe and America, and which has long been adopted by Mr. Roosevelt.

The cost of the Auditorium organ will not be far from 45,000 dollars, and its completion is stipulated for December 1, 1889.

E. USIGLIO'S COMIC OPERA "LE DONNE CURIOSE."*

SIGNOR EMILIO USIGLIO, the composer of this charming work, may be said to have revived in Italy, during the last few years, comic opera or melodramma giocoso, in the best acceptance of the term. Melodramma giocoso is a form of comic opera peculiar to Italy, for, while it has nothing in common with burlesque even of the best type, such as Sullivan's "Mikado," it is quite distinct from French comic opera—of which Auber's "Fra Diavolo," and, among more recent works, Delibes's "Le Roi l'a dit," are luminous examples—as it is distinct from the German Singspiel, from the more advanced and highly polyphonic school to which Goetz's "Taming of the Shrew" belongs, and from serio-comic opera, such as Sullivan's "The Yeomen of the Guard." The nearest approach to it out of Italy is, perhaps, Nicolai's "The Merry Wives of Windsor," and this is probably the reason why this last-mentioned work is the only comic opera of Northern origin which has really taken root in Italy. The finest specimen of Italian melodramma giocoso ever written is, of course, Rossini's "Barbiere," and it is indeed necessary to hear it, and, I may add, see it on an Italian stage, performed by a good ensemble, in order to appreciate its true vis comica, which is almost entirely lost in the traditional and conventional, nay, at times, intolerably heavy, performances of this chef d'œuvre out of Italy. After Rossini, comic opera in Italy found distinguished exponents in L. Ricci, who, jointly with his brother, wrote the well-known Opera "Crispino la Comare"; in Petrella, whose most successful effort was "Le Precauzioni"; in Pedrotti, who produced "Tutti in Maschera," and in others, all of whom, in their own way and in their own style, maintained the best traditions of Rossini's school—viz., grace, elegance, and natural entrain in action and music alike.

But, as elsewhere, so also in Italy, comic opera had subsequently to yield its place to a perfect invasion of French "opéra bouffe," with all its vulgar and demoralising tendencies, and for some time melodramma giocoso disappeared almost entirely from the Italian stage. It was Signor Usiglio who, in his "Educazione di Sorrento," made the first determined, laudable, and highly successful effort to vindicate the claims of legitimate comic opera, and so to recover the lost ground. He was followed by Signor de Giosa, whose "Napoli di Carnevale" was performed some years ago in all the principal cities of Italy; and quite recently Signor Usiglio has taken a further step in the right direction by producing at the Costanzi, the leading theatre in Rome, his latest work, "Le Donne Curiose," which has now also been performed, and under the composer's direction, at the new Politeama of Pisa.

The libretto of "Le Donne Curiose" is adapted from Goldoni's well-known comedy of the same name, the scene being laid in Venice at the time of the Carnival, about the middle of the last century. The dramatic action, spread over three acts, may be briefly stated to consist in this—that a number of jealous Venetian ladies, suspicious of the true character of the Carnival festivities planned by their husbands and lovers at their club called "Amicizia," and indignant at being shut out from that "temple of ease and luxury," lay a plot to enter the club secretly, under cover of night, and to surprise the members at their Carnival banquet. They find a willing tool in Trivella, the club servant, a factotum in the style of Figaro. Led by him, and disguised by mask and domino, they suddenly burst into the banquet-hall. The assembled members are at first horrified at seeing their sacred precincts invaded by the other sex, but gallantly admit their defeat at the hands of the fair ladies, who, in their turn, having proved their husbands and lovers true, vow never to be jealous or inquisitive again.

The action, of which the above is a mere outline, is, of course, interspersed with various scenes in which the plot is worked out, and the leading characters are given scope to exhibit their sentiments of love and jealousy. The effect of the whole is heightened by the well known and characteristic surroundings of Venice, and the spirited manner in which Signor Usiglio has treated his subject is admirably adapted to keep up the interest and excitement. The opera is preceded by an overture in due form, and throughout the opera itself recitative takes the place of spoken dialogue. The airs are light and graceful, and the vocal and instrumental parts are, on the whole, well balanced, the orchestration being full and effective without being heavy. The local colouring, though here and there somewhat too elaborate, is skilful and, in some scenes, decidedly original, especially in the Gondola scene when the masked ladies meet in the Piazza under the windows of the Club and induce Trivella to give up the keys and lead them to the banquet-hall. Signor Usiglio, moreover, infuses his own individuality into the performance, which he conducts with characteristic spirit and vivacity; and for the display of these he could certainly not have chosen a better subject than Goldoni's "Donne Curiose." There are many other plays by the same writer, which, replete with comic incidents and sparkling with wit and humour, as for instance "Il Ventaglio," lend themselves admirably to effective musical treatment; and English as well as Italian composers will find in Goldoni an inexhaustible store of precious material for reviving comic opera in its true and best sense.

OBITUARY.

ALOYS HENNES, whose sudden death on the 8th ult.—caused by a fall from a window at his residence—is reported from Berlin, was a conscientious and able worker in the practical sphere of our art. Born at Aix-la-Chapelle on September 8, 1827, he received a good general education, and eventually, less from inclination than in order to escape the alternative of joining the priesthood, he entered the Prussian postal service as one of its minor officials. Entirely self-taught, he had much to unlearn when, quitting an uncongenial atmosphere at the age of twenty-four, he entered the Cologne Conservatorium, where for two years he diligently pursued his studies under Reinecke, who took a special interest in the young man's progress. Hennes, after various changes of residence, finally established himself as a teacher at Wiesbaden, where he resided for a number of years. In 1863 he published his "Klavier Unterrichtsbrieft," which has run through twenty-five German editions, and has been translated, amongst other languages, into English under the title of "A New Method for the Piano." In 1872 the deceased musician, whose useful career has come to so sudden a termination, took up his abode at Berlin, where of late years he had been a professor at the Scharwenka'sche Conservatorium. He composed several pianoforte pieces and numerous songs. Some interesting details concerning his early career and professional struggles will be found in a small volume entitled "Therese Hennes and her musical education, a biographical sketch, written by her father," which has been translated by Mr. H. Mannheimer.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

THE Dublin University Choral Society gave its last Concert for the season on the evening of the 13th ult., in the Dining Hall of Trinity College, which was filled to its utmost capacity. The first part of the Concert consisted of Dr. Ferdinand Hiller's legendary Cantata "Lurline," a work that suited the Society's choir to perfection; and the performance was, on the whole, the best given by the University Choral Society during the present season. Miss Lucy Ashton Hackett, who undertook the songs of the malignant water fay, acquitted herself to admiration, and Mr. Drummond Hamilton was no less satisfactory in the tenor music of the fisher boy. On this occasion the services of a band were dispensed with, the accompaniments being performed on a pianoforte, American organ, and harp by Drs. Gater and José and Madame Priscilla Frost respectively.

Sir Robert Stewart's enjoyable "Committee" Cantata, for male voices, opened the second part, and discovered a breadth of tone and style in the male voices that was highly creditable to so comparatively small a body. Professor

CONCONE'S LESSONS

WITH MARKS OF EXPRESSION AND PHRASING

BY

ALBERTO RANDEGGER.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence each.

50 Lessons for the Medium part of the Voice.

25 Lessons. A Sequel to the Fifty Lessons for the Medium part of the Voice.

40 Lessons for Contralto.

40 Lessons for Bass or Baritone.

The sterling value and great usefulness of Concone's Lessons have been so long recognised and so generally admitted, that their extensive adoption caused, as a natural consequence, the issue of numerous editions in almost every country where the study of the Art of Singing is cultivated. No edition, however, which has hitherto come under my notice, seems to me as correct, complete, and reliable as it should be.

I have endeavoured to rectify this deficiency by adding in the present edition signs of expression and phrasing, where I considered it expedient to do so, completing, and in some cases altering, the breathing marks, and altogether carefully revising the whole work.—ALBERTO RANDEGGER.

LONDON & NEW YORK: NOVELLO, EWER AND CO.

Mahaffy sang the opening recitative, "Nunc discipule adeste," and the incidental solos were effectively rendered by Messrs. R. H. Woods, H. Maxwell, and B. Mullen, jun. The choruses, the "Committee" Madrigal, and the concluding Fugue "Vivat Præpositus," are humorously scholastic, while the libretto of Dr. Waller may be described as scholastically humorous. This little work was evidently much relished both by the audience and by the performers. The Concert concluded with solos by Miss Hackett, Mr. Hamilton, and Madame Frost (harp), and with two part-songs excellently sung by the choir.

The annual pupils' Concert of the Royal Irish Academy of Music took place in the Royal University Concert Hall, on the 6th ult. Most of the performers were ladies, and the organ and pianoforte playing was more noteworthy than the vocal display. Mendelssohn's Capriccio (Op. 22) was creditably played by Miss Florence McClean with the orchestra. Mr. Joseph Robinson conducted.

The Festival of the Dublin Diocesan Choral Association was held in St. Patrick's Cathedral, on the 19th ult. The members of about forty city and suburban choirs assisted, mustering about 900 voices in all. Mr. Charles W. Marchant, Choirmaster of the Association and Organist of the Cathedral, conducted the choir, which sang several hymns, psalms, and anthems in splendid style, and Mr. G. Horan acted as Organist.

On the 6th ult. the last of the series of Vocal and Organ Recitals was given in St. Patrick's Cathedral. The several selections which were given were in every way worthy of attention from the large congregation assembled, and the Recital proved one of the best of the series. The chief attraction was the soprano solo, "Let the bright Seraphim," by Mrs. Alexander Williams, which was deserving of great praise. The trumpet obbligato to this solo was supplied by Mr. J. O'Donnell. The tenor recitative and air "Gracious is the Lord and righteous," and "Turn again, then," from Stevenson's Anthem "I am well pleased," were sung by Mr. D'Alton. The tenor solo, "No shadows yonder," and following chorus and quartet from Gaul's "Holy City" were also interesting, and the solo passages were given by Mr. W. S. North most tastefully. Mr. Marchant's contribution consisted of the following pieces:—Andante from Beethoven's Symphony "Hesse"; organ duet, "Fantasia in C," and the Overture to "Athalie."

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

OUR musical season is rapidly drawing to a close, the energy of Concert-givers is as exhausted as the patience of the public. Undaunted by such considerations, Mr. Waddell's choir challenged criticism and invited support on the 5th ult. The selection of Madrigals, which constituted the first part of the programme, received careful and in many cases very successful interpretation. Historical notes by Mr. Kunz were printed on the programme, and helped to interest the audience in such old-world names as De Wert, Orlando di Lasso, Wilbye, and others. Sad shipwreck was made in the second part of the programme alike in the choice and rendering of Macfarren's "Outward Bound." The Queen Street Hall was well filled by an audience who gave much of their applause to Mr. Ives and Mrs. Millar Craig, soloists. Mr. Millar Craig conducted.

At the last ordinary meeting of the Edinburgh Society of Musicians the programme consisted of compositions by members of the Society. A smoothly written "Non Nobis" for male voices by Mr. Montgomery Bell, Associate, was a good beginning, and the first movement of an Organ Sonata by Mr. Collinson, which followed, made a great impression by its clever construction and fresh, manly style. Mr. Otto Schweizer contributed some attractive arrangements of Scottish melodies; and among the other pieces were a "Sailor's Song" by Mr. Lingard (who has just passed the final examination for the degree of Mus. Bac., Trinity College, Toronto), a sacred solo by Mr. John Robertson, and two fine songs by Mr. Walter Hately.

At the annual business meeting of the same Society, the treasurer announced a substantial balance, the Benevolent Scheme was reported to be in an advanced state of preparation, and the foundation of a library was laid in about thirty standard works of reference. Mr. Otto Schweizer was unanimously re-elected President. The Committee entertains great hopes of providing the Society with a local habitation of its own next session.

Last year's Amateur Bach Club has blossomed into the Edinburgh Bach Society, and bids fair to extend its branches in many directions. At the last meeting of the session, held on the 13th ult. in Dowell's Rooms, George Street, which was fairly attended by the public as well as by the members, no fewer than three Concertos were given: the Triple Pianoforte Concerto in D minor, last played in Edinburgh nearly twenty years ago; the Double Pianoforte Concerto in C major, and the Double Violin Concerto in D minor. The first so charmed the audience that it had to be repeated at the close of the Concert. The performers were Messrs. Collinson, Dace, and Peterson; Misses Cameron and Lichtenstein; and Messrs. Waddell and Colin Mackenzie. A string quintet, led by Mr. Waddell, supplied the accompaniments, and two violoncello solos, beautifully played by Herr Gallrein, made a pleasant variety in the programme. Mr. Franklin Peterson, Hon. Sec., reported that sixty-five ladies and gentlemen, both professional and amateur, had become enrolled as members. The works studied this session include Sonatas, Concertos, Fugues and Suites, Organ compositions, Songs, one Cantata ("Wachet auf"), and the "Matthew Passion."

MUSIC IN GLASGOW AND THE WEST OF SCOTLAND.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE leading Glasgow concert-room is, unfortunately, in the market. At the present moment St. Andrew's Halls are, indeed, at the beck and call of the highest bidder, and speculation is rife as to whether the "General Provider" may not step in and appropriate the elegant pile to his terribly mundane vocation. Hopes are expressed that the Glasgow Corporation will come to the rescue, and so retain for its original purpose one of the finest concert-rooms in the country. Unfortunately, however, a somewhat serious financial consideration blocks the way. The buildings cost, in round figures, £100,000; the shareholders' capital—£70,000—is gone, and the interest on a large mortgage hangs, ghoul-like, on the poor rent-roll. How matters will eventually shape themselves cannot be said at present, but a crumb of comfort is found in the rumours concerning next winter's arrangements, and it may be taken, we understand, that entrepreneurs can have the large hall until, at any rate, the end of the coming concert season. The history of the Glasgow concert-rooms possesses no small measure of interest. The imposing edifice in Ingram Street—now in course of demolition for Post Office purposes—dates from 1796, and with its disappearance a landmark in the local annals of the harmonic art will be missed. There the Gentlemen's Subscription Concerts were in full swing during the first two or three decades of the present century, and the gentry journeyed thither in Sedan chairs, borne by stalwart "Hielanmen," to hear a Haydn Symphony. It is recorded that the Philharmonic Society occasionally submitted even a couple of Symphonies in the evening's programme. In the year of grace 1821 Glasgow concert-room facilities were limited for musical festival purposes. Hence the Theatre Royal was engaged for the Festival held in the year just named, at which, by the way, Catalani and John Braham sang. The next Festival took place in the City Hall, in January, 1860. Chorley was there, and it gives many folks satisfaction to remember his high regard for the abilities of Mr. Henry A. Lambeth, who conducted the Festival, saving on the occasion of the production of Mr. Charles E. Horsley's "Gideon." The meeting of 1873 was again held in the City Hall, and by this time the fragrant odours from the vegetable (&c., &c.) mart downstairs afforded many an article-writer abundant scope for a little joke. A well-known London critic, now at his rest, had a lively recollection of the leading Glasgow concert-room of those days, and more especially of the redolence of the air on the evening when Henry Smart's

"Jacob" was first produced. Since 1877 the Choral and Orchestral Concerts, and many other important gatherings, have had their habitation in the Halls now to be knocked down to the highest bidder.

The annual Tannahill Concert at The Glen, near Paisley, which took place on the 8th ult., drew an audience of from 8,000 to 10,000. The weather was, unfortunately, dull; and before the commencement of the Concert rain fell copiously and continued until the close of the entertainment. In favourable circumstances over 20,000 people have before now journeyed to Mr. Fulton's beautiful grounds on the occasion of the Tannahill Concert, and, in its way, no more enjoyable outing can be imagined than a few hours with the People's Poet. The day's programme comprised several of his best known songs, and although Mr. Roy Fraser's Choir has been considerably reduced in strength, the vocalists gave a very intelligent account of themselves. The band of the Queen's Own Cameron Highlanders, from Edinburgh Castle, was in attendance, and contributed greatly to the success of the Concert.

The Paisley Choral Union has arranged to take up Mr. Hamish MacCunn's "The Lay of the Last Minstrel," and in all probability Dr. Bridge's "Callirhoë" will again find place in next season's programme, in response, it should be said, to a general desire for a better knowledge of this engaging work.

MUSIC IN OXFORD.

It is difficult to imagine a more troublesome task than the attempt to summarise the musical doings of Oxford in the summer term. So many Concerts have been given, and they have presented so many features of interest, that it is only possible in a reasonable space to note the more salient points of interest, abandoning as hopeless the task of detailed criticism.

Owing, perhaps, to the activity of the University town itself in matters musical, we have had this term comparatively few visits from well-known performers. The chief events of this kind have been a Pianoforte Recital by Miss Margaret Wild on May 27, and two Vocal Recitals, the first on May 30 by Mrs. Hutchinson and Mr. Plunket Greene, the second on the 22nd ult. by Misses Liza Lehmann and Lena Little.

The music at Balliol College during the summer term has of late years been of great merit, and this last term has been of special significance. On May 25 Mr. Farmer's fairy opera "Cinderella" was recited, with Miss José Sherrington in the principal part. On the following day a Pianoforte Concerto and a Haydn Symphony were performed in the College Hall, and on the 21st ult. the Nottingham Philharmonic Society gave a very fine programme, including Bach's "I wrestle and pray."

On the 24th ult. the Oxford Philharmonic Society gave a performance of Dr. Bridge's "Callirhoë," conducted by the composer, in the Sheldonian Theatre. Dr. Bridge, who is well known here, received a very warm welcome, and the bright and charming music of his Cantata made a great impression. The other pieces on the programme were Lloyd's "Song of Balder" and Mozart's familiar Symphony in G minor, which had to be substituted for Beethoven's Pianoforte Concerto in G major at the last moment, owing to an unfortunate accident to the solo pianist.

The College Concerts of the eighth week have been reserved for mention all together, as constituting by far the most important and characteristic exhibition of University music during the year. It is hardly too much to say that the series of College Concerts in this week approach very closely to the rank of a musical festival. There were seven of these performances in the past term. The first two days of this week of Concerts were filled by Balliol, whose performances have been already mentioned. Then on Monday, May 27, came a well-managed Concert at Trinity College, at which Miss Alice Gomes and Mr. Piercy sang. At Exeter College, on the 28th, the Rev. Wellesley Batson's music to "The Faithful Shepherdess" was brought to a hearing, under the composer's direction. Interest was found for the second part of the programme by the introduction of a Minuet and Trio by the Organist of the College, Mr. F. C. Wood. The composer conducted, and the welcome that he received from orchestra and audience was equally deserved by his personal popularity and by the sterling merits of his composition. The next day, May 29, we were favoured with a performance of Brahms's "Rinaldo" and Lloyd's "Longbeard's Saga," by the Worcester College Musical Society. Mr. Harper Kearton sang the tenor solos, and the performance went well, but the feature of the Concert was undoubtedly the performance of Beethoven's "Kreutzer" Sonata by Miss Clench. This young lady, who is, we are informed, a Canadian by birth, bids fair to take a very prominent place in the ever increasing army of lady violinists. Merton College Concert, on May 30, was marked mainly by a capital performance of Mr. John Francis Barnett's "Building of the Ship," conducted by the composer. The soloists were Madame Catherine Penna, Miss Price, Mr. Holberry Hagyard, and Mr. Sunman. The last-named gentleman took the part at three hours' notice, according to an apology made on his behalf to the audience. The apology was not needed so far as the merits of his singing went, as he gave an excellent rendering of the part, an achievement that can be best estimated by those familiar with the difficulties of the music. Mozart's E flat major (Clarinet) Symphony, and a pleasing chorus by Eaton Fanning, "The Miller's Wooing," were the principal features of the second part. The week was closed by the Concert at Queen's College, on May 31, at which Grieg's "Landkenning" was given for the first time in England, and Mr. Prout's "Damon and Phintias" was produced under the composer's direction. The former work is at once eminently characteristic of the composer and beautiful in itself. It made a marked impression. Mr. Prout's new Cantata was written and composed for this Concert. The author of the libretto, Mr. R. H. U. Bloor, has arranged the old Greek legend in two scenes—in the first, Phintias endeavours to stab Dionysius, and is allowed to go home for three days, on condition of his friend Damon taking his place in prison; in the second, Damon is led out to execution, and saved by the arrival of Phintias, whereupon Dionysius pardons the latter and asks to be admitted into the philosophic brotherhood. To this dramatic story Mr. Prout has wedded most dramatic music. Each of the three solo parts is characterised in a thoroughly individual way, while the choruses are full of variety and charm. The delicate orchestration of Damon's air, "O'er lawn and lea," and the closing chorus were, perhaps, the most notable features in the first part. The second part opens with a Funeral March and grows in interest through a chain of choruses and solos, including a very elaborate scena for Phintias, up to a Finale of surpassing charm, "O love, thou breath of heaven." Societies looking out for novelties of interest will do well to turn their attention to "Damon and Phintias." The performance was excellent, the soloists (Messrs. Austin, Broadbent, and Ferguson), band, and chorus all doing their utmost. The quality and tone of the chorus were beyond all praise.

Though nothing else of much interest has taken place during the past year, three other Concerts deserve a word of mention. Jesus College Concert, on the 19th ult., was, as usual, mainly noteworthy for its Welsh music, and Pembroke College, on the 20th ult., gave a performance in the style with which Oxford has been familiar for many years. Keble College placed their Concert on the day that, by immemorial tradition, has been assigned to Pembroke, thus producing a most unfortunate and gratuitous clashing. The singing of Brahms's "Zigeuner Lieder" by two ladies and two members of Magdalen College was the chief feature of the Keble College Concert. A selection from Gluck's "Orpheus" and Rheinberger's "Clarice of Eberstein" appeared in the first part of the programme, but the orchestra proved hardly equal to the demands made on it by the music.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD, &c.

At the consecration of St. Marie's (Roman Catholic) Church on the 1st ult., the musical portions of the services were made specially attractive, and constituted an important feature in the ceremony. The imposing ritual was intensified in interest and dignity by beautiful music rendered by the excellent choir of the church. The Mass performed was by Nixon in E flat. A continuation of the services was held on Sunday, the 2nd ult., when the music was selected from Haydn's "Imperial," No. 1, and Mozart's No. 1 Masses. Mr. J. H. Kirk was Organist, and Mr. Bernard Walker, Chordmaster.

On the 3rd ult. the Catholic Musical Society performed Mendelssohn's "Athalie" in the Music Hall, Surrey Street. The Duke of Norfolk, and many of the bishops and clergy who had taken part in the services already alluded to, were present, and heard an admirable rendering of the work. The Society has recently made great advances in choir singing. The choruses in "Athalie" were sung with spirit and accuracy, "How long, O Lord," and "Heaven and the earth display" being especially worthy of mention. The band was fairly good, the "War March" obtaining the usual encore. Miss Annie Rutter recited the text with dramatic force and finished elocution. The soloists were Miss Emily Moxon, Miss M. Clarke, and Miss Morton. Mr. Samuel Hadfield conducted.

On the 18th ult. the pupils at the School for the Blind gave a Concert, performing selections from Mendelssohn's "Elijah." The chorus-singing reflected credit on the Conductor, Mr. W. Wood.

Mr. E. H. Lemare, the Organist of the Parish Church, is now giving a series of Sunday evening Organ Recitals, which attract crowded congregations and are much appreciated. The new organ is now in complete working order; and Mr. Lemare's excellent programmes are always varied and interesting. During the month he has played pieces by Bach, Salomé (C minor Sonata), Widor, Guilmant, Dubois, and others.

It has been decided to restore the fine old organ in the Parish Church, Rotherham. The instrument, a rich-toned Snetzler, is in a very dilapidated condition. The tender of Messrs. Abbott and Smith, of Leeds (£912), has been accepted; and the restoration is to be carried on under the advice of Dr. Hopkins. Hydraulic power will be applied to the organ.

MUSIC IN SOUTH WALES.

THE well-known Cardiff Blue Ribbon Choir gave an Evening Concert in the Wood Street Chapel, Cardiff, on Wednesday, the 5th ult. There has been some disagreement, ending in a split, in this celebrated choir; but, notwithstanding the withdrawal of many members, the performance was very commendable and some excellent singing was heard. The supporters of the choir gathered around them in strong force, resulting in a large and enthusiastic audience. Mr. J. F. Proudman conducted, Miss L. Hooper was at the organ, and Miss Morfydd Williams at the pianoforte, and both these ladies performed solos on their respective instruments. Miss Mabel Ferguson gave a recitation, which was well received.

At St. David's (R.C.) Church, Swansea, on Whit-Sunday, Haydn's 16th Mass was performed, with the addition of an efficient orchestra. The performance, thanks to a careful rehearsal, went better than usual.

On Thursday evening, the 13th ult., the Aberdare Choral Union gave a performance of Mozart's 12th Mass, preceded by a few miscellaneous selections, in the Temperance Hall. Miss Meta Scott was leader of the orchestra, and Mr. Rees Evans conducted. The audience was not so large as could have been wished, most probably owing to the inclement weather.

We have had the usual round of Eisteddfodau at Whitsuntide, the most important perhaps being those at Caerphilly, Cowbridge, and Aberdare; but nothing seems to have been done apparently towards the advancement of musical knowledge. A contemporary says: "It is an undeniable fact that in the industrial centres of South Wales singers do not attend choral rehearsals with any degree of enthusiasm unless there is placed before their eyes the prospect of an existing Eisteddfod contest. That it is for the contest rather than the love of music that Welsh singers are animated is unfortunately too evident. There has been but little improvement in Welsh choral singing for many years."

The Cardiff Musical Society gave their fifth Concert in the Queen Street Public Hall on Tuesday evening, the 18th ult. The programme was mainly made up of unaccompanied glees and madrigals—a branch of vocal music which Welsh choralists have, as a rule, hitherto much neglected. We hope to see the example set by the Cardiff Society speedily followed in other centres of choral singing. The knowledge and taste of the amateurs and their audiences generally would be much improved and increased thereby.

NEITHER the Recital nor the dramatic representation of a Shakespearian play would, in the ordinary way, call for notice in a musical paper, but when Mendelssohn's incidental music to the "Midsummer Night's Dream" is announced for performance these events may call for recognition. Mr. Kirwan gave a Recital of this play in the West Theatre at the Albert Hall, on the 1st ult., but such a mangled version of the music was played (as a pianoforte duet) that it could hardly claim to be of any artistic value to the Reciter, who, on his part, in no way satisfied the requirements of so arduous a task. The version of the text recited was neither judiciously cut nor correctly given, and there was a want of refinement in delivery which specially affected the rendering of the fairy part of the play. On the other hand, the adequate representation of the same comedy given by the Irving Dramatic Club, on May 28 and 30, was distinctly deserving of commendation. A small orchestra, under the able direction of Mr. Battison Haynes, gave so efficient a rendering of this delightful music that the value of its association with the play was fairly demonstrated. The vocal music was excellently rendered by some ladies and boys of Mr. Stedman's choir, the acting was very creditable throughout, and the staging of the play was, in all respects admirable, the whole representation giving evidence of high artistic aim.

The University of Durham, which has hitherto only conferred honorary degrees in music, now intends to confer the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. after examination. As regards the exercises and examinations of candidates, the musical requirements are identical with those of Oxford, and the musical standard will be maintained at the Oxford level. But, with regard to the non-musical side of the examination, the University of Durham takes a forward step; all that it requires of its students in music is that they shall pass an examination in English (Grammar and Composition), Geography, and Arithmetic. The one other point in which the Durham scheme departs from that of Oxford is the matter of expense; whereas, at Oxford, the exercise for the degree of Doctor has to be performed with complete band and chorus, at Durham the performance is either to be dispensed with altogether or to be confined to pianoforte and harmonium. Fees also will be found to be less at Durham than at Oxford. The non-musical examination is entitled the Examination for a Certificate of Proficiency in General Education, and will be held twice a year in Durham, in March and September. Particulars as to this examination (which must be passed before the student can present himself for the First Examination in Music) may be had from the Warden's Secretary, the University, Durham.

Two Summer Concerts were given at the Hampstead Conservatoire of Music by its principal, Mr. Geaussen, on May 29 and the 19th ult. The programme of the first included, Overture, "Fingal's Cave," Mendelssohn; Cowen's Scandinavian Symphony, conducted by the composer; Mendelssohn's Capriccio in B minor (the solo part admirably played by Mr. Geaussen, and Mr. Cowen conducting); and Mendelssohn's "Walpurgis Night," the choruses in which were sung with great spirit by the choir, the solos receiving adequate interpretation by Miss Tombleson, Mr. Iver McKay, and Mr. J. T. Hutchinson. On the second occasion Wingham's Concert Overture in F, Prout's Symphony in the same key (conducted by their respective composers), Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto (the solo part by Miss Louisa Pyne), and the Overture "Oberon" were played. Songs by Miss Mildred Harwood and Part-songs by the Conservatoire Choir completed an interesting programme. An excellent orchestra, led by Mr. Carrodus, gave an admirable rendering of the works above-named. The enterprising spirit displayed by Mr. Geaussen in the conduct of this Institution demands high recognition, and the interest felt by the residents in the locality was evidenced by the crowded audience which attended on each occasion.

MRS. FRANCIS RALPH (better known as Miss Kate Roberts) gave the first of two Concerts of chamber music at 155, New Bond Street, on the 8th ult. Mrs. Ralph (whose late husband will be remembered as an esteemed professor at the Royal Academy) was assisted by Mr. Ellis Roberts (violin), Mr. Channel (viola), and Mr. Charles Ould (violoncello), and an excellent interpretation of Dvorák's Quartet in D was given by these artists; as also of Brahms's Sonata (Op. 38) by Mrs. Ralph and Mr. Ould; and of Grieg's Sonata (Op. 8) by Mrs. Ralph and Mr. Roberts. The pianist also displayed all her former delicacy of touch and facility of execution in Mendelssohn's Sketches. The programme was varied by some Gipsy Songs of Dvorák admirably sung by Mr. Shakespeare, who, being encored, sang another of the same series; and by songs by Miss Mary Willis, whose artistic singing alike in the air from Pacini's "Saffo" and in Macfarren's "Pack clouds away" received hearty recognition from the audience, a repetition of the latter effort being called for. Miss Edith Willis was an able accompanist.

An excellent Concert was given by the Handel Society at the Portman Rooms, on May 29. Since its last public performance the Association has grown considerably and now numbers nearly 200 in the choir and upwards of 100 in the orchestra. The programme was decidedly, though, as it proved, not unduly, ambitious. Bach's Magnificat is a work not to be lightly taken in hand; but it was very creditably rendered, particularly by the chorus. The band was heard to greater advantage in Mozart's Symphony in D (No. 35 of Breitkopf and Härtel's edition), of which a spirited performance was given. An interesting part was Handel's music to Smollett's drama "Alceste," which was never performed. The composer used up much of his portion of the work in his "Choice of Hercules," but it has probably never been presented in its original form until the present occasion. Though certainly not unworthy of the great composer it is not remarkable either for the airs or the choruses. The latter are extremely simple in structure. The Concert, which was on the whole a great success, was conducted with much ability by Mr. F. A. W. Docker.

A VERY interesting Organ and Violin Recital was given at St. George's Church, Campden Hill, on the 17th ult. The organist was Mr. G. F. Huntley (Organist of the Church), the violinist being Mr. H. W. Hunt (Organist of St. Jude's, South Kensington). The performance was in every respect excellent, and the combination of instruments very effective, the violin blending especially well with the diapasons. The programme included the following: Thema mit Veränderungen, Abendlied, and Overture (Rheinberger), Adagio in D, Op. 51 (Merkel), Prelude and Fugue in E (Stanford), Rhapsodie and Fantaisie (Saint-Saëns). Some of these pieces are comparative novelties in this country, and their undoubted merits entitle them to the consideration of English musicians. Madame C. Blackwell sang with great taste "The Lord is my Shepherd" ("Rose of Sharon"), Mackenzie, and "O Zion, how bright" ("Fall of Babylon"), Spohr. Owing to the interest excited by the performance, it has been decided to give a second Recital of a similar character on Monday, the 8th inst.

MR. J. M. CAPEL gave a Musical Matinée, on the 24th ult., at Steinway Hall, when he was supported by Miss Ethel K. Capel, Miss Grace Woodward (who in a song by Allitsen was admirably seconded by Miss Kate Chaplin's playing of the violin obligato part), Miss Rosina Brandram; Messrs. Avon Saxon, Lawrence Kellie, and others. The programme embraced a number of songs by the Concert-giver, which were deservedly well received; more especially that entitled "The Soldier Dolly," rendered with much tragic-comic pathos by Miss Brandram (encored), and an as yet unpublished one, "Won't you?" whereof Mr. Capel himself gave a refined interpretation. One of the features of the afternoon was also undoubtedly the exquisite ensemble singing of the Lotus Glee Club, who had to supplement the two four-part songs set down for them by a third; the musical portion of the programme was agreeably diversified by recitations, chiefly of the humorous order, wherein Miss Kingston, Messrs. Lewis Waller, E. J. Odell, and others took part.

THE London Gregorian Choral Association celebrated its 17th Annual Festival in St. Paul's Cathedral on Thursday the 6th ult., fully a thousand members taking part in the service. The processional hymn was "To Zion, stately pile," in which, as in other parts of the service, brass and reed instruments were used with admirable effect in supporting the voices and helping to ensure, if not absolutely ensuring, precision in the rendering of the music. The Psalms were chanted to the 7th and 8th Tones, the Magnificat to the 8th, and the Nunc dimittis to the 2nd Tone from the Salisbury Manual, 1554. Contrasted with this antique music was Stainer's fine anthem "They that love the Lord." Other hymns were sung, fine effects being gained by the alternations of men's and boys' voices, and of broad unison and full harmony. From the point of view of musical efficiency the festival was by common consent the best yet given. Dr. Warwick Jordan presided in a very able manner at the organ.

MR. H. KILLICK MORLEY (a member of a well-known musical family and a professional pupil of the late Mr. George Cooper), Organist of the Parish Church of St. Alphege, Greenwich, has resigned his appointment after holding it for thirty-one years. The series of Concerts which he carried on for eighteen years, entirely at his own expense and risk, were perhaps the best of their class ever given in the suburbs. Madame Clara Novello, Madame Viardot-Garcia, Madame Minnie Hauk, Madame Arabella Goddard, Mr. F. Lablache, Dr. Hans von Bülow, Sir Charles Hallé, Messrs. Sims Reeves, Maas, Lloyd, and Santley, Joachim and Molique, with other artists, have appeared at his Concerts. In other ways Mr. Morley has benefited musical art in the district. His personal qualities and musical attainments will cause the news of his resignation to be received with regret by a large circle of friends.

THE new "first part" in German Reed's entertainment at St. George's Hall—buffaree or buffareta, as it is called—was produced on the 24th ult. with a large amount of success. It is called "Tuppins and Co." and the chief humour of the story turns upon the baseless jealousy of Tuppins (Mr. Alfred Reed). His wife (Miss Fanny Holland) is an ex-lady's maid, with a lingering love for "le bong tong." These artists have rarely appeared to greater advantage. There are other cleverly drawn characters in the piece, such as a dainty little hoyden (Miss Tully), an Irishman (Mr. Walter Browne), and a Tenor singer (Mr. Duncan Young), all represented most efficiently. The book, by Mr. Malcolm Watson, is well written, and the music, bright and melodious, is by Mr. Edward Solomon. Mr. Corney Grain's latest sketch, "My Aunt's in Town," completed a capital evening's entertainment.

THE fifteenth Session of the Musical Association was brought to a close on the 3rd ult. with a paper by Mr. D. J. Blaikley on "The Action of Musical Reeds," which was illustrated by several experiments. In the course of his lecture Mr. Blaikley explained the manner in which the air pressure affected the reed, it being necessary that there should be an application of force of the character of a series of pushes or pulls upon it, so timed with reference to its oscillations as to replace the energy dissipated by its own friction, &c. He also dealt with metal reeds having resonating tubes of fixed dimensions, and spoke of the influences which the reed and its associated tube exerted one upon the other. The paper was followed by an interesting discussion and a cordial vote of thanks was accorded to Mr. Blaikley.

MISS JEANNE DOUSTE gave, on May 30, a Pianoforte Recital, the programme of which consisted exclusively of works by Chopin. We could find no fault with the selection, except that it included the Mazurka in F sharp major, which, as Mr. Ernst Pauer clearly demonstrated some twelve years ago, was never written by Chopin at all, but by Karl Mayer. The Mazurka is, it is true, included in the Klindworth edition of Chopin's works, but it appears with a note frankly stating its authenticity to be doubtful. As a matter of fact, the publisher, Gotthard, was deceived by a Polish Countess, who came to him in distress, and sold him the manuscript as the autograph of "her illustrious compatriot," whereas it was undeniably Mayer's composition, and copied out after his death in imitation of Chopin's handwriting.

THE huge organ just completed by Messrs. Hill and Son for the Town Hall, Sydney, has been exhibited before its departure for its destination. At the Recitals given by Mr. W. T. Best and Mr. W. S. Hoyte the resources of its five manuals and 126 speaking stops were shown. The most remarkable feature of the instrument, however, is its 64-ft. stop, a striking reed of true length on the pedal organ. The lowest note of this stop, expressed in organ-builders' language as "CCCCC," is two octaves below the lowest C on the pianoforte, and as it gives only eight vibrations in a second it cannot be perceived as a note at all. Its effect lies wholly in the extraordinary richness and power of its upper harmonics, by which it reinforces notes given by the higher pipes.

THE Academy for the Higher Development of Pianoforte Playing stands deservedly prominent among the teaching institutions of the metropolis, and the display of talent furnished by a number of the students at the Marlborough Rooms, on the 15th ult., was characterised by great merit and still greater promise. Without entering fully into details we may state that the best work of the afternoon was done by Miss Constance de Paris, Miss Crisp, and Mr. Sydney Blakiston. The first-named young lady gave a remarkably neat and intelligent rendering of Raff's "Ode to Spring"; while the gentleman evinced qualities of a high order in Beringer's Andante and Presto. The playing of these and the other students who appeared won cordial approbation from a large and discriminating audience.

MISS VICTORIA DE BUNSEN's annual morning Concert took place on the 3rd ult., at the residence of Sir Morell and Lady Mackenzie, 19, Harley Street, a large and fashionable assemblage being present. Miss de Bunsen was heard to advantage in "Ah! quel giorno," which she sang admirably, and she also took part with Madame Valda, Mr. William Nicholl, and Mr. Ragnar Grevillius in the quartet from "Rigoletto." The other vocalists who appeared were Miss Marie Tietjens, Miss Carlotta Elliot, Mr. Isidore de Lara, and Mr. Ernest Birch. Miss Agnes Zimmermann and Mr. Papini played solos, and were heard together in the Variations from the "Kreutzer" Sonata. Between the parts Mrs. Bernard Beere recited. Mr. Ducci accompanied.

THE scheme of Mr. J. H. Bonawitz's historical Organ, Harpsichord, and Pianoforte Recital, given at Princes' Hall on the 8th ult., contained no fewer than forty-five pieces, numbered and placed in chronological order, from the organ "Benedicite" of Conrad Paumann (1410-1473) down to Liszt's pianoforte transcription of the "Tannhäuser" March. Detailed notice of such a selection would manifestly be out of the question. Enough that we have in our midst few musicians so capable as Mr. Bonawitz of doing justice to so varied and comprehensive a programme. His performances on each of the three keyboards were marked by rare facility, clearness, and intelligence, and all were followed with appreciative interest by a numerous audience.

A CAPITAL Chamber Concert was given by Mr. E. H. Thorne at the Princes' Hall, on the 15th ult. The most important works in the programme were Bach's Concerto in D minor for two violins, and Schumann's Quintet in E flat (Op. 44), in which the Concert-giver had the assistance of Mr. Guerini, an able violinist, Mr. J. Pitts, Mr. Grossheim, and Mr. Peruzzi. An interesting part was Dr. Hubert Parry's Partita in D minor, for violin and pianoforte, in which the composer has managed to infuse not a little of the style of Bach and his contemporaries. Mention may also be made of Mr. Algernon Ashton's clever, if somewhat laboured, Irish dances for pianoforte duet, which were excellently played by Mr. Thorne and Mr. Herbert Thorne.

THE Annual Concert of Mr. W. G. Cusins, at St. James's Hall, on the 20th ult., attracted a large and fashionable audience. Though the programme was miscellaneous it was thoroughly good of its kind. The instrumental portion included Mendelssohn's Trio in D minor, in which Mr. Cusins had the invaluable assistance of Miss Teresina Tua and Mr. Piatti; his own pianoforte solos, and the pieces for viola d'amore by Milandre, played with much taste by Mr. Van Waefelghem. The vocal pieces contributed by Madame Valda, Madame Patey, and Mr. Barrington Foote were, for the most part, worthy of their surroundings, and not the least attractive feature of the Concert were the humorous recitations of Mrs. Kendal.

THE Westminster Orchestral Society brought its excellent series of Concerts of works by living English composers to an end on Wednesday, May 29. Mr. Hamish MacCunn's very graphic Ballad "The Ship o' the Fiend," Mr. Goring Thomas's graceful Airs de Ballet, Mr. Cowen's "Welsh" Symphony, and Miss Dora Bright's clever Pianoforte Concerto, played by the composer, were the principal features of the Concert. By focussing, as it were, the talent and genius of our native musicians, the Westminster Orchestral Society and its Conductor, Mr. C. S. Macpherson, have rendered a good service to art, and have demonstrated that British born composers need fear no comparison with those of any other country at the present day.

AN interesting programme was presented by Mr. Charles Gardner at his annual Matinée musicale, given on the 15th ult., at Willis's rooms. Mr. Gardner's solos included compositions by Dvořák, Raff, Edward Bache, and himself, which he executed in refined and finished style. He also joined Messrs. Ludwig and Whitehouse in Sterndale Bennett's delightful chamber Trio in A major, which received an irreproachable rendering at the hands of these artists. Two or three of Mr. Gardner's pupils took part in the Concert, the vocal portion of which was sustained by Miss Louise Phillips, Miss Louise Collier, and Mr. W. H. Brereton. Mr. F. Berger accompanied.

MISS JANOTHA'S Recital on May 28 derived variety and attractiveness from the co-operation of Madame Néruda, who was associated with the gifted Danish pianist in a fine performance of the "Kreutzer" Sonata. Miss Janotha was heard at her best in Schumann's "Carnival" and in Beethoven's "Moonlight" Sonata, investing both works with rare artistic feeling and refinement. She also played in charming fashion a group of nine short pieces from her own pen, entitled "Mountain Scenes." Needless to add that all these things were listened to with pleasure and warmly applauded. Madame Antoinette Sterling was the vocalist.

DR. MACKENZIE'S charming Cantata "The Bride" was the principal feature of the Concert given at the Portman Rooms, on the 3rd ult., by the Beresford Hope Primrose League Choir and Orchestra. The work was fairly given, though with a little more preparation it might have gone better still. The solos were sung by Miss Esmée Woodford and Mr. Iver McKay, Mr. Henry A. Hughes conducting. Lady Randolph Churchill accompanied Mr. Johannes Wolff in a couple of violin solos, and some favourite vocal and instrumental morceaux and part-songs made up the rest of the programme.

THE clever young Italian violinist, Miss Teresina Tua, has returned to London greatly improved, as was strikingly evinced at her Concert in the Princes' Hall on the 6th ult. She was formerly a promising child; she is now an artist, as was proved by her playing in Brahms's Sonata in A, for pianoforte and violin (Op. 100), and Mendelssohn's Concerto—the latter not a wise selection for a Chamber Concert. Miss Tua's style is spirited, as becomes an Italian performer, and her execution is very brilliant.

MISS LUCIE JOHNSTONE and Miss Alice Mary Smith gave a Concert at Steinway Hall on the 12th ult. The beneficiaires are to be congratulated on the excellence of their several efforts. They were ably assisted in the performance of an interesting programme by Miss Annie Marriott, Mr. Percy Palmer, Mr. Brereton, Mr. John Thomas, and Miss Margaret Jenkins. A ladies' choir, under the conductorship of Miss Bessie Cox, rendered very efficient service. Mr. Albert Visetti and Miss Bessie Cox conducted the Concert, Mr. E. François Choveaux acting as accompanist.

A VERY fine performance of "Elijah" was given in Westminster Abbey, on Ascension Day (May 30), the choir and orchestra numbering 400 executants. The choir consisted of the special Abbey choir and the Finsbury Choral Association. Miss Whitacre, Miss Berry (of the Royal College of Music), Messrs. Harper Kearton, Hilton, Bell, and Ackerman were the principal vocalists and Dr. Bridge was the Conductor. There was a large attendance, but the collection for the Westminster Hospital was not so liberal as could be desired.

MR. HAYDN GROVER gave a Glee and Ballad Concert in the Surrey Masonic Hall, Camberwell New Road, on Tuesday, the 4th ult., assisted by Miss F. Barsdorf, Miss E. Stuart, Mr. Herbert Sims Reeves, Mr. Henry Parkin, Mr. Alfred Grieve, and Mr. Frank Swinford. Several of Mr. Grover's compositions were included in the programme, and were very favourably received by the audience. Mr. Charles Dickens gave two readings from his father's works; Mr. F. Belchamber accompanied most of the vocalists and played a pianoforte solo.

ON the 2nd and 16th ult., after the evening service, at St. Luke's, Chelsea, the second and third parts of "The Redemption" were performed, with full orchestral accompaniments. The various solos, &c., were most ably sung by Miss Kate Norman, Miss Pattie Michie, Miss Edith Turner, Miss Annie Reader, Mr. Lawrence Freyer, and Mr. Musgrove Tufnail. The band was led by Mr. Dean Grimson, and the whole was under the direction of Mr. Everard Hulton, Organist and Choirmaster of St. Luke's.

AT St. Mary Abchurch, on the 3rd ult., Mr. Albert Bishop concluded the second series of his interesting Recitals, entitled "Six hours with the Organ Compositions of J. S. Bach." In the two series together the whole of the great master's organ works were given, and their construction was explained by carefully annotated programmes supplied at each Recital. Mr. Bishop's performance was appreciated by a large and critical audience.

ON Whit Sunday, at St. Etheldreda's Roman Catholic Church, Ely Place, the choir sang Haydn's Imperial Mass accompanied by full orchestra, led by Mr. Reginald Creek. The vocal solos were taken by Master J. Moran, Mr. W. Dutton, Mr. B. Cunningham, and Mr. Conrad Formes, the latter gentleman also singing Neukomn's "Veni Sancte Spiritus." Mr. Henry Lewis conducted and Mr. B. B. Barrett presided at the organ.

THE Members of the Grosvenor Choral Society gave their 208th Monthly Concert at the Grosvenor Hall, on the 21st ult., when a miscellaneous selection of songs and part-songs was given. The soloists were Mesdames Etheridge, Kelly, and Hacker, and Messrs. Harry Ward, Horace Reynolds, and Etherington Smith. Mr. F. R. Kinke gave two pianoforte solos and also accompanied during the evening. Mr. David Woodhouse conducted.

AT Princes' Hall, on the 1st ult., a numerous and fashionable audience attended Signor Denza's annual evening Concert, the programme of which was of the customary miscellaneous order. Signor Denza accompanied a number of compositions from his own pen, and altogether the Concert (supported, with one or two exceptions, wholly by foreign artists) was extremely successful.

MR. LAWRENCE KELLIE's second and third Recitals, on May 28 and the 11th ult., were both largely attended. In each instance he brought forward songs of his own, which met, for self-evident reasons, with the largest share of acceptance. Mr. Kellie was assisted by well-known vocal and instrumental artists.

THE Kyrle Choir, under the direction of Mr. F. A. W. Docker, gave a performance of "Hear my prayer," "Judge me, O God," and "Stabat Mater," on Wednesday, the 12th ult., at St. Mary's Church, Hoxton. The solo parts were taken by Miss Ada Loaring, Mrs. L'Estrange, Mr. John Probert, and Mr. Albert Orme.

ON Saturday, the 15th ult., Mr. Fountain Meen gave a Recital on the new organ (built by Mr. Eustace Ingram, of Holloway) in the Wesleyan Chapel, Finchley, assisted by Miss Julia Glover and Mr. Harris as vocalists. The programme included pieces by Mendelssohn, Rea, Silas, Spohr, and Smart.

GOUNOD's "Redemption" (parts 2 and 3) was included in the Service on the evenings of Ascension Day and the following Thursday, the 6th ult., at St. Marylebone Church. The music was excellently rendered by the choir under the direction of Mr. Hodge, the Organist of the Church, his brother presiding at the organ.

AN influential Committee has been formed with the view of placing St. Michael's College, founded by the late Sir Frederick Ouseley, at Tenbury, on a permanent basis. The members of the Committee comprise many distinguished personages in the Church, the State, and Music.

THE Maas Memorial Prize was this year awarded to Mr. Frank Lawrence O'Hare, a pupil of the Midland Institute Branch of the School of Music in Birmingham. The adjudicators were Mr. W. C. Stockley, Dr. C. S. Heap, and Dr. R. Winn.

MISS NOEMI LORENZI, a singer possessing a pleasing and well-cultivated soprano voice, gave an evening Concert in the Banqueting Room, St. James's Hall, on the 12th ult., assisted by several excellent artists.

REVIEWS.

Dictionary of Music and Musicians. By Sir G. Grove. Appendix. Edited by J. A. Fuller-Maitland. [Macmillan and Co.]

AFTER an interval, by no means excessive in length, it we take into account the exhaustive nature of the additions and corrections which have had to be made, the Appendix to Sir George Grove's Dictionary has been published, and extends to some 300 pages of carefully edited and valuable matter. The nature of some of the articles is not calculated to attract the reader, being in many cases a mere list of minute corrections and additions. But if not attractive to the general reader, these purely corrective or supplementary articles are of real value to the student, and they have been carried out with an elaborateness which speaks eloquently for the patience and scholarly precision of the editor. As specimens of this careful attention to accuracy of detail, we would refer our readers to the additional entries and corrections under the headings "Pianoforte Music" and "Pianoforte Playing." Apart from corrections and tail-pieces necessary to bring one's information up to date, there are also a considerable number of new and important articles. Mr. Adolphe Jullien, the eminent critic, has contributed a whole series of admirable biographies of the most prominent leaders of the modern French school, such as Franck, Chabrier, Godard, D'Indy, and Miss Holmès. His notice of Benoît will be read with additional interest since the performance of that composer's "Lucifer" in the Albert Hall. Mr. Jullien's strictures are crushing, but they are in our opinion only too well deserved. What can be more to the point than the following paragraph?—"Upon poems of little clearness or variety the composer has built up scores which are certainly heavy, solid, and massive enough, but which are wanting in charm and grace. Benoît's musical ideas have no originality; he gets all his effects by great instrumental and choral masses, and is therefore obliged to write very simply in order to prevent inextricable confusion. Whatever plan he adopts he prolongs indefinitely: he repeats his words and the meagre phrases which form his melodies to satiety. By his regular rhythms and solid harmonies, generally productive of heaviness, his music has here and there something in common with the choruses of Gluck and Rameau, but these passages are unfortunately rare. His style is derived sometimes from Gounod, sometimes from Schumann, and yet he firmly believes himself to be following the traditions of the Flemish school. When Benoît does not chance upon any reminiscences of this kind, he exhausts himself in interminable repetitions, which never reach the interesting development we should expect from a musician of his calibre." Mr. Jullien's impartiality is exhibited by the equal severity with which he comments on the later work of his compatriot Massenet. The additions under the head of Beethoven comprise a most exhaustive catalogue of his printed works compiled from Nottebohm's Catalogue, the Letters, the works themselves, and other sources, and they are conveniently arranged so as to give the opus number, where it exists, a general description of the work, the date of composition, the name of the original publisher, and the dedication. Dr. Parry's article on "Dance Rhythm" is interesting so far as it goes, but is tantalizingly short. The most entertaining of all the biographical sketches is that of Boito, from the pen of Mr. Mazzucato, which contains an exceedingly picturesque account of the original production of "Mefistofele." Mr. W. Barclay Squire has written a fresh account of Byrd, characterised throughout by that minuteness of research and extensive familiarity with the bibliography of musical literature for which his work is so highly valued. The same remarks apply to his supplementary article on "Musical Libraries." Mr. Paul David's paper on Ole Bull is written throughout in a spirit of genial and appreciative criticism, while the Editor's account of Dvorák is at once sympathetic and judicious. Very good work again has been done by Miss Middleton in her notice of Kjerulf and her elaborate and interesting additions to the late Dr. Hueffer's life of Liszt. Amongst numerous miscellaneous articles of value we may perhaps specify those on "Humorous Music," by Mr. F. C. Corder; on "Negro music in the States," by Mr. Jenks; that on "Psalter," by Mr. Woolbridge; on "Part-books" and "Part-writing," by Mr. Rockstro, and all those by Mr. A. J. Hipkins. We are delighted to see that in the last-named gentleman's additional article on "Trumpet," he pays a well-merited tribute to the artistic devotion of Mr. Morrow, of whose splendid Bach trumpet he gives a full account. In fine, Sir George Grove is to be congratulated on having secured for the Appendix to his great work the services of so thoroughly competent and painstaking an editor as Mr. Fuller-Maitland. We are glad to learn that the Index to the whole four volumes, which has been prepared by Mrs. Wodehouse, will be shortly published in a separate volume.

The Organist's Quarterly Journal. Edited by Dr. Spark. Part 82. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THIS section of Dr. Spark's useful publication only contains two pieces, an elaborate Fantasia by E. Silas and a Prelude and Fugue by G. B. Polleri. The former is remarkable for the fact that the composer dispenses with clefs, and only gives the key signature at the top of every page. Signor Polleri is an organist at Genoa, and his Prelude and Fugue gained the first prize in a competition in Florence two years ago. As a contrapuntal exercise it is very unpretentious, the resources of fugue being utilised to an extremely limited extent. As abstract music, however, it is effective and by no means difficult.

Album Lyrique (Op. 48). Violon et Piano-forte. By Walter Brooks. [Augener and Co.]

THE Album consists of four pieces—namely, "Chanson de Bowe," "Danse des Paysans," "Marche des Chasseurs," and a Canzonetta, all very pretty and melodious, and none very difficult. There is a sense of originality in the treatment, even if the forms of the melody and the rhythms fall familiarly on the ear. The pieces are not likely to be any the less welcome to those who desire to add to their stores of music some pleasant and effective compositions.

Psalms and Hymns. For Men's Voices. Arranged by Sir Herbert Oakeley. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THIS collection of familiar hymns and tunes is intended for the use of University students, the army, navy, and male choirs. The Editor has made the necessary alterations and transpositions of the parts with musicianlike taste, and has in most cases arranged the harmonies in three parts. An accompaniment is added, which also forms a setting for mixed voices. The book cannot fail to be of great service to those for whom it is intended.

Three-Part Songs. Composed by F. J. Simpson. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THERE are eight of these three-part songs in this collection, set to words by Shelley, Hood, and Shakespeare, all written with a large amount of musical feeling and in sympathy with the character of the words. They are all intended for two tenors and a bass, with the exception of the round "To-morrow," which is for equal voices; but they may be sung by two sopranos and a contralto or bass, so that they offer the means of obtaining a fair amount of variety, which may bring a corresponding measure of charm.

Rondino (in G) for the Piano-forte. Composed by C. A. Macirone. [Alfred Hays.]

A CHARMINGLY fresh and melodious Rondino by so accomplished a writer as Miss Macirone should attract the attention of all thoughtful teachers, even in the present over-productive age; and we are glad, therefore, to see that artists who desire not to rank themselves amongst the disciples of what may perhaps be termed the "higher development" school of composition do not remain quite silent. A modest flower which we pluck by the wayside often contains the germ of some of our rarest exotics; and to those who know and admire Beethoven's little Rondo in the same key as that chosen by Miss Macirone, we cordially commend the piece before us, both for practice and study.

FOREIGN NOTES.

THE new English Church of St. George, in the Rue des Bassins, at Paris, was on Whit-Sunday attended by their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, with their family and suite. The service commenced with a Processional Hymn and was fully choral, the Te Deum being Steggall in A, the Jubilate, Morgan in D, and the Anthem Attwood's "Come, Holy Ghost," the solos of which were admirably rendered by Masters Keall, French, and De La Londe. Compositions by the Chaplain (the Rev. George Washington, M.A., who intoned part of the service and preached a short but eloquent discourse) were sung. The choir, now numbering twenty boys and eight gentlemen in cassocks and surplices, is supplemented by a ladies' choir.

"The Messiah," rarely performed in Paris, was given on the 10th ult., at the Trocadéro, for the benefit of the Société Philanthropique, under the direction of Signor Vianesi, and realised the sum of 45,000 francs. The last preceding Paris performance of the work was in January, 1875, under the auspices of M. Lamoureux, when Madame Patey sang the contralto solos, the French translation being that of M. Wilder. An interesting and sympathetic article on the chef d'œuvre of the Saxon master will be found in L'Art Musical, of the 15th ult.

An early opera, "La jeunesse d'Henri V.," by the composer of "Zampa" and "Le Pré aux Clercs," has recently been published in score, at the instance of the present representatives of the Hérold family. The work was performed at Naples in 1815, with some success, but was then laid aside and forgotten.

The favourite instrument of the late M. Alard, a splendid Guarnerius violin of considerable value, has been presented to the Museum of the Paris Conservatoire by the family of the deceased violinist.

The Paris Château d'Eau Theatre was opened last month, under new management, with the performance of Verdi's long-forgotten opera, "La Battaglia di Legnano," first produced at Rome in 1849, and certainly not one upon which the composer's fame is founded.

An interesting private performance of Gluck's "Orpheus" recently took place at the Kroll'sche Theater, of Berlin, when the solo parts were rendered by three gifted pupils of Professor Julius Hey, chorus and orchestra being those of the Berlin Opera, and the mise-en-scène being the work of the veteran Herr Fricke, of Dessau. Professor Hey, who not long since established an academy for dramatic singing at the German capital, aims at a realisation of the scheme originally proposed by Richard Wagner in connection with the Bayreuth undertaking, his pupils undergoing a severe training in the different styles of dramatic vocalisation as adapted to the masterpieces of the art. In this direction he appears to have already achieved some considerable success, the present performance being described as thoroughly artistic, far removed from a mere exhibition of a few clever pupils, and the progress of the new institution will be followed with considerable interest by amateurs. Professor Klindworth conducted the performance.

On the 24th ult. the rehearsals for the forthcoming Festspiele at Bayreuth commenced. There are to be no less than thirty-one rehearsals for "Tristan und Isolde," seventeen for "Parsifal," and twenty-one for "Die Meistersinger."

The following notice has been forwarded to us for publication from Leipzig:—"The highly interesting manuscript of Richard Wagner's celebrated paper 'Ueber das Dirigiren' (first published, in November, 1869, by the Neue Zeitschrift für Musik), has recently been discovered by the present editor of that journal, Dr. Paul Simon, hidden away amongst a number of other manuscript matter. This precious relic is now being worthily preserved at the office of Messrs. C. F. Kahnt Nachfolger, the publishers of the Neue Zeitschrift, where it may be inspected by any one taking an interest in the matter."

A grand Liszt Concert was given on the 5th ult. by the Leipzig Liszt Society, under the conductorship of Capellmeister Nikisch. The programme included the Symphonies "Tasso" and "Faust," the E flat major Concerto and 12th Rhapsody (Herr Stavenhagen presiding at the pianoforte), and some songs. The performance is described as having been masterly throughout.

Spontini's stately and picturesque opera, "Fernando Cortez," was revived on the 28th ult. at the Berlin Opera, in connection with the Court festivities in celebration of the wedding of Prince Friedrich Leopold of Prussia.

During the operatic year at the Imperial Opera of Vienna, extending from August 1, 1888, to the 15th ult., there have been 258 performances of opera, comprising 64 different works by 32 composers. Amongst the latter, Richard Wagner takes the lead with 39 performances of his operas, and is closely followed by Verdi, whose works ("Otello," "Trovatore," "Aida," and "Un Ballo in Maschera") scored 33 performances, "Otello" having been produced no less than 20 times. It is, moreover, interesting to note that, out of the total number, 59 performances were devoted to works of French and 45 to those of Italian origin.

A music Festival on a large scale, and with an attractive programme, is to be held in September next, at Hamburg, under the direction of Dr. Hans von Bülow.

The King of Italy has conferred decorations upon several German musical conductors, notably upon Herr Sucher, of the Berlin Opera, and Herr Zöllner, of the Cologne Männer-Gesangverein.

Some thirty members of the University Choral Society of Lund (Sweden), under their Director, M. Emil Norrmann, are just now engaged upon a concert tour in Germany and Austria-Hungary. Similar undertakings on the part of Scandinavian musical societies are decidedly on the increase, and apparently meet with the encouragement they deserve.

A correspondent writes to us from Christiania:—"The young violinist, Gabriele Wietrowetz, who some time ago gave a most successful Concert at the Royal Opera House of Stockholm, has since extended her artistic tour to the principal towns of both Sweden and Norway, her eminent talents meeting everywhere with a most enthusiastic recognition, while the press organs are unanimous in assigning to the young artist a place in the foremost rank of modern executants of her instrument."

An opera entitled "The Castle of Kronberg," whereof King Oscar of Sweden is the author of both the music and the words, is now in course of preparation at several German operatic theatres.

Severin Eisenberger is the name of the most recently discovered youthful phenomenon in the domain of pianoforte playing—an eight year-old native of Cracow, to whom Beethoven, Liszt, and Chopin are "mere child's play." The promising lad is to be sent to the Vienna Conservatorium (at the expense of his fellow-citizens) for higher development—if such be, indeed, possible.

Another artistic jubilee—viz., the fiftieth anniversary of the first appearance in public of Anton Rubinstein, is to be celebrated at St. Petersburg in November next. A committee, consisting of members of the Russian aristocracy and the most prominent artists, has been formed for the purpose of rendering due homage to the great pianist-composer on this occasion. The principal ceremony in connection with the celebration is to take place on November 18, the fifty-ninth anniversary of the Russian master's birth.

M. Lapissida, the former director of the Théâtre de la Monnaie, of Brussels, will, it is announced, open a rival operatic institution in the Belgian capital during the coming winter.

A new Symphony, entitled "Prometheus," by Otto Dorn, was recently performed at Hamburg, and was much admired.

The valuable library of the late Cavaliere Carlo Morbio, of Milan, was announced to be placed under the hammer by Messrs. List and Francke, of Leipzig, on the 24th ult. It includes, in its musical department, a number of highly interesting early manuscripts, including a volume in quarto, "Consecratio virginis Sanctimonialis," dated 1411, formerly belonging to the Cosma and Damianus monastery of Brescia.

Rumour is again busy concerning the new opera "Romeo and Juliet," upon which Verdi is said to be just now engaged, and the first act of which is reported to have been recently completed by the veteran Maestro.

The municipal government of Genoa has, according to the Vienna Neue Freie Presse, applied to Verdi for the composition of an opera to be performed in connection with the forthcoming Christopher Columbus celebration in that town. The composer has, however, declined on account of his advanced age, but has designated the Maestro Alberto Franchetti as the most worthy amongst the younger composers of Italy to undertake the task. Signor Franchetti has, it is added, accepted the flattering offer made to him by the Genoese authorities.

The directors of the La Scala Theatre, of Milan, have decided to open their coming season with the first performance there of Wagner's "Die Meistersinger." Signor Corti, the impresario, and Signor Faccio, the Conductor of that famous institution, will visit Bayreuth during the forthcoming Festspiele in order to study Wagner's masterpiece at its traditional home.

According to Lisbon papers, the vacant directorship of the San Carlo Theatre of that capital is to be entrusted to Signor Cuzzani, who is in his eightieth year.

Signor Rocco Pagliara, the librarian of the Naples Conservatorio, has just published a noteworthy volume of essays on musical subjects, including "Rossiniana," "Tannhäuser at Rome," "Die Meistersinger," "Giuseppe Martucci," and others.

Our excellent and often-quoted Belgian contemporary, Le Guide Musical, has transferred its headquarters to Paris, thus becoming virtually a French musical journal, while Mr. Kufferath, hitherto the editor-in-chief, still remains responsible for all matters connected with the art in Belgium.

At the house in Oberdöbling, near Vienna, where Beethoven at one time resided, and where, in 1803, he composed his famous "Eroica" Symphony, a memorial tablet, notifying the fact, is to be shortly fixed.

At Waltersdorf, near Zittau (Saxony), his native place, a monument was unveiled last month of Friedrich Schneider, the once famous composer of the Oratorio "Das Weltgericht," and a highly esteemed teacher. Schneider died at Dessau in 1853.

A monument erected over the grave of Franz Abt, the popular composer of Lieder, has just been unveiled at Wiesbaden, the cost having been defrayed by a number of German vocal societies.

Dr. Hans Bischoff, eminent alike as a pianist and teacher of his instrument, in which latter capacity he was for some years connected with the Kullak'sche Academy of Berlin, died in that capital on the 12th ult., at the early age of thirty-seven. The deceased artist was a man of no ordinary culture, and well qualified for the editorial work he occasionally undertook, consisting chiefly of critically revised editions of Kullak's "Ästhetik des Klavierspiels," and of some of the pianoforte works of Bach and Handel.

Eduard Stolz, the popular Viennese conductor, and composer of vaudevilles, died on the 8th ult., at Prague, at an advanced age.

Hyppolyte Duprat, a French composer of operas, notably of "Petrarca" and "Marie Tudor," died recently at Paris, aged sixty-eight.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—Perhaps the following particulars will interest your correspondent who is seeking information on the subject of ladies' surpliced church choirs. The Rev. Dr. Bromley is credited with having originated the novelty some two years ago at the Pro-Cathedral, Melbourne, where he officiated. At the time of the innovation, the Church of England Messenger of Melbourne, it would seem, published an adverse criticism on the "attraction," whereupon Dr. Bromley preached on the subject, and thus replied to his critic:—"It cannot be denied that, considering the extraordinary caprices of fashion in the matter of female attire, it would offend the taste to see the simple uniformity of surpliced men and boys disturbed by the intrusion of the grotesque and daily changing inventions of the Paris milliner. What better solution, then, of the difficulty could there be than to clothe the female members of the choir in an ecclesiastical vestment of such a suitable type as should harmonise well with the surroundings of their position, and at the same time not destroy that distinctive gracefulness of attire to which their sex entitles them?" The "ecclesiastical vestments" worn by the three young ladies of the choir consisted of surplices bordered with black, and caps of college style. I cannot say whether this church continues to have lady choristers, but in the beginning, at any rate, Dr. Bromley's zeal was not allowed to flourish unthwarted. There was quite a powerful party who objected to the choir consisting of ladies and millinery, and who held that the old traditional Cathedral usage should be adhered to. Some of the members of this opposition, when on a visit to Adelaide, happened to attend a service at the Anglican Cathedral there, and were so delighted with the singing that they declared themselves ready to guarantee the expenses of the whole choir if they would go over to Melbourne and give an octave of services in the new Cathedral.

Not long after the Melbourne incident "those who love church order and decency" were terribly shocked to find the same sensation introduced into England at a Harvest festival somewhere in Yorkshire. In this case the surplices of the ladies were not unlike M.A. gowns in shape, and consisted of Scotch lawn with pleated backs, purple velvet caps, similar to those worn by D.C.L.'s, completing the attire. A correspondent, anxious for Canon Liddon's opinion on the startling novelty, received the following reply: "It is difficult to say whether the spectacle of ladies dressed in surplices, and so on, in church, is more irreverent than it is certainly grotesque. It is greatly to be hoped that the good sense and Christian feeling of the Australian churches will steadily discourage anything of the kind, and especially for the sake of the ladies concerned."

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—In reply to the question of your correspondent in Hartlepool, page 275, issue of May, 1889, right column, last but one.

I read in the Church Times of about a year ago that the Cathedral in Melbourne, Colony of Victoria, Australia, had a ladies' choir (or a part of the choir), that the ladies wore an ordinary surplice over a dark dress and had a small cap or brette on the head.

My niece and daughter corroborate me in this statement. Perhaps the Editor of the Church Times could give your correspondent more information on the subject.

I am, Sir, yours truly,

HENRY FAITHFULL.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—In reference to the enquiries which have been made in your paper as to lady choristers, some of your correspondents may find it useful to know that Messrs. Nathan, Hardman Street, Liverpool, make the surplices and caps which are used by lady choristers, and no doubt they can supply all information respecting same.

It may also be of interest to know that the originator of the costume was the Rev. Dr. Bromley, of Melbourne, who very justly contrasts the graceful ecclesiastical vestment, harmonising with its surroundings, with the daily changing caprices of fashion in feminine attire.—Yours faithfully,

K. C.

18, Selborne Street, Liverpool, June 22, 1889.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—Referring to a query of one of your correspondents respecting ladies wearing surplices in choirs, I would mention that there is a fine surpliced choir in the Melbourne Cathedral. There are twelve ladies, fourteen boys, and sixteen men. The ladies wear surplices with black stoles, black velvet collars, and round black mortar-boards with silk tassels, and the whole costume is very becoming and suitable. I went to the service prepared to regard this new departure in the light of an innovation, but experienced quite different feelings. I thought there could be nothing against so simple and appropriate a costume except the stoles, and these I believe no one has a right to wear except those in holy orders.—Yours very truly,

G. MCARTHUR SCALES.

Belvoir House, Hornsey Lane, N., June 19, 1889.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—In reply to a question in the May number of your Magazine with regard to a ladies' choir. While visiting in Yorkshire last year, at the new Church of Skelton, near Saltburn-by-the-Sea, there were four ladies, forming an addition to a very good male choir.

The surplices appeared in front just as a gentleman's (long), but at the back pleated in to fit the figure; they also had violet velvet Tam o' Shanter caps (I presume to match the hangings in the church), and wore no gloves.

Any further information you could no doubt get by writing to the Vicar of the parish.

I have forgotten the name of the church, but as there is only one other very small and old one, there would be no difficulty in finding it. Hoping this may prove useful to you.—Believe me, yours truly,

ANNIE MIXER.

P.S.—The word "free" refers to the date when the individual was made a freeman of the city, before which time he was unable to ply his trade.

THE GUILD OF ORGANISTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—The paragraph in your last issue referring to the Guild of Organists is calculated to mislead those unacquainted with the facts of the unpleasantness between the Council and myself. I shall feel obliged, therefore, if you will kindly allow me to explain briefly my position with the Guild.

In the first place, I was not dismissed from my office of Secretary, for the simple reason that the Council have no power to dismiss an officer. As I was elected at a General Meeting of the members, they alone, at a like meeting, have power to reject me.

With regard to the circular, though cautiously worded, it contains several misrepresentations. I deny that I was the sole means of communication between the members and the Council. The Treasurer had as great facility for corresponding with the members as I had, since he received subscriptions sent by them for membership. Moreover, the Treasurer had full and undivided control over the Guild's banking account, and he alone signed all cheques.

It is quite natural that the Council should object to have their actions exposed, but, at the same time, they should be careful to tell the whole truth, and not to screen themselves by imputing to me errors I have not committed.

I remain, Sir, yours truly,

June 22, 1889.

J. H. LEWIS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

. Notices of concerts, and other information supplied by our friends in the country, must be forwarded as early as possible after the occurrence; otherwise they cannot be inserted. Our correspondents must specifically denote the date of each concert, for without such date no notice can be taken of the performance.

Our correspondents will oblige by writing all names as clearly as possible, as we cannot be responsible for any mistakes that may occur.

Correspondents are informed that their names and addresses must accompany all communications.

We cannot undertake to return offered contributions; the authors, therefore, will do well to retain copies.

Notice is sent to all subscribers whose payment (in advance) is exhausted. The paper will be discontinued where the Subscription is not renewed. We again remind those who are disappointed in obtaining back numbers that, although the music is always kept in stock, only a sufficient quantity of the rest of the paper is printed to supply the current sale.

AN ADVERTISER.—The Guildhall School of Music may be confidently recommended, and the London Organ School does good work. The Royal Academy is the chief teaching institution.

AUSTRALIA.—You had better at the outset try and work up a connection in the two capacities. There should be no difficulty for a man of skill to make headway in either place. The Transvaal is also spoken of as a likely place to encourage enterprise.

EMBRYO.—1. Apply to the Manager of a Company. 2. About two pounds a week. 3. Study with a competent master.

J. C. H.—Much obliged for your correction.

R. J. CAIN.—There are scholarships at the Royal Academy of Music and at the Royal College of Music, which are to be gained by competition. You might make application to the Secretaries of each of those institutions for particulars.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

ABINGDON.—A performance of orchestral music was given in the Corn Exchange, on the 4th ult. Mr. Oldfield S. Marshall was Conductor. The programme, selected entirely from works by English musicians, was excellently rendered by the band, under the leadership of Mr. Hayes (Oxford):—Macfarren's Overture to Robin Hood; Sterndale Bennett's Overture to Parisina and "Caprice" for pianoforte and orchestra; W. Macfarren's Concertstück for pianoforte and orchestra; and four numbers of an Orchestral Suite by the Conductor (who also played both pianoforte works). Songs by Bishop, Stainer, and Cowen were sung by Miss Bessie Latham and accompanied by Mrs. Slade Baker. The violoncello obligato to Stainer's "Slumber Song" was played by the Rev. H. Deane.

AUCKLAND, N.Z.—The Auckland Choral Society in the report of its proceedings gives an interesting list of works performed during the past year, under the conductorship of Herr Carl Schmitt. Handel's Messiah, Mendelssohn's Elijah and Christus, Spohr's Calvary, Schubert's Mass in E flat, Barnby's Rebekah, and Sullivan's Martyr of Antioch, altogether a very creditable record. The Society has a chorus of over 200 and a band of forty-two performers. The solos have been taken chiefly by members of the Society. The financial position shows a large balance of funds in hand. The scheme for the season now in progress includes such works as The Messiah (two performances, one of which is open free to the public), Jephtha, Gade's Erl-King's Daughter, Stanford's Revenge, Cowen's Rose Maiden and Rossini's Moses in Egypt.

CAUNTON.—The last Concert of the season was given in the school-room, in aid of the school funds, on Thursday, the 6th ult. The programme was miscellaneous, and was well performed by Miss A. Gilbert, Miss Mellers, Miss Taylor, Miss Vickers, Mrs. Holden, Mr. Nelson Stokes, Mr. Sheppard, Mr. Ellis, Mr. Waglish, and Mr. Clarke. One of the chief features of the evening was the performance of the part-music, of which Hatton's glee "Beware," by Messrs. Stokes, Sheppard, Waglish, and Ellis, met with an enthusiastic encore. The Concert, which was one of the best ever held at Caunton, was under the able direction of Mr. S. Reay.

CLACTON-ON-SEA.—The members of the Choral Society gave some selections from Mendelssohn's Elijah at the Assembly Rooms, Royal Hotel, on Whit-Monday evening, under the direction of Mr. F. W. Lewellen. Good service was rendered by a compact little orchestra, which, with the chorus, was kept well in hand by the Conductor. Miss Dawson was ably assisted by Mr. Richard Stokoe at the harmonium, and Mr. Parsonson, of New College, was at the pianoforte. The soloists were Miss Kent, Miss Rose Moss, Mr. White, and Mr. Hazelgrove. The performance, the first ever given of the Oratorio in Clacton, was an undoubted success.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—The Second Annual Choral Evensong by the United Supplised Choirs, was given in Trinity Church, on Ascension Day, May 30, when nearly 100 voices took part. The usual choir was augmented by the choirs of Grace Church, St. Mary's, St. John's, and Trinity Church. The Responses were sung to Tallis, Proper Psalms to chants by Barnby, Woodward, and Russell; the Anthem, "Leave us not," by Stainer, was excellently sung; the Processional Hymn, "Hail the Day," by W. H. Monk, a great favourite with the congregation, being the same as that chosen the previous year. The remaining hymns were "All hail the power of Jesus' name," "Now thank we all our God," and "Onward, Christian Soldiers," the broad effect produced by the harmonies being very impressive. In Bunnett's simple but attractive setting in F of the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis the choirs were thoroughly at their ease. Books of the Service, containing both music and words, were printed for the choirs, a separate Order of the Service words only, being supplied to the congregation. The Choirmasters were Messrs. Fox, Barrett, and Foote, who acted in conjunction with Mr. F. Norman Adams, the general Director of the Music.—A Concert was given on the 17th May, for the Women and Children's Hospital Fund, at the Music Hall. Mr. F. Norman Adams, the pianist of the evening, performed several pieces with conscientious correctness and evenness in execution. Among them was Beethoven's "Sonata Pathétique," which was well rendered. Mrs. Ford sang Meyerbeer's "Shadow Song," and two German Lieder by Ries, with her usual success. Mr. Charles Heydler gave several solos on the violoncello.

DALKEITH, N.B.—An Organ Recital was given on the 12th ult., in the Parish Church, by the Organist, Mr. James Bryce, who was assisted by Mr. Chas. Bradley, the Organist of South Leith Parish Church, and the Edinburgh Choral Union. Mr. Bryce played Handel's Sixth Organ Concerto in B flat, an Andante of Smart's, and a movement from Sterndale Bennett's "Cambridge Installation Ode"; and Mr. Bradley's solos were Mendelssohn's Second Sonata, Prelude and Fugue in D (Bach), and Smart's Postlude in D.

FROME.—The organ at Wesley Chapel, after several repairs and improvements, was re-opened, on the 6th ult., by Dr. J. Frederick Bridge, Organist of Westminster Abbey, who performed several pieces by various composers, including the March from his own Calirhoë.

LYTTLETON, N.Z.—The Musical Society gave a Concert on May 16 at the Rink. The two works selected for production were Gade's Crusaders and Rossini's Stabat Mater. Mr. Wallace was Conductor. The principals were Mrs. Townend, Miss Spensley, Mr. Püschell, and Mr. Ziesler. The Crusaders has been performed by the Society before. On that occasion there was perhaps more volume of sound in the chorus, which was in other respects excellent. At the present the chorus was thinner a little, but on the whole more artistic. In other words, the Society has improved. The ladies were particularly successful with the Song of the Sirens, and the male voices with the Pilgrims' Chorus. The successful production on the same evening of two high-class works of such different styles is an achievement as creditable to Conductor and the members of the Musical Society as it was pleasing to the large audience which was present.

NORWICH.—An Organ Recital was given at St. Stephen's Church on Tuesday evening, the 4th ult., by Mr. W. Lane. The programme consisted of pieces by Handel, Massenet, Beethoven, Corelli, Lefebure-Wely, Papi, Wesley, and Mendelssohn. The vocalists were Miss Barwell and Mr. F. A. Daines. Some violin solos were contributed by Mr. F. W. B. Noverre. On Tuesday evening, May 28, a special Musical Service was held in St. Clement's Church, on the occasion of the opening of the new organ, built by Messrs. Norman Brothers and Beard, of Norwich. Dr. Bunnett presided at the organ, and with the assistance of Mr. Brockbank, of Norwich Cathedral, and other local vocalists, performed an excellent programme to a crowded congregation.

SALISBURY.—On the 6th ult. a grand Choral Festival was held at the Cathedral, under the auspices of the Salisbury Diocesan Choral Association. The vocalists numbered nearly 3,000, there being 1,681 surplused and 1,060 unsurplused, also fifty persons in charge of choirs, and an orchestra consisting of some eighty or ninety performers, including members of the Crystal Palace orchestra and other London bands. Mr. Alfred Eyre, Organist of the Crystal Palace, was the Conductor, the organ being played by Mr. South. The processional hymn "See the Conqueror mounts in triumph" (music by Smart) was well given. At its close the orchestra played Mendelssohn's "March of the Priests," from Alhailie. The Service used was by Lloyd, and the Anthem (preceded by Handel's Overture to Saul, with its important organ obbligato, rendered admirably by Mr. South) was one written expressly for this Festival by the late Sir Frederick Ouseley.

STOURPORT.—Special services were held in All Saints' Church, Wilden, on Thursday and Friday, the 20th and 21st ult., when the sacred Cantata "Samuel," by Dr. Langdon Colborne, was sung by the choir, assisted by Mrs. F. J. Griffiths, who sang Hannah's music. The other soloists were Master Jones, Messrs. Lay, Blundell, Dorsett, and Jackson. Mr. F. J. Griffiths (Organist and Choirmaster) presided at the organ.

SUTTON-IN-ASHFIELD.—The Sutton and Mansfield United Harmonic Societies, at the opening of the New Town Hall, on Tuesday, the 25th ult., gave a performance of Mendelssohn's Elijah. The soloists were Miss Vinnie Beaumont, Miss Marie Hooton, Mr. S. Gilbert, and Mr. Bingley Shaw. There was a band and chorus of 200 performers. The leader was Mr. J. E. Pickerill, of Nottingham; the Organist was Mr. Charles H. Briggs; and the Conductor was Mr. Arthur Howard Bonser.

UCKFIELD.—An Organ Recital was given in the Parish Church on the 19th ult., by Mr. H. R. Revely, Organist and Choirmaster. The programme included Overture to the Occasional Oratorio, Mendelssohn's Second Organ Sonata, and selections from the works of Henry Smart, George Calkin, Sir Frederick Ouseley, and J. Baptiste Calkin. Mr. C. E. Pillow, of Chichester, was the vocalist.

WESTON-SUPER-MARE.—Mr. C. A. Windeatt's annual Concert took place at the Victoria Hall on the 3rd ult., when an excellent programme was presented. The vocalists were Miss Annie Williams and Mr. Musgrove Tufnell, Mr. Walter T. Barker was harpist, Messrs. C. B. and F. Windeatt violinists, and Mr. A. Comfort, pianist. An orchestra of sixty performers, conducted by Mr. C. A. Windeatt, gave several pieces with effect.

RUTH

EDWARD OXENFORD

MUSIC BY

ALFRED R. GAUL

THANKSGIVING SERVICES.

"The Biblical story of which Ruth is the central figure lends itself with remarkable suitability to an illustration of a harvest celebration.
The country landscape, the ripened corn, the sturdy reapers, the standing sheaves, the active gleaners, and the busy farmer, all combine to fill the mind's eye with a pleasant scene of excitement. Set to music by a competent composer such as Mr. A. R. Gaul, the narrative of Ruth's eventful episode lends itself to a pathetic, picturesque, and pleasant performance. The bereaved and sorrowful trio of women on whom the calamity of poverty and famine has fallen, as if to give intensity to their greater grief, and the unexpected and happy influence of patriarchal benevolence displayed by the mighty Boaz, who so quickly transforms sorrow into joy, are all introduced and aptly take their allotted place in the melodious music of Gaul's interpretation of the tale."—Gloucester Citizen.

"The work, like the 'Holy City,' is full of beautiful orchestral passages, while the vocal score abounds with charming numbers."— Bucks Herald.

"Ruth" is a work of sterling power; its musical form is that of perfect tunefulness combined with simplicity and strength. . . . The composer has grasped his theme in a thoroughly sympathetic manner, and has produced a work which is worthy of the subject."—Bradford Observer.

"Bright, tuneful, fresh, and musicianly—this work will be a great favourite, and will add to Mr. Gaul's reputation."—Birmingham Weekly Dart.

"Ruth" has been set to music by several composers; none, however, has become so worthily popular as the Cantata under notice. . . .
It contains some charming music, and is highly characteristic of the story it so vividly illustrates."—South Wilts Express.

"Full of flowing melody."—Salisbury Times.

Conductors of Choral Societies should see this highly interesting and beautiful work.

"It is not often that we have derived so much genuine pleasure from the perusal of a new work as was the case with that at present before us."—Newcastle Journal.

"It is not often that an audience is roused to the pitch of enthusiasm that greeted the production of Mr. Hamish MacCunn's 'Bonnie Kilmeny,' given last night with the full orchestral setting which was requisite for the full development of its full beauty. If Mr. MacCunn had written nothing else this work would stamp its author as a master whose name will be classed with those musicians whose creations have formed epochs in the past."—Edinburgh Evening News, January 22.

NOVELLO'S SHORT ANTHEMS.

A SERIES OF SHORT AND EASY ANTHEMS

ADAPTED TO THE

Seasons of the Church, and Suitable for Introits

EDITED BY

THE REV. W. RUSSELL, M.A., MUS. BAC.,

Succentor of St. Paul's Cathedral,

AND

SIR JOHN STAINER, M.A., MUS. DOC.

THIS Series is an attempt to meet the want of short and easy Anthems adapted to the Church's Seasons and suitable especially for Introits.

It would have been more satisfactory, from an ecclesiastical point of view, if the words selected could have been restricted to those of the Introits in use in the English Church in ancient times. But this was found to be impossible. For, while in many instances they did not lend themselves to the form of music required, in others—being derived, as they mainly are, from the Psalms—they had been already set to music once, or twice, or even oftener, by earlier writers. And, quite apart from the question of the suitability of that music for the present purpose, composers, as a rule, much prefer to proceed by untrodden paths.

Hence an endeavour has been made to select passages from Holy Scripture, which had not been previously employed for such a purpose, and which would still satisfy the end in view. And in doing this, it has been attempted—after the example of the Introits and Antiphons of old—to try and enter into the spirit of each season, and to breathe out its sentiments by inference frequently rather than by direct allusion.

Possibly, in trying to carry out this idea, the words selected have in some instances necessitated a musical setting longer than was at first intended; but it would neither have been possible nor desirable that the whole of the compositions thus put together should have been framed upon one uniform pattern. Several of them too—as will be perceived—have been already published in other forms.

But it is hoped that the series will, as a whole, so help to meet the want felt that its further extension may be rendered necessary. With this idea in view, it has been thought undesirable that the Anthems should at present be arranged strictly according to the Church's seasons, although, as the series is increased, this and other improvements may be effected.

The following Numbers, Price 1½d. each, are now ready :—

With Pianoforte Accompaniment

COMPOSED BY

A. C. MACKENZIE.

(Op. 37.)

Full Score, 5s.; Orchestral Parts, 3s. 6d.;

Also, as originally written for Violin Solo with Pianoforte
Accompaniment, 2s.

THE DAILY TELEGRAPH.

As an exceptional case, this movement absolutely gains by the change to which it has been subjected, the impassioned religious melody acquiring force by being played in chorus, and added beauty by a rich accompaniment of strings, horns, and wood-wind. The audience at once pronounced the piece a success, and the composer bowed his thanks for sustained applause from his place in the gallery.

STANDARD.

Dr. Mackenzie's "Benedictus" was originally written for violin, with pianoforte accompaniment. Since then the author has appreciated the capabilities of the music in an orchestral sense, and after several attempts—this composer, like Mendelssohn, never being satisfied at the offset—has written his score for a small orchestra. . . . So charming did this piece prove that the applause was unanimous, and was maintained until the composer had appeared at the end gallery and bowed his acknowledgment.

DAILY NEWS.

The remaining novelty was a brief but charming "Benedictus," originally written by Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, as one of a set of violin pieces which Lady Hallé last summer introduced to London. The pianoforte accompaniment has, however, now been scored for wind orchestra by the composer, and the solo is given to all the violins of the orchestra.

MORNING POST.

There are beautiful harmonies accompanying the phases of melody, and the whole piece, which is replete with dignity and distinguished by originality, forms a most grateful addition to orchestral répertoires.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

The clever musician has since scored it for a small orchestra, assigning the violin solo to the whole of the violins, and providing work for the other strings, flutes, clarinets, bassoons, and horns, in which form it is likely to obtain as much popularity on the platform as the first setting in the salon. It is a beautiful, quietly flowing melody, with such an elegant accompaniment as only a composer of genuine taste and sympathetic nature, having a perfect knowledge of the means of the instruments he introduces, could place upon paper.

THE OBSERVER.

The two leading themes are in themselves beautiful, and their scenic beauty is enhanced by exquisite orchestration, in which the wind instruments above-named, in conjunction with the violas, violoncellos, and double-basses, are happily employed. . . . This "Benedictus" is likely to become popular throughout the musical world.

THE GLOBE.

Dr. A. C. Mackenzie's new "Benedictus" for violins and orchestra (first public performance) is short and comparatively simple, but will add to his fame. . . . The "Benedictus" is a polished gem.

SUNDAY TIMES.

Dr. A. C. Mackenzie's new "Benedictus for Orchestra," a transcription of one of his "Six Pieces for Violin and Piano," Op. 37, is a gem of melody encased in a beautiful instrumental setting.

THE DREAM OF JUBAL

A POEM WITH MUSIC

FOR SOLI, CHORUS, ORCHESTRA, AND ACCOMPANIED RECITATION

JOSEPH BENNETT

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

A. C. MACKENZIE.

VOCAL SCORE, PAPER COVER, 2s. 6d.; PAPER BOARDS, 3s.; CLOTH GILT, 4s.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

A hearing of Dr. Mackenzie's music confirms the impression conveyed by reading it, and establishes the fact that the composer has taken another step towards the perfect illustration of simplicity of form and directness of expression—qualities not less essential in the art of music than in any other. . . . There was no mere pretence of listening; from first to last the piece held the attention of its auditors, and compelled their hearty applause, which culminated at the close in an emphatic and apparently unanimous chorus of approval.

STANDARD.

It is only just to bestow very high commendation on Mr. Bennett, whose libretto is, in poetical fancy and skilful arrangement, quite equal to that of the "Rose of Sharon." . . . It may be said without hesitation, that if it does not enhance Dr. Mackenzie's fame, it deserves a place by the side of his best efforts. . . . The audience was evidently interested in the "Dream of Jubal," for the applause was enthusiastic at every opportunity.

DAILY NEWS.

The text may be accepted as a genuine invention of the librettist. . . . It is in his accompaniments to the dialogue that Dr. Mackenzie is at his greatest. Here all the resources of the orchestra are brought into play, and free use is made of "leading motives," including (in association with the idea of the Divine Power) an extremely happy quotation of the phrase given in the "Hallelujah Chorus" of "The Messiah," to the words "And He shall reign for ever and ever."

MORNING POST.

Few composers living could have written more beautiful music than that with which Dr. Mackenzie accompanies the spoken words. . . . The contrast to the simple gaiety of the scene in the fields is presented in the magnificent Funeral March and Chorus, which stands as the finest number in the work—deep in expression and strikingly original in treatment. . . . There can be no doubt that "The Dream of Jubal" is not only his best work, but it is also the best work of the kind produced by any modern composer.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

Dr. Mackenzie, it must at once be said, has thoroughly caught the spirit of Mr. Joseph Bennett's lines. The impression created upon the attentive listener is, indeed, that of a single mind having imagined and executed both words and music. Of course, this is exactly as it should be. . . . The choral writing is worthy of the composer who penned the magnificent series forming the "Procession of the Ark," in the "Rose of Sharon," whilst the instrumentation is throughout picturesque and vivid, as well as highly interesting to those who wish to go below the surface and critically analyse Dr. Mackenzie's method of workmanship.

ATHENÆUM.

It may be said at once that "The Dream of Jubal" is not a mere pièce d'occasion, which, when once heard, is quickly forgotten and can never be revived. Though composed for a special celebration there is no reason why the work should not survive on its literary and musical merits. We speak advisedly of both, because the libretto, by Mr. Joseph Bennett, is very far above the average in felicity of idea and beauty of expression.

THE WORLD.

The work is not only clever but really poetical, and so far surpasses all the previous efforts of the same author with which I am acquainted. The music altogether is distinguished, musicianlike, impressive; especially so is the first quartet with chorus, "Gloria in Excelsis," and the last, the "Invocation," with two harps.

VANITY FAIR.

For once the poet has been allowed to take his place side by side with the musician, and not, as usual, occupy a merely subordinate position. . . . Mr. Joseph Bennett has produced a work which in every way does him infinite credit—a work full of graceful imagery, tender thoughts, and poetic language. Throughout the orchestration was most charming.

SUNDAY TIMES.

There is in the poem an elegance of diction, a dignity of style, and a force of expression betraying an ardent admirer and capable imitator of Milton. From first to last the reader's lines are in the highest sense poetic. As to the accompanying music, enough that it has all the appropriateness, refinement, and melodic charm Dr. Mackenzie knew how to concentrate upon it. All Dr. Mackenzie's strength and individuality and wealth of resource come to the surface in the three magnificent concerted pieces now alluded to. . . . they attain, indeed, to as lofty an eminence as any English composer has yet reached. . . . In summing up "The Dream of Jubal" we have had no difficulty whatever as regards the estimation of its manifold beauties, poetic and musical.

LIVERPOOL COURIER.

"The Dream of Jubal" is simply a beautiful symphonic poem, accompanied by voices in the best possible manner, and the keenest insight to a judicious use of poetic recitation, combined with solo voices and grand choral features seldom grasped, and almost as rarely attempted by any other composer. During the performance the audience was spell-bound.

LIVERPOOL MERCURY.

There can be no manner of doubt that Dr. Mackenzie has for ever closed the mouths of such people as object to works written to order, and produced one fit to stand shoulder to shoulder and side by side with the noblest in the realm of music. From first to last there is not an episode of note unrepented with interest.

LIVERPOOL DAILY POST.

It is an entirely worthy and noble conception, quite original, and of a fibre which arouses interest at the outset, and holds it enthralled until the last chord is heard.

THE TIMES.

The Finale of the first act, in which the two hostile nations are brought into conflict, is masterly and full of impetus. . . . The Finale of the second act is again splendidly developed, but the gem of that act is its third scene, introduced by the orchestral Nocturne.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

The success of "Judith" with the audience was never in doubt, Dr. Parry being recalled and vociferously applauded not only at the close of the performance, but at the end of the first part.

THE STANDARD.

Without any preamble, let me say at once that Dr. Hubert Parry's Oratorio "Judith" was produced this morning under the most favourable conditions and with emphatic success.

MORNING POST.

The musician who could produce such a work as "Judith," so full of power, character and expression, has surely not said his last word.

DAILY NEWS.

That Dr. Parry is a consummate master of all the resources of the orchestra, lovers of music need not be reminded, while particularly in the "Moloch" scenes he has treated the chorus in a manner which not infrequently shows a touch of true genius.

THE ATHENÆUM.

No finer Oratorio music than this has been written for many years.

GUARDIAN.

The success of Dr. Hubert Parry's new Oratorio was of the most unequivocal kind, the audience finding it impossible to obey the printed injunctions concerning applause at the morning performances, and cheering the composer heartily after both parts of a work which will not be long in being recognised as among the highest achievements of English music.

Ce beau génie est moins un musicien qu'une âme qui se rend sensible.—H. DE BALZAC.

WITH A PORTRAIT, ETCHED BY H. R. ROBERTSON, AND FAC-SIMILES OF THE COMPOSER'S MS.

EXTRACTS FROM PREFACE.

My guiding principle has been to place before the reader the facts collected by me as well as the conclusions at which I arrived. This will enable him to see the subject in all its bearings, with all its pros and cons, and to draw his own conclusions should mine not obtain his approval.

Whatever the defects of the present volumes may be—and, no doubt, they are both great and many—I have laboured to the full extent of my humble abilities to group and present my material perspicuously, and to avoid diffuseness and rhapsody, those besetting sins of writers on music.

My researches had for their object the whole life of Chopin and his historical, political, artistical, social, and personal surroundings, but they were chiefly directed to the least known and most interesting period of his career—his life in France, and his visits to Germany and Great Britain. My chief sources of information are divisible into two classes—newspapers, magazines, pamphlets, correspondences, and books; and conversations I held with, and letters I received from Chopin's pupils, friends, and acquaintances.

Prefixed to the first volume of the present biography the reader will find one of the portraits by Kwiatkowski, an etching after a charming pencil drawing in my possession, the reproduction of which the artist has kindly permitted.

"The two volumes are so rich in absolutely new facts concerning Chopin's life, and so valuable in interesting and, for the most part, unprejudiced analytical comments upon the composer's works, that in the future we may reasonably expect the book to be frequently quoted whenever the writings of the 'Ariel of the pianoforte' are in question. To the large majority of readers, however, the true story—told with all the evidence that can be collected from letters and from the reports of onlookers to support the truth—of the romantic love of the pianist-composer for the eminent novelist, Madame George Sand, will be of the supremest interest. Nearly 200 pages are devoted to this episode, which was not only the most momentous incident of Chopin's career, but which also practically broke his heart and led to his early death. . . . The volumes likewise contain a full list of Chopin's works, an index, an etching from one of the portraits by Kwiatkowski (so different from the glorified drawing by Ary Scheffer), and a fac-simile of Chopin's delicate penmanship from one of the 'Etudes,' which, with the preludes, mazourkas, waltzes, polonaises, and the rest, are a great deal more popular in English drawing-rooms now than they were at the date of the composer's death, a few months short of forty years ago."—Daily News.

"Mr. Niecks's work at once takes its place among standard biographies of Great Musicians—the first complete and wholly satisfactory life of Chopin that has been written. Mr. Niecks may be assured that its successful achievement places him in the front rank of musical biographers; while, at the same time, the production of so able and adequate a work adds one more to the laurels earned by the distinguished firm that has already given us in English form Otto Jahn's 'Mozart' and Spitta's 'Bach.'"—Sunday Times.

"It is an admirable, well-contrived, and interesting biography, in which one of the most important items is formed by Chopin's own letters. . . . How the work is brought out is said in two words: it is published by Novello & Co. That is sufficient guarantee."—The World.

CHARLES HALLÉ'S "PRACTICAL PIANOFORTE SCHOOL."

SECTION I.—Elementary.

„ II.—Easy.

SECTION III.—Moderately Difficult.

SECTION V.—Very Difficult.

FORSYTH BROTHERS beg to announce that, in compliance with the request of many eminent teachers, both in England and the Continent, they have issued an edition of this celebrated work with GERMAN or CONTINENTAL FINGERING.

PREFACE.

A few remarks will suffice to explain the object of this Publication and its distinguishing features.

"THE PRACTICAL PIANOFORTE SCHOOL" consists of a series of Pieces selected from the best Composers, and calculated to guide Students, by gradual steps, from the very beginning to the highest degree of execution, and at the same time to form their taste and style.

The work is divided into five sections—namely, ELEMENTARY, EASY, MODERATELY DIFFICULT, DIFFICULT, and VERY DIFFICULT.* Commencing with the rudiments of Musical Notation, the Pieces succeed each other in such progressive order that Students, after having mastered one number, may safely proceed to the next, thus sparing both teacher and pupil the difficult task of selection.

Each Piece is prefaced by a certain number of Exercises written expressly by me for this Publication, and having some bearing upon the difficulties of the composition which they introduce. The daily practice of these Exercises should always precede that of the Piece, until both are completely mastered.

Long experience has convinced me that the usual mode of fingering is insufficient to guard Pupils from the danger of contracting bad habits, as they cannot always be under the eye of the Master, and yet require a constant guide in this more than in any other matter. Every note, therefore, is fingered, except that in the case of reiterated chords the fingering is marked only once, and Octaves are not fingered when they are to be played with the thumb and fourth finger.

All Turns, Shakes, Appoggiaturas, and other ornaments, are clearly explained in foot-notes, whenever their proper execution may be doubtful; and in the more advanced Pieces there will be found, in brackets, supplementary signs of expression, where they may appear to me to facilitate the correct rendering of the Composer's intention. These I give on my own responsibility, and as my interpretation of the masterpieces which I have made my study for many years.

Two Metronome marks are prefixed to every Piece and Exercise;—the first indicating the time beyond which Students ought not to venture before they can play both Piece and Exercise without fault; and the second giving the correct time.

The utmost endeavours have been used to keep the entire Work free from errors, and the greatest care bestowed upon its publication, which the long and intimate relations I have had with Messrs. FORSYTH BROTHERS have led me to entrust to them.

A long experience as a Teacher and Performer, and a thorough acquaintance with the whole range of Pianoforte Music, encourage me in the hope that this "Practical Pianoforte School" may prove what I wish it to be—a safe guide towards a sound Musical Education.

CHARLES HALLÉ.

* The title "Very Difficult" is not meant to convey the idea that this Section provides Pieces of the extreme difficulty suited to exceptional cases only (this being beyond the scope of a "School"); it is by taxing in a high degree the general Students' intellectual faculties, as well as their mechanical powers, that the works included will be found "very difficult" to play well.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.

AUGUST 1, 1889.

THE LONDON MUSICAL SEASON.

In presenting a summary of the musical events of the past year in London, the historian might be somewhat exercised in his mind as to whether the matters of which he is called upon to treat are to be regarded from an artistic or from a chronological point of view. Either form of narrative would, doubtless, commend itself to special classes of the readers of a paper devoted to the interests of music; the omission of one or other would be regarded with surprise by the advocates of both, each in turn; therefore it may be considered politic to keep to that track which commands a general view. The musical season in London at one time only comprised a period of musical activity of little more than one half of the year. It commenced midway in November, and continued as far as Christmas. After an interval of some four, five, or six weeks, it was resumed with more or less activity, and increased to its greatest intensity in the month of June, and ended with the first weeks in July. The season at that time was no more, and, as the poet says, "The rains of St. Swithin washed an empty town." There is no month now which is completely free from musical attractions in London of one kind or another. The opera season at Covent Garden Theatre extends to the end of July, and no sooner has the house been vacated, than preparations are hastily pushed on in order that the patrons of the Promenade Concerts may be admitted to their annual indulgence. These Concerts serve as the chief musical attractions in London during the time when certain of the provinces are occupied with the business of their several festivals—Birmingham, Leeds, Bristol, that of the Three Choirs, besides the Eisteddfodau in various Welsh towns. The enormous numbers of people who patronised the Promenade Concerts last year may be taken as significant of the growing interest of music. It is true that some of the features of the programmes were not altogether desirable from an educational point of view, but there was never a performance throughout the season in which the names of one or more of the great composers did not appear. On special evenings there were "classical nights," when many of the best orchestral works were given by a band, with Mr. Carrodus as leader, whose various sections were served by some of the best instrumentalists. The attendance on these "classical nights" was often as large as upon any of the more popular nights, and the behaviour of the audience was always respectful and attentive. If the achievements at the Crystal Palace are admitted to a place in the record of the music of the year in London, then most honourable mention must be made of the summer Concerts at Sydenham, many of which were given during the time when music was only represented at the "Promenades" at Covent Garden Theatre. The Symphonies of Haydn, Mozart, Schumann, and Schubert, besides the eight Symphonies of Beethoven in succession, and the orchestral portions of the ninth, were performed at these "off" meetings. The season of Saturday Concerts commenced on October 13 last, and before Christmas, in addition to a number of favourite pieces, both vocal and instrumental, new works were given by Chabrier, Hamish MacCunn, Goldmark, Grieg, Mackenzie, Gadsby, Moszkowski, Wieniawski, Hubert Parry, Prout, and others, which were all favourably received. When the Concerts were resumed in February, several novelties were produced: Stanford's "Berlin Symphony," Hamish MacCunn's "Lay of the Last Minstrel," Lalo's Overture "Le Roi d'Ys," Grieg's Suite "Peer Gynt," Berlioz's "Faust," and a number of interesting compositions by native and foreign composers, all of which were duly commented upon in these columns as they were performed. The desire to offer encouragement to rising talent induced the directors to produce the Symphony by Mr. Cliffe, which was most successful, as well as to give a hearing to the Pianoforte Concerto of Mr. Ames, by way of incentive to him to do better in the future; for his music displayed clever ideas, but somewhat immature workmanship. The series of Concerts ended, as usual, with Mr. Manns's benefit, which took place on April 23. The performance of "Elijah" by a chorus of 2,900 and a band of 317, under the direction of Mr. Manns, was one of the greatest musical triumphs ever won within the walls of the Crystal Palace.

Forty years ago such an achievement would have been looked upon as impossible had it been proposed. But the lessons which the Handel Festivals have taught have been taken to heart. The multiplication of facilities for the study of the master works of the great composers, in the production of copies at a price within the reach of the poorest, has also had a great effect in fostering that true love for music which is one of the characteristic qualities of the Saxon and Celtic races of which this kingdom of Great Britain is composed. At one time, as is well known, it was necessary to gather the lovers of music from all parts in order to give a chorus of sufficient magnitude for these monster performances. On the occasion when "Elijah" was given the members of the chorus and the additional band were nearly all drawn from the various choral societies and choirs in London and the suburbs. This is an encouraging proof that the spread of musical knowledge, though extensive, is not by any means superficial.

Novello's Oratorio Concerts, which commenced on December 6 with Dr. Parry's "Judith" (for the first time in London), pursued a most successful artistic career throughout a portion of the season, which extended to the month of April. Following "Judith," other Concerts were given at which "The Messiah," "Elijah," Mackenzie's magnificent Cantata "The Dream of Jubal," "The 19th Psalm" of Saint-Saëns, Dudley Buck's "Light of Asia," and Handel's long neglected Oratorio "Saul," were each and all given with a perfection of detail which commands the highest respect for the labours of the Conductor and for the forces under his control, especially the chorus, the several members of which body worked with a unanimity, earnestness, and enthusiasm which was highly satisfactory to them all and gratifying to the public.

The eighteenth season of the Royal Choral Society was distinguished by the production of the "Requiem" of Mozart, with Rossini's "Stabat Mater," Cowen's "Ruth," Sullivan's "Golden Legend," Handel's "Messiah" (twice), Berlioz's "Faust," Mendelssohn's "Elijah," Barnby's "The Lord is King," Mancinelli's "Isaias," Gounod's "Redemption," and Benoit's "Lucifer," one of the most important works, whatever may be the opinion as to its merits, produced by the Society under the direction of Mr. Barnby.

The labours of the suburban choral societies have been no less worthy, as the record of their Concerts has shown from time to time. When it is found that a Society like the Borough of Hackney Choral Association has produced in the most commendable fashion such works as Handel's "Joshua," Haydn's "Seasons," Mendelssohn's "St. Paul," Brahms's "Requiem," and a selection from Schubert's "Rosamunde" music, under its painstaking Conductor, Mr. E. Prout, all who are interested in the progress of music in London see much that is hopeful and gratifying. The efforts of the South London Choral Association, of the Tufnell Park Choral Society, of the Popular Musical Union, of the Bow and Bromley Institute Choir, of the Finsbury Choral Association, which performed during their season Bennett's "Woman of Samaria," Bridge's "Callirhoë," and other works of like interest; of the Westminster Orchestral Society, whose educational performances, devoted during the past season to the encouragement of works by British artists, are in every way worthy of high praise; of the Highbury Philharmonic Society, and of others of equal ambition to do well though with less means at disposal, may be mentioned in this place. All these have shown considerable activity in the past, and, their exertions having met with considerable success, a further incentive to the prosecution of good and enterprising work is excited.

The old has given way to the new. The parent body, the Sacred Harmonic Society, whose example served as a pattern to the younger associations formed for the study of large choral and orchestral works, after a praiseworthy but useless struggle to exert its former vigour, failed in the attempt, and, like Cæsar, covered its face and died like a noble Roman—not, however, without the gratification of knowing that many younger institutions had taken up the duties it had commenced, and were doing it in an energetic and praiseworthy manner.

The Richter Concerts, whose programmes were chiefly composed of instrumental works; have also included a few choral works, and have called into use the talents of several solo vocalists during their course. The greatest success attained has been in the instrumental performances, wherein the Conductor, Dr. Richter, has displayed a wide, comprehensive, and intelligent mind. The repetition of the record of the Wagnerian extracts, always a feature at these Concerts, need not be presented here; but especial mention may be made of the production at the penultimate Concert of a splendid new Symphony by Dr. Hubert Parry, in which he showed his mastery over instrumental resources and effects, and that melodic power which was most significantly asserted in his fine Oratorio "Judith." In both these works he seems to have found his true artistic measure, and if this be observed by him in whatever else he may produce, the world will be the richer.

The London Symphony Concerts, under the direction of Mr. Henschel, gave many good Concerts during the course of the season, one of the most noteworthy of the series being that at which the Leeds Choir made so successful an appearance. Although the attendance of the public was incommensurate with the expectations of the promoters, and the Concerts were given at a pecuniary loss, it is proposed to continue the experiment for another year in order to give the public one more opportunity of recovering from the shyness with which it regarded the enterprise.

Little or nothing has been done in the way of novelty at the Monday and Saturday Popular Concerts during the past season. The old familiar works played in the old familiar manner by the old familiar, though ever welcome, executants have sufficed to attract large audiences on every occasion.

A like success attended Sir Charles Hallé's series of Concerts, which took up the thread temporarily dropped—as it were—by the Popular Concerts. At these many interesting novelties were brought forward, to the delight of those who confess to the enjoyment of other chamber music besides that written by Beethoven, Mozart, Haydn, and Schubert. Of the artists' Concerts the name has been legion. Messrs.

Max Heinrich and Moor have given several vocal and instrumental Recitals; Mr. W. de Manby Sergison projected a series of winter Concerts at his own residence, which were greatly appreciated by those who supported them—the latter portion of the series was given in another place, in consequence of the complaints of an unmusical neighbour—young Otto Hegner, Miss Geisler-Schubert, a relative of the great composer; Miss Dora Bright, Miss Jeanne Douste, Mr. Bernhard Stavenhagen, Mr. Harvey Löhr, the excellent Concerts of wind instrument music, Mr. Frederick Lamond, Mr. de Pachmann, Miss Agnes Zimmermann, Miss Fanny Davies, the Shinner Quartet, Mr. Tivadar Nachéz, Miss Hermine Spies, Mr. Sims Reeves, and a number of others, including the Musical Guild formed by old students of the Royal College, have given Recitals and Concerts with more or less success.

The Philharmonic Society, the senior of the musical institutions in London, more fortunate than the Sacred Harmonic Society, has been able, by the infusion of fresh elements into its constitution, to gain new strength and support from its guarantors and others who take an interest in its well-being. Since the adoption of the plan of inviting contributions to a guarantee fund, the Society has prospered, and has not made any call this year on account of inability to pay its way. The Committee, therefore, is justified in its belief that the policy now pursued is correct, and is approved of by the public and by its own immediate supporters. The seventy-seventh season of its existence, fulfilled this year, has been distinguished by the return visit of the composer Edvard Grieg, accompanied by his gifted wife. Several of his compositions were performed with great success, and the singing of Madame Grieg was heartily welcomed as an artistic and unique thing.

The first Concert was conducted by Dr. Mackenzie, in consequence of the absence of Mr. Cowen, the Society's appointed Conductor. When he returned fresh from "the nether Continent" in all the flush of his antipodean triumph, he received a most hearty welcome at the hands of the subscribers and patrons of the Society. Under the bâton of this composer a new Suite for Violin, by Dr. Stanford, was performed by Dr. Joachim, and some fresh compositions by Tschaiakowsky, conducted by himself, and given by the band and the help of Mr. Sapellnikoff, a pianist of astonishing technical powers. Miss Teresina Tua and Mr. Ysaye, from Belgium, violinists; Carl Mayer, from Cologne, and Madame Bacher-Grondahl, pianists, with many vocalists, including Miss Hermine Spies, have also appeared at the several Concerts; but perhaps the most interesting features of the series were the productions of a new Symphony by Dr. Hubert Parry, and the repetition of Mr. Cliffe's Symphony, first brought out at the Crystal Palace, as already stated. These were well presented and heartily welcomed. The ground upon which the Society now stands being rendered safe by the support of the guarantee fund—this year amounting to nearly £2,500—the directors might with propriety examine themselves, and ask, among other questions, whether they are doing all in their power for the advancement of art, and whether it is possible to obtain more refined and artistic readings of the works submitted for public approval. They have at their command probably the finest band in the world—are the best possible effects always obtained?

A like question may be propounded by the Royal Society of Musicians. This time it may take the form of a query as to whether it would be expedient for the body to take the initiative in the formation of a General Benevolent Fund, or whether such a scheme —every day becoming more and more imperative—should be left for others to organise.

The Bach Choir, conducted by Dr. Villiers Stanford, produced some interesting vocal Cantatas by the great Leipzig Cantor, and further distinguished itself by a performance of Dr. Parry's "Judith," which was highly appreciated. Remarks were of course made to the effect that the Society was overstepping its boundaries in producing a work by a living writer not even in a remote way associated with the nominal object of the Society. These remarks, though pertinent, did not obliterate the fact that the Choir gave an excellent reading of Dr. Parry's music, and despite certain undesirable qualities of tone in the voices and in the band, it was admitted that the utmost interest appeared to have been taken by the Conductor to obtain an intelligent as well as an enthusiastic reading of a thoroughly admirable contribution to musical art.

The Concerts by the students of the Royal Academy of Music tend to show, in the improved programmes offered, the advantage of the beneficial rule of the present gifted Principal, Dr. Mackenzie. One feature, the introduction of works by the great English Cathedral and other writers at each Concert, is in every way welcome, as it shows that attention has been given to a branch of art which, earnestly studied, cannot but bear most profitable fruit. At the Royal College Concerts throughout the season, the progress made by the pupils has been pleasantly demonstrated. The operatic class selected for performance "The Taming of the Shrew," by Goetz, and the representation of that excellent opera at the Prince of Wales's Theatre, on the 10th ult., was much applauded. The pupils of the Guildhall School of Music appear to have made satisfactory progress. The introduction of a series of lectures on special subjects connected with music has been attended with most satisfactory results.

Not the least satisfactory "sign of the times" is found in the growing prominence of Amateur Orchestral Societies. Some of the performances of the Stock Exchange Orchestral Society, the Strolling Players, and the Royal Amateur Orchestral Society have been as excellent in their degree as many a professional orchestra could exhibit a few years back.

The re-appearance of the great Spanish violinist, Mr. Sarasate, in London has been heartily welcomed by the lovers of highly artistic playing. He gave six Concerts, four of which were orchestral. At the last of these he played Dr. Mackenzie's fine Concerto with splendid technique and a full mental grasp of its meaning. He has become perfectly familiar with its every detail, having played it many times on the Continent and in the provinces. It has become one of the most favoured pieces in his répertoire, and the news which has been circulated, to the effect that the composer has written another solo for him, which is to be given at the approaching Festival at Leeds, is everywhere regarded as good.

Among the various foreign musical bodies who have visited London during the season may be mentioned the American Boston Lotus Club, a quartet of vocalists whose performance of part-songs at various Society Concerts has afforded much pleasure to those who enjoy well-prepared vocalisation.

The visit of the Bristol Orpheus Society to London was especially memorable. The attendance was not large, but those who were present enjoyed a great treat. The eighty voices trained and conducted by Mr. George Riseley, the Organist of the Cathedral, gave a most refined and artistic reading of the glees and part-songs which formed their programme. They have been invited to pay a return visit next season, when the Prince of Wales has promised to honour the Concert with his presence. Their performances will do much towards awakening and setting into activity the love for a school of writing which English musicians have ever been paramount in maintaining. Perhaps the force of their example may lead to the formation of London Societies devoted to the study and encouragement of part-music. The long interval which has elapsed since the cessation of Henry Leslie's choir would give an air of novelty to such performances. At all events, choral societies would be wise to turn their attention to the charms of part writing, such as are displayed in the many beautiful pieces of the school which exist.

In the domain of opera, reference may be made to the success of Sullivan's "Yeomen of the Guard" at the Savoy Theatre, which was produced last October, and has been running a successful and profitable course ever since without showing signs of waning popularity. "Paul Jones" at the Prince of Wales's Theatre, though less worthy as a musical production, has also gained much public favour, chiefly through the fine singing and acting of Miss Agnes Huntingdon, a young American mezzo-soprano vocalist. In the Spring-time the Lyric Theatre brought forward an Opera by Alfred Cellier, "Doris," in succession to "Dorothy," which enjoyed an unprecedented run. Probably counting upon the success of these works, Mr. Henry Parker placed on the stage at some expense at the Royalty Theatre an opera called "Mignonette." The result proved that he had been ill-advised. He thought to win favour by casting his melodies in a mould which has long since been condemned as old-fashioned. It is necessary to advance and not to recede in matters of art. Even at the German Reed entertainments, which make no pretensions to high artistic aims, the maintenance of the principle of elevation has ensured a hearty welcome for the several clever little works supplied in succession by Alfred Caldicott, Edward Solomon, and others. It is true that preparation of the public mind is necessary in order to guard against failure. The disastrous results of the appearance of the Russian National Opera Company at the Novelty Theatre may be quoted as proof in point. The public had not had many opportunities beforehand of making themselves acquainted with the merits of Russian opera, and consequently the support given was too weak to sustain the venture. The impresario could not meet his liabilities, and his company was thrown upon the charity of the world.

At the two rival homes of Italian Opera in London—Covent Garden and Her Majesty's Theatres—performances have been given with totally different issues. At Covent Garden Mr. Augustus Harris has been supported by a powerful and wealthy syndicate, which enabled him to give performances of standard operas with a large company, including Mesdames Albani, Ella Russell, Nordica, Melba, Guilia Valda, Scalchi, Marie Rose, Fursch-Madi, Schläger, Marie Van Zandt, Messrs. Jean and Edouard de Reszké, A. and F. d'Andrade, Lassalle, and a large array of tenors and baritones more or less useful, though in the tenor department the new appearances have for the most part tended to show the scarcity of the voice, and the undesirable qualifications of the several owners who have been engaged here to exhibit them. Two recruits from the Carl Rosa English Opera Company, Messrs. McGuckin and Crotty, have made most successful appearances upon the Italian stage. The operas presented have been well mounted—augmented chorus, increased ballet, armies of supers, and even real trees added to increase the pleasure of the music show. Only one comparative novelty, "Die Meistersinger," in Italian, the libretto by Mr. Mazzucato, has been added to the répertoire, without, however, convincing everybody of the fitness of its subject when clothed in Transalpine attire. The Conductors of the operas, Messrs. Mancinelli, Randegger, and Arditì, have not been able to present the works under their respective charges with that uniformity of refinement which might be desired in so pretentious a venture.

Mr. Mapleson, after having re-decorated Her Majesty's Theatre at considerable expense, opened the house during the month of June, first at the traditional high prices, then at a reduction of one half the former cost of admission. But in neither case did he succeed in attracting audiences sufficiently large to be remunerative. He had a fairly good band, a first-rate Conductor, Mr. Bevignani, but a somewhat poor body of principal performers. He had—at a short notice—engaged Madame Sembrich, who was in London at the time, and who had appeared at a Concert given by Mr. Emil Bach, but she was “indisposed,” and the house was closed. Due notice was promised in advertisements when it should re-open. Paragraphs had “gone the round of the press” to the effect that a syndicate had been formed, with a capital of £50,000, to carry on the work of the theatre during the whole year; and although it is doubtful whether the whole scheme will be carried out, it is intended, as will be seen in another column, that a series of Promenade Concerts at least will be undertaken.

Verdi's “Otello” was produced at the Lyceum on the 5th ult., with principals, chorus, band, scenery, and assistants, all imported from Italy, including the famous Conductor of La Scala, Mr. Faccio. A pecuniary success attended the venture, though opinions were divided concerning the artistic merits of the work.

This record—touching only upon the main points of the London musical season—indicates sufficient activity to show that music has formed no inconsiderable factor in the sum of enjoyment during the past year. Those who are interested in the progress of native art will note with satisfaction the prominent position many of our English musicians have taken in the last few months.

The list of those who have passed “the bounds of the dark river of death” contains the names of many who have in their time wrought good service. Many of them have laboured to bring about the elevation of the art which they professed and loved, and the inscribed roll will be read with a pang of sorrow by those who survive to carry on the work. Foremost on the list stands the honoured name of William Chappell. This is followed by such names as Francis Hueffer, Alfred J. Phasesy, Henry Baumer, Madame Blanche Cole (Mrs. Sidney Naylor), Orlando J. Christian, John Ella (the founder of the Musical Union), T. Gambier Parry (the father of Dr. Hubert Parry), Marcellus Higgs, senior, Thomas Thorpe Peed, Desmond Lumley Ryan (music critic of The Standard), Frederick N. Löhr, Mrs. Limpus (the widow of Richard Limpus, the founder of the College of Organists and at one time a favourite concert-singer), Dr. W. H. Monk, Sidney Smith, Sir Frederick A. Gore Ouseley, Bart., Carl Rosa, Augustus Lechmere Tamplin, Carl Zoeller, and others whose biographies have from time to time been given in these columns. These “be of them that have left a name behind them, that their praises might be reported.”

MANLINESS IN MUSIC.

Few things have contributed more effectively to perpetuate in this country the prejudice against the musical profession—a prejudice which, though waning, is not yet by any means extinct—than the impression that musicians are as a class wanting in the manlier qualities. In a country like England, where devotion to athletics forms a cardinal tenet in the national creed, such an impression cannot fail to have operated greatly to the prejudice of the art—indeed, of all arts, for there are many excellent people with whom the term “artist” is simply a synonym for “Bohemian” or “black sheep.” They are so firmly persuaded that exclusive devotion to the study of music is inevitably attended by a weakening of moral and physical fibre that they avoid all personal contact or association with such persons. In some cases that we know of this feeling amounts to a positive repugnance and resentment. The source of this antipathy is perfectly explicable, and not so irrational as may appear at first sight. We purpose, in the ensuing remarks, to enquire into the origin of this feeling, and then to show—first, that effeminacy and capriciousness, so far from being essential characteristics of all musicians, are only the accidental characteristics of some; and secondly, that the manlier an artist has proved himself to be, the better musician, ex ipso facto, has he generally been.

The origin of the impression already alluded to amongst the non-musical members of the community is sufficiently obvious. Their knowledge of music generally resolves itself into a second-hand acquaintance with the personality of the most talked-of musicians of the day; in other words, it depends on a perusal of the newspaper gossip about operatic singers, who are undoubtedly the most capricious and the most childish representatives of the whole profession. By a sort of freak of nature, a splendid voice is often implanted in a person of less than mediocre intelligence. Born with a silver tune in their mouths, they come to the front without having to fight their way. They are not forced to find their true intellectual or personal level; and the extravagant adulation—and remuneration—which is bestowed on them too often turns their heads. Such a book as Colonel Mapleson's Memoirs—admirably amusing as it is—is calculated to maintain the prevalent and unjust opinion as to the demoralising effect of music on its votaries. It is so full of good stories and free from technicalities that it attracts all readers, musical and non-musical. And certainly the net result of its perusal is to inspire a supreme contempt for the ignoble jealousies and chicaneries which beset certain walks of the musical profession. People do not pause to reflect that it deals exclusively with one very limited though very prominent section of the musical community—operatic soloists, the most highly paid, the least intellectual, and the most injudiciously flattered performers in the world. But it by no means follows that the people who are most in evidence in a profession are most representative of it. The real workers are most often in the background—the people who make the music and play it. There is a wide disparity in point of mental balance between instrumentalists and vocalists—operatic vocalists in particular. The former, even in the case of rank and file performers, are as a rule hard-working, intelligent, and—from the point of view of their art—highly educated men. There is little chance for individual display here. Playing in an orchestra—if the conductor is worth his salt—tends to promote artistic altruism rather than artistic egotism. The real musical workers—composers, conductors, and instrumentalists—fulfil for the most part the description by Pericles of his ideal woman: they are talked about as little as possible. No insinuating interviewer disturbs their domestic privacy. The witty sayings of their parrots remain unchronicled; their furniture is uncatalogued; their favourite dishes are unrecorded. On the other hand, the excrescences of the Art are blazoned forth in every journal until the plain person who is not behind the scenes may be well pardoned if he confuses the accidental with the essential, and sets down the profession of music as a calling wholly bereft of dignity or stability. It is not, however, only the operatic stars who bewilder the unartistic but not unintelligent spectator by their eccentric orbits. Just as the horse, that noblest of animals, is not any the less noble because he gathers around him all the most accomplished blackguards on the face of the earth, so it does not detract from the intrinsic value of music that a great many charlatans number themselves amongst its votaries. There is the drawing-room tenorino, a mannikin who fully justifies in his own person Von Bülow's strictures quoted in a recent number of THE MUSICAL TIMES. He is, in truth, "not a man, but a disease." There are dusky warblers of erotic inanities, skilled in the use of the falsetto, whose fervid folly plays havoc with the heart-strings of gullible women. There are violinists who profane a beautiful instrument by imbecile buffoonery, and, if they ever condescend to play anything in the cantabile style, render their soapy tone still soapier by the constant use of the mute. And about these pests of the drawing-room congregates a swarm of pallid dilettanti, cosmopolitan in sentiment, destitute of any manly vigour or grit, who have never played cricket or been outside a horse in their lives. It is from contact with these nerveless and effeminate natures that the healthy average well-born Briton recoils in disgust and contempt; and, without pausing to inquire, he proceeds forthwith to label all male musicians as unmanly and invertebrate. He generalises widely from very partial data, with the natural result of deviating widely from the mark. But, all the same, we have the greatest sympathy for the healthy average well-born British male in his undisguised contempt for the effeminate young men whom his sisters too often view with favour on the score of their supposed artistic accomplishments. In this matter the instinct of the Philistine is perfectly sound. No musician need be unmanly; and the best have almost invariably been remarkable for a robustness of mind and character, if not of physique. Travel and adventure and a love of Nature have, in a great many cases, proved powerful incentives to the genius of composers. They have often been combative, contentious, even pugnacious. There was no lack of virility in the character of Beethoven. Handel was made of sturdy stuff, capable of volcanic explosions of fury. His extraordinary recuperative energy may best be gauged by the fact that he wrote his finest work after a paralytic seizure. Here, surely, was no lack of physical energy. Mendelssohn was a wonderfully good all-round man—nihil tetigit quod non ornavit. In our times the robust individuality of Brahms's music is the outcome of a thoroughly masculine nature. The hothouse life which, in some minds, is erroneously considered as part and parcel of a musician's career dwarfs rather than stimulates genius. The manual labour of copying out a composition must be done at a desk; but the actual inspiration has, in many notable instances, come upon composers when in the open air. Indeed, we believe that the adverse circumstances under which most composers have now-a-days to work interfere seriously with their creative power. If they could be isolated and removed from the stress and fret of a town-life, we are certain that they would hear far more beautiful things in their brains, and, having heard, would be better able to record them. But to continue our enumeration of robust musicians—merely taking such as come into one's head without consulting biographies or books of reference. Many of the greatest singers have been keen sportsmen. Berlioz mentions Staudigl's eager devotion to the chase, and the apparently reckless way in which he exposed his throat in the pursuit of his favourite recreation. The De Reszkés are great horse-breeders. Mr. Foli is passionately fond of salmon fishing. Mr. Santley's bearing has always seemed to us typical of a manly Englishman. Did he not once quell a panic of fire at the English opera by a historic remark, truly laconic in its brevity? If we revert to composers we shall find that Boito, along with Faccio, the famous conductor, joined the volunteer corps under Garibaldi in 1866, and did good service in the campaign against Austria. One of the most gifted of our native composers is a veritable admirable Crichton in the matter of athletic accomplishments, but his well-known modesty precludes us from mentioning either his name or his non-artistic attainments.

It would be easy to multiply instances ad infinitum of musicians who are amply endowed with the robust qualities of humanity. But we think that enough has been said to establish our contention that effeminacy is an accidental attribute in a disciple of Melpomene. And that reminds us to remark that underneath the fantastic surface of Greek mythology a good substratum of common sense is often to be discovered. Apollo was the patron god of musicians, but Apollo was a considerable athlete in his way and a champion shot with the bow. Achilles, too, the most redoubtable warrior in the Greek host that fought against Troy, was well versed in music. Roman history does not help us so much as Greek mythology. Nero is a standing disgrace to the musical profession. The fox-hunting squire of Addison's Spectator would have undoubtedly described him as "a d——d fiddler," and the recording angel would not improbably have condoned the expletive. If we turn to Scripture history, what better evidence can we find anywhere in support of our position than is afforded by the case of David? The great Celtic heroes of early Ireland were, according to all the authorities, carefully trained in music amongst their other accomplishments. Finally, in the palmy days of English madrigal music—circa ann. 1600—the man who could not take his part in a glee was set down as no gentleman. It was an essential part of a liberal education. Music unmanly? Go tell that to a Highlander, and his response would probably be such a skirl of indignation from his pipes as would blow a sceptical Southron across the border.

By JOSEPH BENNETT.

No. XXVII.—HANDEL (continued from page 398).

LAST month we saw Handel arrive safely in the Irish capital, driven there, according to Pope, by the genius of Dulness, in actual fact by the machinations and implacable resentment of an aristocracy which preferred men of the McSycophant stamp. The great master was not long in getting to work. Having taken a house and got his artists about him—the chief of them were Mrs. Theophilus Cibber and Signora Avolio—he issued, on December 8, the following advertisement:

"On Monday next, being the 14th of December (and every day following), attendance will be given, at Mr. Handel's house, Abbey Street, near Lyffey Street, from nine o'clock in the morning till two in the afternoon, in order to receive the subscription money for his six Musical Entertainments in the New Music Hall in Fishamble Street, at which time each subscriber will have a ticket delivered to him, which entitles him to three tickets each night, either for ladies or gentlemen."

Concerning the "New Music Hall in Fishamble Street," made for ever famous by Handel, Mr.

Rockstro gives some interesting particulars, which we take the liberty of reproducing:—

"Though now one of the poorest streets in Dublin, Fishamble Street was once both worshipful and select. The 'New Music Hall' was built in 1741 for a 'Charitable Musical Society,' of which the Earl of Mornington—the Duke of Wellington's father—was president. It was first opened to the public on the 2nd of October, in the above-mentioned year, and therefore quite new when Handel arrived in Dublin. Many years afterwards, it was converted into a theatre, and, its audience being very select, an advertisement announced that no one would be admitted to the boxes or pit 'without shoes and stockings,' indicating, of course, that gentlemen were expected to wear the usual evening dress of the period, though certain Hibernian wits chose to give the passage a different signification. Thirty years ago, all that remained of the theatre was a neglected old building with a wooden porch, into which it is probable that few persons wearing shoes and stockings were accustomed to enter."

But though turned to "base uses," the Dublin Music Hall will never cease to be associated in men's minds with the noblest form of art, and with the most illustrious composition to which art has given birth.

The files of Faulkner's Journal, then the leading paper in Dublin, show that Handel opened his Concerts on December 23, with "L'Allegro, Il Penseroso, ed Il Moderato"; the programme being made up to the required length by "two Concertos for several instruments, and a Concerto on the organ," which the master, of course, himself played. Success immediate and immense rewarded the enterprise. "Last Wednesday," said the Journal, "Mr. Handel had his first oratorio at Mr. Neal's Music Hall, in Fishamble Street, which was crowded with a more numerous and polite audience than ever was seen upon a like occasion. The performance was superior to anything of the kind in the kingdom before, and our nobility and gentry, to show their taste for all kinds of genius, expressed their great satisfaction, and have already given all imaginable encouragement to this grand music." Happily we can supplement this bald and stilted statement, with its laboured compliment to the "nobility and gentry," by a letter which Handel wrote from Dublin to his friend Jennens, of Gopsal Hall, the librettist of "The Messiah." Every line traced by Handel's pen deserves reproduction, and no apology is needed for inserting the letter here:—

"Dublin, December 29, 1741.

"SIR,—It was with the greatest pleasure I saw the continuation of your kindness by the lines you was* pleased to send me, in order to be prefixed to your Oratorio, 'Messiah,' which I set to music before I left England. I am emboldened, Sir, by the generous concern you are pleased to take in relation to my affairs, to give you an account of the success I have met here. The nobility did me the honour to make amongst themselves a subscription for six nights, which did fill a room of 600 persons, so that I needed not sell one single ticket at the door, and, without vanity, the performance was received with a general approbation. Signora Avolio, which I brought with me from London, pleases extraordinary; I have found another tenor voice which gives great satisfaction; the basses and counter-tenors are very good, and the rest of the chorus-singers by my direction do exceedingly well; as for the instruments they are really excellent, Mr. Dubourgh being at the head of them; and the music sounds delightfully in this charming room, which puts me in such spirits, and my health being so good, that I exert myself on my organ with more than usual success. I opened with the 'Allegro, Penseroso, ed Il Moderato,' and I assure you that the words of the 'Moderato' were vastly admired. The audience being composed—besides the flower of ladies of distinction and other people of the greatest quality—of so many bishops, deans, heads of the College, and the most eminent people in the law, as the chancellor, auditor-general, &c., all which are very much taken with the poetry, so that I am desired to perform it again the next time.* I cannot sufficiently express the kind treatment I receive here; but the politeness of this generous nation cannot be unknown to you, so I let you judge of the satisfaction I enjoy, passing my time with honour, profit, and pleasure. They propose already to have some more performances, when the six nights of the subscription are over, and my Lord Duke, the Lord Lieutenant (who is always present with all his family on these nights), will easily obtain a longer permission for me by his Majesty, so that I shall be obliged to make my stay here longer than I thought. One request I must make to you, which is that you would insinuate my most devoted respects to my Lord and my Lady Shaftesbury, you know how much their kind protection is precious to me. Sir Windham Knatchbull will find here my respectful compliments. You will increase my obligations if, by occasion, you will present my humble service to some other patrons and friends of mine. I expect with impatience the favour of your news, concerning your health and welfare, of which I take a real share. As for the news of the operas in London, I need not trouble you, for all this town is full of their ill-success, by a number of letters from your quarters to people of quality here, and I can't help saying that it furnishes great diversion and laughter. The first opera I heard myself before I left London, and it made me very merry all along my journey; and of the second opera, called 'Penelope,' a certain nobleman writes jocosely:—"Il faut que je dise avec harlequin, notre 'Penelope' n'est qu'une 'Sallope.'" But I think I have trespassed too much on your patience. I beg you to be persuaded of the extreme veneration and esteem with which I have the honour to be, Sir, your most obliged and most humble servant,—GEORGE FRIDERIC HANDEL."

The favourable circumstances reflected in the foregoing exuberant letter continued without abatement, and Handel carried through, with "honour, profit, and pleasure," two sets of six Concerts each, performing "L'Allegro" three times, "Acis" and Dryden's Ode twice, "Esther" twice, "Alexander's Feast" twice, and "Hymen" twice. These were followed by supplemental occasions, on the first of which "Esther" was repeated, and, on the second (April 13, 1742), the immortal "Messiah" was produced, preceded by an advertisement which ran thus: "For the relief of the prisoners in the several jails, and for the support of Mercer's Hospital, and of the Charitable Infirmary on the Inn's Quay, on Monday, the 12th of April, will be performed at the Musick Hall in Fishamble Street, Mr. Handel's new grand Oratorio, called 'The Messiah,' in which the gentlemen of the choirs of both Cathedrals will assist, with some Concertos on the organ, by Mr. Handel. Tickets to be had at the Musick Hall, and at Mr. Neal's in Christ Church Yard, at half-a-guinea each. N.B.—No person will be admitted to the rehearsal without a rehearsal ticket, which will be given gratis with the ticket for the performance when paid for." The rehearsal was thus noticed by Faulkner: "Yesterday,

* The use of the singular verb with the plural pronoun was common at the period of this letter.

* These references to "the poetry" are explained by the fact that Jennens wrote it.

Mr. Handel's new grand sacred Oratorio, called 'The Messiah,' was rehearsed at the Musick Hall in Fishamble Street, to a most grand, polite, and crowded audience, and was performed so well that it gave universal satisfaction to all present, and was allowed, by the greatest judges, to be the finest composition of music that ever was heard, and the sacred words as properly adapted for the occasion. N.B.—At the desire of several persons of distinction, the above performance is put off to Tuesday next. The doors will be opened at eleven, and the performance begin at twelve. Many ladies and gentlemen who are well-wishers to this noble and grand charity, for which this Oratorio was composed, request it as a favour that the ladies who honour this performance with their presence would be pleased to come without hoops, as it will greatly increase the charity by making room for more company."

The performance took place in due course, and was noticed in the same terms by the Dublin journals, the article being evidently "communicated": "On Tuesday last Mr. Handel's sacred grand Oratorio, 'The Messiah,' was performed in the New Music Hall in Fishamble Street. The best judges allowed it to be the most finished piece of music. Words are wanting to express the exquisite delight it afforded to the admiring crowded audience. The sublime, the grand, and the tender, adapted to the most elevated, majestic, and moving words, conspired to transport and charm the ravished heart and ear. It is but justice to Mr. Handel that the world should know he generously gave the money arising from this grand performance to be equally shared by the Society for Relieving Prisoners, the Charitable Infirmary, and Mercer's Hospital, for which they will ever gratefully remember his name; and that the gentlemen of the two choirs, Mr. Dubourg, Mrs. Avolio, and Mrs. Cibber, who all performed their parts to admiration, acted also on the same disinterested principle, satisfied with the deserved applause of the public and the conscious pleasure of promoting such useful and deserving charity. There were about 700 people in the room, and the sum collected for that noble and pious charity amounted to about £400, out of which £127 goes to each of the three great and pious charities." The "sacred Oratorio" was performed a second time, on June 3, and again the ladies were begged to leave their hoops at home, which, we may assume, some of them did, however reluctantly. With reference to this sumptuary matter, Schœlicher points out that the absurd fashions to which women submitted then, as now, not seldom gave trouble to Concert managers. At the Westminster Festival of 1790, the directors announced that "no ladies will be admitted with hats, and they are particularly requested to come without feathers, and very small hoops, if any." History repeated itself, therefore, when Professor Herkomer publicly entreated the ladies invited to witness his "pictorial music-play" not to wear the tall head-gear of the period.

Handel left Dublin on August 13, having spent nine happy and prosperous months in the Irish capital, whose "polite and generous" inhabitants he ever afterwards remembered with kindness and gratitude. Faulkner thus announced his departure: "Last week, Lady King, widow of the late Rt. Hon. Sir Harry King, Bart., and the celebrated Mr. Handel, so famous for his excellent compositions and fine performances, with which he entertained this town in the most agreeable manner, embarked for England." We may add that to the fact of Handel being her fellow-voyager, Lady King, who was, no doubt, an important person, owes the rescue of her name and dignity from total oblivion.

Almost immediately on reaching London, Handel addressed another letter to his friend Jennens, under date September 9, 1742:—

"Dear Sir,—It was indeed your humble servant which intended you a visit on my way from Ireland to London. The report that the direction of the opera next winter is committed to my care is groundless. The gentlemen who have undertaken to meddle with harmony cannot agree, and are quite in a confusion. Whether I shall do something in the oratorio way (as several of my friends desire) I cannot determine as yet. Certain it is that, this time twelve-month, I shall continue my oratorios in Ireland, where they are going to make a large subscription already for that purpose.

"If I had known that my Lord Guernsey was so near when I passed Coventry, you may easily imagine, Sir, that I should not have neglected of paying my respects to him, since you know the particular esteem I have for his Lordship. I think it a very long time to the month of November next, when I can have some hopes of seeing you here in town. Pray to let me hear meanwhile of your health and welfare, of which I take a real share, being, with an uncommon sincerity and respect, Sir, your most obliged, humble servant,—GEORGE FRIDERIC HANDEL."

We gather from this letter that the master still had his eye on the Opera, and was prepared to resume its direction when the gentlemen who had undertaken to meddle with harmony could manage an agreement amongst themselves. Meanwhile Handel was quite bent upon paying another visit to Dublin—a purpose destined never to be carried out, for reasons which can only be conjectured, the probability being that a favourable turn in his English affairs removed the inducement which was strong in 1742. During the closing months of the year just named, Handel did little. Whether he was waiting, like Micawber, for "something to turn up," or enjoying, thanks to his Irish funds, the unwonted luxury of leisure, it boots not now to enquire. Enough that two chamber duets, and a chorus and air for "Samson" (which he had in his desk, unperformed) alone occupied his pen at this particular time. But in view of Lent, 1743, the veteran warrior buckled on his armour again, and went forth to do battle. If the English aristocracy imagined that, having driven him out of the country, they had done with their resolute opponent for ever, a rude awaking to facts took place, when they read (Feb. 17) the following announcement:—"By subscription.—At the Theatre Royal, in Covent Garden, to-morrow, the 18th inst., will be performed a new Oratorio called Samson. Tickets will be delivered to subscribers (on paying their subscription money) at Mr. Handel's house in Brook Street, Hanover Square. Attendance will be given from nine o'clock in the morning till three in the afternoon. Pit and boxes to be put together, and no person to be admitted without tickets, which will be delivered that day at the office in Covent Garden Theatre, at half-a-guinea each; first gallery, 5s.; upper gallery, 3s. Nota.—Each subscriber is to pay six guineas on taking out his subscription ticket, which entitles him to three box tickets every night of Mr. Handel's first six performances in Lent. And if Mr. Handel should have any more performances after the first six nights, each subscriber may continue on the same conditions." Again was the old Handelian flag floating over London, to the joy of the well-affected, who now, it would seem, showed themselves in number sufficient to indicate a turn of fortune's wheel. Referring to the production of "Samson," a London correspondent of Faulkner's Journal wrote: "Our friend, Mr. Handel, is very well, and things have taken a different turn here from what they did some time past; for the public will be no longer imposed on by Italian singers and wrong-headed undertakers of bad operas, but find out the merit of Mr. Handel's compositions and English performances. That gentleman is more esteemed now than ever. The new Oratorio, called 'Samson,' which he composed since he left Ireland,* has been performed to more crowded audiences than ever were seen, more people being turned away for want of room each night than hath been at the Italian Opera." In view of this success, the aristocracy, represented by Horace Walpole, resorted to sneers, which did nobody any harm. "Handel," said the author of the "Castle of Otranto," "has set up an oratorio against the opera, and succeeds. He has hired all the goddesses from the farces, and the singers of roast beef from between the acts at both theatres, with a man with one note in his voice, and a girl without ever an one, and so they sing and make brave hallelujahs, and the good company encore the recitative, if it happens to have any cadence like what they call a tune." Despite the "smart people" of the day, Handel's performances went on from six to twelve, in the course of which "The Messiah" was three times given, under the designation "a sacred oratorio," the withholding of the proper name being conjecturally a precaution against furnishing enemies with a cry of sacrilege. Schœlcher quotes some lines which go to show that Handel's device did not succeed:—

Cease, zealots, cease to blame these heavenly lays,
For seraphs fit to sing Messiah's praise,
Nor for your trivial argument assign
The theatre not fit for praise divine.
These hallow'd lays to music give new grace,
To virtue awe, and sanctify the place;
To harmony like his, celestial power is given
To exalt the soul from earth, and make of hell a heaven.

It is plain from the foregoing that the master's opponents had attacked him on the ground of violated decency. They, forsooth, representatives of a "society" the most profligate and shameless this country has ever known (that excepted which gathered round Charles II.)—they ranged themselves on the side of religion, and posed as the defenders of an insulted Divine name! The very angels, as they looked on, must have smiled through their tears at such preposterous allies. Sooth to say, the aristocracy would have stooped ever so low to damage the mere "music fellow" who had dared to stand up before them instead of crawling at their feet. They were nice people. When Lady Henrietta Herbert was about to marry the tenor, Beard, a man of "irreproachable private character and excellent manners," Lady Mary Montague thought it decent to write: "Lady Henrietta Herbert furnished the tea-tables here with fresh tattle for the last fortnight. I was one of the first who was informed of her adventure by Lady Gage, who was told that morning by a priest that she had desired him to marry her the next day to Beard, who sings in the farces at Drury Lane. He refused her that good office, and immediately told Lady Gage, who (having been unfortunate in her friends) was frightened at this affair, and asked my advice. I told her honestly that since the lady was capable of such amours, I did not doubt, if this was broke off, she would bestow her person and fortune on some hackney coachman or chairman, and that I really saw no method of saving her from ruin, and her family from dishonour, but by poisoning her; and offered to be at the expense of the arsenic, and even to administer it with my own hands, if she would invite her to drink tea with her that evening." We are not told whether the fact that Lady Henrietta desired to legalise her intercourse with Beard had anything to do with stirring up so much anger and contempt. The best of it all is that the marriage took place, and was a happy one.

When his Concerts ended for the season, Handel set to work upon "Semele," and, in July, the Te Deum for the victory of Dettingen, the last-named being "commanded" for a national celebration of what, at the time, was really a great event. We shall not discuss the question whether Handel took any of his materials for the "Dettingen" from the Italian priest Urio, or, as the name is sometimes printed, Uria. Controversy on this matter has already spoiled paper enough. Far be it from us to say that it lacks interest—the very reverse is the case—but argument on either side can determine nothing, and would, therefore, be thrown away. Besides, to enter upon the question of Handel's borrowings is to get into a stream which may carry the strongest man very far indeed. The late Sir G. A. Macfarren tried it, and was at last found reproaching Handel for taking the theme of his Pastoral Symphony in "The Messiah" from an old English ballad styled "Parthenia." But Dr. Crotch was a more conspicuous example, and it is not surprising that Schœlcher wrote about him thus:—

"I do not refer to what Dr. Crotch says upon the subject in his 'Overtures, Choruses, Symphonies, and Marches of Handel, adapted for the Pianoforte.' If he is to be believed, Handel was never anything but a plagiarist, who passed his life in seeking ideas out of every corner. There is scarcely one note by him which, according to the discoveries of the Doctor, has not been stolen from Leo, Luther, Porta, Pergolesi, Carissimi, Stephani, Kulnau, Talemans, Graun, Vinci, Bononcini, Bach, Corelli, and other well-known models such as Padre Uria, Calvisius, Habermann, Muffat, Kerl, Morley, Cesti, Turni, &c., &c. There are portraits of Crotch which represent him playing upon the organ at the age of three years. He so astonished the world by his prodigious precocities that he was called 'The Musical Phenomenon.' This extraordinary child became one of the most ordinary of doctors, and we see how he employed his time."

The "Te Deum" was rehearsed on November 10, the event being spoken of as follows in one of the journals of the day: "Yesterday a Te Deum and Anthem, composed by Mr. Handel for his Majesty, were rehearsed before a splendid assembly at Whitehall Chapel, and are said by the best judges to be so truly masterly and sublime, as well as new in their kind, that they prove this great genius not only inexhaustible, but likewise still rising to a higher degree of perfection." The performance proper took place in St. James's Chapel Royal on November 27.

During the remainder of 1743 Handel occupied himself with making preparations for a Lenten series of oratorios in 1744. "Semele," as we have seen, was already completed, and now "Joseph and his Brethren" followed, the words having been written by a Rev. James Miller, who, in a dedication of his book to the Duke of Montague, preferred, rightly enough, to praise Handel rather than his patron, calling him "a master worthy of such a patron, as he may be said, without the least adulation, to have shown a higher degree of excellence in each of the various kinds of composition than any one who has preceded him ever arrived at in a single branch of it, and to have so peculiar a felicity in always making his strain the tongue of his subject that his music is sure to talk to the purpose, whether the words it is set to do so or not. 'Tis a pity, however, my Lord, that such a genius should be put to the drudgery of hammering for fire where there is no flint, and of giving a sentiment to the poet's metre before he can give one to his own melody." "Semele," "Joseph," "Samson," and

"Saul" carried on the season of 1744; "Joseph" being first performed on March 2, and three times repeated in the course of the series.

EDWARD FITZGERALD'S LETTERS.

THE allusions to music in Edward Fitzgerald's letters, recently published by Macmillan, are so frequent and suggestive as to warrant our extracting some of them for the benefit of readers of THE MUSICAL TIMES. Fitzgerald was more than a literary man with a literary man's condescension towards an art of which he knows little or nothing. He was something of a musician, played the pianoforte and organ fairly, and could take a part in a glee tunelessly and correctly. He composed too, and some of his songs have been printed, though his aversion to publicity probably prevented him from putting his name on the title-page. Mr. Aldis Wright quotes in his preface some amusing recollections of the late Archdeacon Groome on Fitzgerald's musical tastes. In their old age he and Fitzgerald would compare notes on the subject of the great singers of fifty years ago—Braham and Vaughan and Miss Stephens, and the performances of "Acis and Galatea" at the Concerts of Ancient Music. "I can see them now," Fitzgerald would say, "the dear old creetors with the gold eye-glasses and their turbans, nodding their heads as they sang 'O the pleasures of the plains'"—the old creetors being the sopranos who had sung first as girls when George the Third was king. "He was a great lover," adds Archdeacon Groome, "of our old English composers, specially of Shield. Handel, he said, has a scroll in his marble hand in the Abbey, on which are written the first bars of 'I know that my Redeemer liveth'; and Shield should hold a title-scroll, only on it should be written the first bars of 'A flaxen-headed ploughboy.'" Turning to Fitzgerald's own letters, we find that he was an assiduous opera and concert-goer in the company of Frederic Tennyson, the Laureate's brother, and his epistles to him are full of musical chat. We quote the following curious passage from pages 92-4, which seems to us to contain much acute criticism, though the writer's powers of appreciation were limited: "Dear Frederic,—Concerning the bagwigs of composers. Handel's was not a bagwig. . . . Such were Haydn's and Mozart's—much less influential on the character, much less ostentatious in themselves: not towering so high, nor rolling down in following (? flowing) curls so low as to overlay the nature of the brain within. But Handel wore the Sir Godfrey Kneller wig—greatest of wigs, one of which some great General of the day used to take off his head after the fatigue of the battle, and hand over to his valet to have the bullets combed out of it. Such a wig was a fugue in itself." Then follows a passage showing Fitzgerald's inability to comprehend Beethoven. "Mozart, I agree with you, is the most universal musical genius. Beethoven has been too analytical and erudite, but his inspiration is nevertheless true. . . . I think that he was, strictly speaking, more of a thinker than a musician. A great genius he was, somehow. . . . He tried to think in music—almost to reason in music—whereas, perhaps, we should be content with feeling in it. It can never speak very definitely. There is that famous 'Holy, Holy, Holy Lord God Almighty,' &c., in Handel: nothing can sound more simple and devotional; but it is only lately adapted to these words, being originally (I believe) a love-song in 'Rodelinda.' Well, lovers adore their mistresses more than their God. Then the famous music of 'Helayeth the beams of His chambers in the waters,' &c., was originally fitted to an Italian pastoral song,

'Nasce al bosco in rozza cuna, un felice pastorello.' That part which seems so well to describe 'and walketh on the wings of the wind' falls happily in with 'e con l'aura di fortuna,' with which this pastorello sailed along. The character of the music is ease and largeness: as the shepherd lived, so God Almighty walked on the wind. The music breathes ease: but words must tell us who takes it easy. . . . Music is so far the most universal language, that any one piece in a particular strain symbolises all the analogous phenomena, spiritual or material—if you can talk of spiritual phenomena. The Eroica Symphony describes the battle of the passions as well as of armed men." Writing to the same correspondent in 1844, Fitzgerald says: "I play of evenings some of Handel's great choruses, which are the bravest music, after all. I am getting to the true John Bull style of music. I delight in Handel's Allegro and Penseroso. Do you know the fine pompous joyous chorus of 'These pleasures, Mirth, if thou canst give,' &c.? Handel certainly does in music what old Bacon desires in his Essay on Masques, 'Let the songs be loud and cheerful—not puling,' &c. One might think the water-music was written from this text." Contrariwise, Fitzgerald had little sympathy with much modern music, English or foreign. "There is a dreadful vulgar ballad," he writes in the same year, "composed by Mr. Balfe, and sung with the most unbounded applause by Miss Rainforth, 'I dreamt that I dwelt in marble halls,' which is sung and organed at every corner in London. I think you may imagine what kind of flowing 6-8 time of the last degree of imbecility it is. The words are written by Mr. Bunn! Arcades ambo!" In the following year he writes: "I have nothing new to tell you of music. . . . I did not hear 'Le Desert'; but I fancy the English came to a fair judgment about it. That is, they did not want to hear it more than once. It was played many times, for new batches of people; but I doubt if any one went twice. So it is with nearly all French things: there is a clever showy surface: but no Holy of Holies far withdrawn; conceived in the depth of a mind, and only to be received into the depth of ours after much attention. Now Beethoven, you see by your own experience, has a depth not to be reached all at once. I admit with you that he is too bizarre, and, I think, morbid. But he is original, majestic, and profound."

The Finale of the C minor Symphony he speaks of as being noble, but adds: "On the whole, I like to hear Mozart better; Beethoven is gloomy. Besides, incontestably, Mozart is the purest musician; Beethoven would have been poet or painter as well, for he had a deep great soul, and imagination." There is a humorous passage in a letter dated May 4, 1848: "I have never yet heard the famous Jenny Lind, whom all the world raves about. Spedding is especially mad about her, I understand; and, after that, is it not best for weaker vessels to keep out of her way? Night after night is that bald head seen in one particular position in the Opera House, in a stall; the miserable man has forgot Bacon and philosophy, and goes after strange women. There is no doubt this lady is a wonderful singer; but I will not go into hot crowds till another Pasta comes; I have heard no one since her worth being crushed for. And to perform in one's head one of Handel's choruses is better than most of the Exeter Hall performances. I went to hear Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' last spring, and found it wasn't at all worth the trouble. Though very good music, it is not original; Haydn much better. I think the day of oratorios is gone, like the day for painting Holy Families, &c. But we cannot get tired of what has been done in oratorios, more than we can get tired of Raffaele. Mendelssohn is really original and beautiful in romantic music: witness his 'Midsummer Night's Dream' and 'Fingal's Cave.' Shortly after he heard the redoubtable Jenny Lind, for the first time. "I was disappointed in her: but am told this is all my fault. As to naming her in the same Olympiad with great old Pasta, I am sure that is ridiculous." In 1850 he writes, always to Frederic Tennyson: "I hear little music but what I make myself, or help to make with my Parson's son and daughter. We, with not a voice among us, go through Handel's Coronation Anthems! Laughable it may seem; yet it is not quite so. The things are so well-defined, simple, and grand, that the faintest outline of them tells; my admiration of the old Giant grows and grows: his is the Music for a Great Active People. Sometimes, too, I go over to a place elegantly called Bungay, where a Printer lives who drills the young folks of the manufactory there to sing in Chorus once a week. . . . They sing some of the English Madrigals, some of Purcell, and some of Handel, in a way to satisfy me, who don't want perfection, and who believe that the grandest things do not depend on delicate finish."

In 1852 he went to hear the Huguenots, but found the first Act so noisy and ugly that he came away. On this he comments—"I think this is the fault of modern music; people cannot believe that Mozart is powerful because he is so Beautiful: in the same way as it requires a very practised eye (more than they possess) to recognise the consummate power predominating in the tranquil beauty of Greek sculpture." Our next extract is from what, to borrow Fitzgerald's own phrase, is a "desperate" letter. "I pitied you," he writes to a friend who had been at the Norwich Festival, "undergoing those dreadful Oratorios: I never heard one that was not tiresome, and, in part, ludicrous. Such subjects are scarce fitted for Catgut. Even Magnus Handel—even Messiah. He (Handel) was a good old Pagan at heart, and (till he had to yield to the fashionable Piety of England) stuck to opera and cantatas . . . where he would revel and plunge and frolic without being tied down to orthodoxy."

The strangest passage relating to music in these letters is that in which he propounds a scheme for adapting the epilogue part of Tennyson's "King Arthur" to the music of the last scene in "Fidelio"—the music to be applied by some competent modern musician. Oratorios were his special aversion; he looked forward with dismay to the time when there would be an oratorio for every Saint and Prophet—including Habakkuk.

The last allusion to music is quite in the laudator temporis acti spirit. He went, an old man of seventy-two, to the opera in 1880, to the "old Opera House in the Haymarket, where he remembered the very place where Pasta stood as Medea on the stage, and Rubini singing his return to his betrothed in the 'Puritani,' and Taglioni floating everywhere about, and the several Boxes in which sat the several Ranks and Beauties of forty and fifty years ago, my Mother's Box on the third tier in which I often figured a specimen of both. The Audience all changed much for the worse, I thought; and opera and singers also; only one of them who could sing at all, and she sang very well indeed: Trebelli, her name. The opera by a Frenchman on the Wagner plan: excellent instrumentation, but not one new or melodious idea through the whole." Such was Fitzgerald's verdict on "Carmen," evidently the opera in question.

It must not be supposed that we wish to endorse all or any of the foregoing criticisms. But we think that they are of sufficient interest to justify our picking them out of one of the most remarkable and delightful collections of letters that have ever been published.

Fitzgerald, we may be permitted to remind our readers, associated on terms of intimacy and equality with the greatest literary giants of the day. He was Thackeray's dearest friend. Lord Tennyson has borne testimony to his fine and delicate wit, and declared him to be the truest friend he had. Lastly, he was about the only man amongst his intimates of whom Carlyle could say nothing that was not friendly. As a man of letters, he will be remembered by only one work; but that is a masterpiece of the rarest beauty—his famous paraphrase of Omar Khayyám, a version which affronts the pedant, but fascinates every one who cares for beauty of thought and charm of expression.

ENGLISH publishers in general, and English music publishers in particular, are just now the objects of a perfect torrent of abuse directed against them by the Canadian press, or a certain portion of it, which affects to represent Canadian opinion upon the matter which has excited their anger. The occasion is the English opposition to a certain Copyright Act, which has recently passed through the two Houses of the Canadian Legislature, the object of which, apparently, is to enable Canadian publishers to utilise for their own benefit English copyright works in the future in a more deliberate manner than existing Acts of Parliament have openly permitted in the past. We are told that "the interests of the type-setter, the paper-maker, the printer, and the reader have been blighted by the baneful effects of British legislation"; that "the ghoulish avarice with which English publishers grasp the Canadian market, places them among the most selfish and wolfish of British mercantile men," and so on; all of which is accompanied with covert threats of the consequences we may expect should the English power of veto be exercised upon this Act, which the Canadians have issued as their model of all that is fair and reasonable. The Act in question purports to revolutionise the existing law of copyright in Canada; and, unless vetoed, will compel English, colonial, and most foreign owners of copyright works to publish them in Canada within one month of the date of their publication in England or elsewhere, under pain of losing the copyright altogether in Canada. In return for this forfeiture the Canadian Legislature, in its desire to do justice, provides that a royalty of ten per cent. on the retail price of the work is to be reserved for the English or other author of the work. At present we are not concerned to discuss the provisions of this new Act, because it suspiciously resembles a much older Act under which, for something like forty years, an account has been running against our Canadian friends which they have made no attempt to settle, and English owners of copyright works are not disposed to open a new account until the old one is settled. The effect of the older Act was to suspend in favour of any British Colony which cared to adopt its provisions, previous Acts of the English Parliament which prohibited the importation into Canada, amongst other Colonies, of pirated editions of English copyright works issued in America and elsewhere. Canada accepted the provisions of this Act, and the pirated editions were consequently to be admitted into Canada on condition that due provision was made for securing or protecting the rights of British authors there. To satisfy this condition a protective duty of twelve and a half per cent. was to be levied for the benefit of the English author whose interests were so materially prejudiced by the free importation of these pirated editions. The protective duty, however, was a perfect delusion; speaking generally, it was never collected, and British authors were so hampered and obstructed in their endeavours to obtain it that they long ago ceased to trouble themselves in the matter. Consequently for nearly forty years cheap reprints of British copyright works have been freely imported from America and elsewhere into Canada without any recompense whatever being paid to the English proprietor of the pirated works; and this is still going on. Now, we do not wish to prevent the Canadian publisher from coming into Court, if he imagines that he has a grievance, in respect of which he considers himself entitled to redress; but we do insist that, if he comes into Court, he must come with clean hands; and, until he has paid the forty years of arrears of the old duty, we protest that he has no right to be heard. On these grounds English publishers and owners of copyrights are at present content to base their opposition to the proposed new Canadian Act; but it must not be imagined that this preliminary objection exhausts all that they have to say upon the provisions of the Act itself.

THERE is a distinctive quality about the style of the Transatlantic reporter which arrests the attention of the British reader. This fact may be illustrated by reference to the account in the Indianapolis News of the musical Festival recently held in the "Hoosier" capital. Why a native of Indiana is called a "Hoosier" is as yet an unsolved mystery. But to return to the Festival. The heroines of the hour were both "Hoosier" girls, and one of them rejoiced in the name of Kackley. It was Indiana's day, and as the exordium of the notice puts it "the mercantile and manufacturing world had stopped to hear the hum of industries at the end of Indiana's gas-pipes. Poetry and Fiction have taken up their abode here, and now Music has come to stay." Then follows a biographical notice of Miss Kackley: "Her voice is rich and sweet, her face round and fair." The triumph of the evening was her singing of "Qui la voce," after which on her return to the platform "a cloud of ushers collected there and heaped flowers at her feet," while Signor Perotti stood up among the audience and "spoke approvingly in a foreign tongue." The other "Hoosier" soloist, Miss Pierce, also scored a success. "She sang a very difficult number, and gave evidence of fine schooling." Then came Mr. Herbert, a prince of violoncello players, who was "given something of a floral ovation at the close of his solo, the ladies in the chorus robbing themselves of their corsage bouquets to shower upon his unprotected head. He emerged from the sweet-scented shower, and gave a delicious composition that was heartily enjoyed." A further and separate account dwells on the responsiveness of the audience, the soulfulness of Miss Kackley's voice, and the good looks and amiability of Mr. Herbert. Finally, we have a number of "Festival Notes and Personalities," of which the following may serve as specimens: "It is proper to deny the absurd rumour voiced in a morning paper that Signor Perotti was under the influence of drink yesterday, and did not, therefore, appear in the Matinée." "Max Bendix, the violin soloist, says 'there are more pretty girls in Indianapolis than in any other city.' He is an authority, and has been all over the world." Decidedly we have much to learn from the piquant paragraphist of Indiana.

THE announcement that a celebrated writer of songs will shortly publish a volume of stories embodying in prose what has already been made popular in verse and music is somewhat hopeful in one respect, for it proves that some of the words of our song-poets are really good enough to be heard on their own account. We are inclined to believe that the fact of attention being thus called to the author, as well as to the composer, of our drawing-room songs will act most beneficially, as not only will writers be taught that nonsense-verses can no longer be tolerated, but vocalists will be reminded that they must enunciate, instead of mumble over, the words, and audiences that they are expected to listen to something more than mere notes. We can scarcely, however, agree with the author of an article on this subject in our contemporary the Globe when he says: "How glad many of us would have been of some sort of elucidation of 'My Queen' or 'The Message'—not because one would naturally have taken much interest in those masterpieces, but because hearing them warbled so often, we yearned to have them reduced to common-sense prose, and thus made less irritating by their lack of definiteness." In our opinion it is a great question whether the very "indefiniteness" of these songs does not constitute their great beauty; and we much doubt whether "common-sense prose" would not therefore rob them of their charm by transforming them into conventional stories "set to music." At the same time, we can readily imagine that poetry might be written according to the model indicated, in which the interest of a little story would be materially enhanced by its musical colouring; and the "song-writer," who, as we have said, contemplates giving such pieces to the world has, no doubt, such an idea in his mind. At all events, the desire to abolish the manufacture of vapid rhymes for the use of composers is a laudable one; and the originator of the project upon which we have commented has therefore our best wishes for his success.

As we have frequently taken out the word "Professor," and substituted that of "Mr.," before the names of several eminent artists when inserting paragraphs respecting them sent to our journal, we think it but fair to remind our correspondents that "Professor" is a title, and has no right to be used as such by even the highest artists by mere virtue of their position in the world of art. Whether a musician is, or is not, a Doctor or Bachelor of Music can be ascertained by referring to published lists; but as the title of "Professor" is not conferred, but passes to the recognised musical head of a University ex officio, those unacquainted with this fact may reasonably imagine that any person who professes music should have "Professor" before his name. Many instances having recently occurred where we have struck out the title, we take this opportunity of explaining our reason for so doing, in case it should be imagined that by making this alteration we intended any slight upon the professional qualification of an artist. This is the age for testing the right of all who assume prefixes or affixes to their name; and that the particular one under discussion is somewhat loosely used may be proved by the fact of an announcement now before us, in which "Professor —" advertises that he publishes "banjo and guitar music," and also gives lessons on these instruments.

It is noted with surprise that a new fashion has been introduced into the playbills of the present day. This or that person is announced as having "kindly undertaken this or that part to oblige the management." One is stated as having "in the most handsome manner consented to appear"; another "at the earnest request" of somebody or another does something or another. If actors, singers, or performers render these services gratuitously, it would be rude to suggest any alterations in the manner of acknowledging their help. But if, as is generally the case, they are well paid for what they do, this excessive show of mock politeness is an insult to the public, as patrons of art, as it tends to place them in a humiliating position with regard to the performer for whose services they help to pay. Have we grown too genteel?

FACTS, RUMOURS, AND REMARKS.

IN a paper on "Alleged Degeneracy of Singing," read by Mr. Clement Tetedoux at a convention of the Ohio music teachers, we find some passages well worth quoting and thinking about. "The cry of degeneracy is as old as the world. Even the youth of twenty will be heard to say, in a philosophical fit of premature wisdom, that it was not so 'in his time,' meaning, of course, that in his time it was much better. Only the other day, I was reading in an old Italian book, printed a hundred and forty years ago, a passage which might have been published in this morning's paper, objecting to the 'present' desecration of the good old style of church music, and to the introduction of secular tunes in the divine service. The only difference is that our haters of imitation, in their original anxiety to have the honour of creating the world anew, condemn, instead of praise, the days gone by."

AND here is another:—"I shall only remark, in passing, that, whether the old Italian Opera is destined to die a natural death or to be revived in a new garb, of which 'Don Carlos,' 'Aida,' 'Mefistofele,' 'Ruy Blas,' 'Asrael,' and 'Otello' may give us some hint, the only salvation of singing is in the preservation of the old Italian principles, outside of which, either in legato or declamatory style, I can see absolutely nothing worthy of that noblest of all instruments, the human voice. The Italian Opera, like other moulds that have done their work, may be thrown over to the scrap-iron yard, where a great deal of the modern brass will probably go too, for fashions and forms continually change. But as the voice is immutable, so Italian singing, which was the perfection of the past, must also be the perfection of the future."

WHEN Othello sends out word to the minstrels that he has had enough of their music, and the messenger exclaims: "If you have any music that may not be heard, to't again; but, as they say, to hear music the general does not greatly care," we laugh at the truly Shakesperian humour. But precisely such music as the Clown suggests was performed recently at a Deaf and Dumb Institute in Nebraska, and has been described as the true music of the future. Here is the record of it:—"Nine young ladies, radiant in white robes and flowers, sang the dear 'Swanee River' by sign. This singing by sign is one of the most curious of all the mutes' accomplishments; the denoting of the rise and fall of the human voice, all its inflections and deflections, its pealing sounds and dying cadences, by graceful waves of the hands and facial expression, is something that must be seen to be comprehended or appreciated."

WITH regard to the death scene of Otello in Verdi's opera, an anecdote is told in the Ménestrel by Mr. Johnson, the well-known correspondent of our Parisian contemporary, Le Figaro:—"At one of the latest rehearsals of 'Otello' in Milan, Boito was on the stage with Verdi, when he saw the master hurry towards Tamagno, whom he pushed aside, himself taking the tenor's place by Desdemona's bed. Accustomed to Verdi's demonstrations of how things should be done, Boito went on with the work of the moment. All at once he heard a fall which cut in two the last word pronounced by Otello, and, looking up, saw Verdi rolling down the steps of the estrade. Boito, with several others, hurried to the master's help, but the old man had risen laughingly from the floor. He had discovered for Otello the realistic death which Tamagno so well reproduces."

ARRANGEMENTS for the Gloucester Festival are now complete. The programme is as follows—Tuesday: "Elijah" and, at the evening Concert in the Shire Hall, Mackenzie's "Dream of Jubal," with a selection, including a new short Cantata "Elysium," by Miss Ellicott. Wednesday: Parry's "Judith," Rossini's "Stabat Mater," Williams's "The Last Night at Bethany" (new), and the first two parts of the "Creation," all in the Cathedral; Thursday: Sullivan's "Prodigal Son," Gounod's "Messe Solennelle," Spohr's "Last Judgment," and, in the Shire Hall, Sullivan's "Golden Legend"; Friday: "The Messiah." This is by far the best and most interesting programme that we can remember in connection with a Festival of the Three Choirs. It unites the old with the comparatively new in just proportion, and should secure a very successful result.

THE "Dream of Jubal," "Judith," the "Last Night at Bethany," the "Prodigal Son," and "Golden Legend" will all be conducted by their respective composers. The principal singers are Mesdames Albani, Ambler-Brereton, Anna Williams, Hilda Wilson, and Mary Morgan; Messrs. Lloyd, Nicholl, Barrington Foote, and Brereton. Mr. Carrodus leads a first-rate orchestra; Mr. Charles Fry has been engaged to recite the blank verse in the "Dream of Jubal"; and Mr. C. Lee Williams, the accomplished Cathedral Organist, will conduct. We are glad to see that Mr. Williams will have a two days' rehearsal in London, thus materially lightening the work to be compressed into the Monday of festival week. It is pleasant, also, to learn that the prospects of the meeting are, so far, very good.

A COMBINATION of the Royal Academy of Music and the Royal College of Music for the purpose of local examinations is distinctly one of the events of the month. Particulars have not yet been officially made known, but we are able to state that the examinations will be carried out by an Associated Board, consisting of five members from each of the Academies, with the Principals for the time being; Lord Charles Bruce acting as Chairman (for three years) and the Prince of Wales as President. The object is, of course, to set on foot examinations conducted under the auspices of a body commanding respect, and having no interest to serve other than that of musical education and culture. We have here, mayhap, the first step towards a musical university, with affiliated colleges, and having the power to grant degrees.

SUBSCRIPTIONS are invited towards a Rubinstein Jubilee Testimonial Fund, and admirers in England may forward cheques or money to his Highness the Duke George of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, Michael Palace, St. Petersburg. Russians are credited with an easy command of foreign languages, but with Duke George and his Committee the following seems to pass as English: "The Committee has the honour to request all musical, art, and other, in order to organise the celebration of the fifty-years artistic jubilee of Mr. Anton Rubinstein, begs to inform, that the festivity will take place at St. Petersburg, on Saturday the 18/30th November of the current year, and that, with the Imperial sanction, a subscription has been opened," &c.

THERE are plenty of music-teachers who should take to heart the moral of the following story, which we copy from the Chicago Indicator: "Miss Helen Buttroch, a young New Hampshire girl, went to Berlin to study music. She was placed under a teacher, who, unsympathetic and pedantic, discouraged and criticised her so harshly that her spirit was broken, and wandering out one day to escape from the ruins of her shattered dreams of success, she returned no more. After some days her body was found in the river. The moral of this sad story is plain enough. More is needed from teachers than knowledge of methods. Sympathy is, perhaps, the most necessary part of a teacher's equipment."

REFERRING to a Pianoforte Concerto by Scharwenka, an American critic gushes: "When we have passed through the rocky dark wood of sombre oaks and pines of this part, we come out into the sunlight on the meadows of the beautiful slow movement, fraught with flowers and bouquets of lovely melody, and after passing again through the rocks and underbrush of the forest of the prime part, we arrive on the rural plains of the animated Scherzo, in which we note the joyous frolic of the inhabitants of the rural household, skipping along in dancing frolic." We suppose there are readers of this kind of stuff, or it would not appear. But the office boy might have corrected the diction.

So it appears that a syndicate, with £50,000, is going to try its fortune at Her Majesty's Theatre, by giving Promenade Concerts in the autumn and Italian Opera in due season. The leading members, we believe, are some of those associated with Mr. Mapleson in his recent disastrous campaign, but now the "gallant Colonel" is left out in the cold. There will be at least one amusing chapter in the veteran warrior's next volume of reminiscences, for which Messrs. Mitchell, Tod-Heatly, Leslie, and the rest, should be on the look-out. Apropos of the Promenade Concerts, it is officially announced that Mr. E. Lloyd has been exclusively engaged as far as that form of entertainment goes.

It is hardly a compliment to Dr. Hubert Parry that the partial boycotting of his latest symphony by the Richter Concert audience should be made an excuse for declining to perform new works in future. At the same time, we cannot take upon ourselves to blame the managers. If the patrons of the Richter Concerts would rather hear Wagner's music than any other—and there is very good reason to believe that they would—if, moreover, they are disposed to support the Concerts only upon condition that this preference is studied, we do not see that outsiders have a right to complain, however much they may regret the existence of a limited taste and a polemical spirit.

A SHORT time ago we quoted with much admiration an American criticism of Bülow, beginning—"In the high white light of a matchless musically intellectual mind," &c. It is now a pleasure to learn, from the pages of the Chicago Indicator, that an English writer equalled this long ago. In one of Macaulay's letters, quoted by Sir George Trevelyan, the essayist refers to a notice of Paganini in London. "His ethereal notes," said the journalist of the period,

"fall like flakes from the instrument, and then, rising into the air, crystallise and form stars." If our opinion were asked, we should say that the "Britisher" has rather the best of it.

EVERYBODY regrets the death of Bottesini, who was a great artist, and a loveable man. The best description we have seen of him is one written by D'Arcais in the Italian L'Opinione: "Italy mourns a great artist, who was at the same time a man of feeling, and who during many years honoured the name of Italian both at home and abroad." Bottesini died a poor man, but left a collection of autograph letters, including many from Verdi, which should fetch a good price. The rich Englishman who is always turning up in Continental journals is said to have offered a large sum for the deceased artist's double-bass.

THE late Sir Frederick Ouseley certainly earned a memorial, and one is being raised in a practical and useful form. At a recent meeting of the Committee and friends of St. Michael's College, Tenbury—an institution founded and largely supported by the deceased baronet—it was resolved that the memorial should take the form of an endowment to the extent of £10,000. This kills two birds with one stone. It honours the memory of a worthy man, and does something to fill the gap caused by a drop in the College income from £2,000 to £900 consequent upon the cessation of the deceased gentleman's support.

AN American picture of Von Bülow and the phonograph:—"After playing upon a pianoforte, from which issued sounds compared to the soft and dreamy gurgle of a brook, the far-off sighing of the night wind and the roar of the cataract, he is described as placing the phonograph tubes to his ears: now a look of surprise creeps over his features, his face becomes ashy pale, he staggers back from the machine exclaiming, 'Mein Gott! Mein Gott! It is bewitched.' Recovering from what was almost a faint, he begs to be sent home at once, saying that his nerves are completely unstrung, and he must have rest."

REPORTS have appeared indicating great activity on the part of the Carl Rosa Opera Company. It is intended to produce, during the next provincial tour, Gounod's "Roméo et Juliette," all the English rights of which have been purchased, Bizet's "Pearl Fishers" and Balfe's "Talisman." "Lurline," "The Star of the North," and "The Rose of Castille" will also be played. We hear, also, of a spring season in London, with Messrs. Bennett and Cowen's new Scandinavian opera as a leading attraction. Among the artists engaged are Madame Tremelli, Mr. Winogradoff, and Mr. Abramoff.

Freund's Music and Drama has been considering, and trying to account for, the fact that we have had two Italian operas in London this season and no German opera—a state of things calculated, as our contemporary rightly says, to make a Wagnerite grind his teeth with rage. The explanation arrived at runs thus: "People who flit here and there in the social swim of an evening, like to take in a bit of opera between a dinner and a ball. . . . 'Die Walküre' or 'Götterdämmerung' would harass their souls with melancholy; Verdi, Donizetti, and Rossini will amuse and delight them." Precisely; so does Mozart.

THE following dialogue is not to be found in Mr. Mapleson's book. Customer: "I don't like that pianoforte you sold us at all." Dealer: "What is the matter with it, Madam?" Customer: "The keys are cracking, and seem to be very brittle." Dealer: "Ah! I can account for that. You see, we have ten men in Africa all the time shooting elephants, to get the ivory for our keys. A little while ago they shot a baby elephant by mistake, and now and then keys made out of the infant pachyderm's tusk turn up, and give our customers some trouble."

THE prospects of the Leeds Musical Festival are very good, the application for serial tickets being considerably in advance of 1886. A few changes appear in the latest edition of the programme; the overtures to "Le Nozze" and "Der Freyschütz" giving place to Beethoven's "Leonora" and Gounod's "Mirella." A selection from Sullivan's music to "Macbeth" is now included in the scheme, together with Dr. MacKenzie's "Pibroch"—a Scottish fantasia, for violin (Mr. Sarasate) and orchestra. The analytical notes in the programme-books will again be written by Mr. Joseph Bennett.

THE rage for minutely describing the dress of artists when singing before the public is evidently on the increase, the paragraph stating that a vocalist "looked very nice in silver grey," for example, being read with at least as much interest as any criticism upon her singing. We may be very sorry for this; but that the importance of the matter cannot be ignored by the artists themselves is sufficiently evident from a remark made, in our presence by one of the audience at a Festival, that a well known singer "received a large sum for three concerts, and had the meanness to appear each day in the same dress."

THINKING it to be a very fair specimen of American humour, with just a spice of fact to warrant it, we quoted, some time ago, a paragraph from the Indicator in which the various Chicago ways of pronouncing Wagner's name were set forth. Our contemporary now accuses us of taking the passage in "portentous earnest," thus admitting the possibility of not distinguishing its jocularity from its seriousness. The Indicator need not label its paragraphs "This is a joke" even for us; since the "portentous earnestness" exists only in its own imagination.

OUR Chicago contemporary, becoming very wrath indeed, charges us with "making cruel flings at American institutions." The only American institution to which we have ever referred is the thin skin worn by our beloved cousins.

OUR Chicago contemporary does us the further honour to quote from these columns a paragraph referring to the power of the "almighty dollar" in buying up choice English books and musical instruments. The Indicator says: "It would be interesting to know what THE MUSICAL TIMES means by this paragraph." If that be so, let our contemporary's editor call in his own office boy, or take the opinion of the next man in the street, since the paragraph means exactly what it says. We regret our inability to supply the Indicator with perceptiveness.

A CORRESPONDENT having assured Mr. Arthur Pougin, in reply to some strictures from his pen, that pure Wagnerians are neither ill-bred nor fierce, the Parisian critic and biographer retorts: "He (the correspondent) at least is not so, I see; and I sincerely congratulate him. But I must here express one regret, and it is—not to know his like. At any rate—the gods be praised—once in my life I shall have met a tolerant Wagnerian. This is a chance which I expected no more, and on which I can justly flatter myself."

THE line "Who's playing to-day?" which appears in capital letters in a morning contemporary, no doubt fulfils its intended purpose of arresting attention. Reading on, we find the questions "Who's playing?" and "Whose piano?" propounded four times, the first being answered by the names of four celebrated performers, but the second always by that of the same manufacturer. So it is evident that the advertisement headed "Who's Griffiths?" to which we alluded a short time since, has set a pattern likely to be extensively imitated.

SOME of the London County Councillors attended the opening of the Peckham Rye band-stand by the Earl of Meath on the 11th ult., and, as in duty bound, made speeches concerning free music for the masses. The audience heard with satisfaction that our new municipal rulers are fully alive to the necessity of providing good music in London open spaces. That is all right; and we hope the next winter will be utilised for doing the vast amount of preliminary talking which in this country precedes every active measure.

THE following letter is said to have been received by a music-seller in San Francisco:—"Have you got a song with the words & accompaniment called chipy Get your Hair cut, johny get you gun—I don't know the name of the song but I think that is part of the first verse. Please let me know right away if you have it & the price of it & also have you the music of a Song called of the day and the price of it, & have you got a song called she is my big Fat Consumpted liza jane & price of it." The writer is described as a young lady in the mining districts.

MR. SANTLEY appears to be having a good time in Australia, and will prolong his stay much beyond the date originally fixed for starting homeward. His homeliness and freedom from the arts of the poseur have quite won the colonial heart; the great baritone's success being hardly less in society than on the concert platform. At the date of latest advices Mr. Santley was still in Melbourne as the "star" of a series of Ballad Concerts, in which capacity he had to shine again after each song.

IN an account of the opening of a new organ a local journal thus describes the instrument: "The great organ comprises violin diaphason swell, stop ditto, genshorn swell, piccolo and hautboy ditto, open diaphason, stop ditto, wall flute, dulcina 15th." It is a common custom at musical examinations to set papers teeming with errors, for the candidates to correct; would not this "specification" be admirably adapted for the next examination at the College of Organists?

PASSING through Hunter Street, Brunswick Square, a few days ago, we were surprised to find that Henrietta Street has been re-named "Handel Street." Of course, as statues to the memory of great men involve both trouble and expense, and a paint-pot and brush are all that are required for conferring the honour to which we have directed attention, many may consider the circumstance scarcely worthy of notice ; but let us at least accept it as an unmistakable sign of the times.

THAT the conventional music "furnished" to promote conversation at fashionable Promenades in former days, has now been replaced by the performance of high-class compositions, which effectually arrest attention, may be inferred from the fact of a bazaar having recently been opened for a charitable purpose, under aristocratic patronage, in which pianoforte recitals were given by Miss Agnes Zimmermann. This is unquestionably a move in the right direction.

A CORRESPONDENT who, like many others, has suffered from the incessant pianoforte practice of his next-door neighbour's children, even on Sundays, was told, on remonstrating with their parents on the subject, that on the Sabbath "only sacred music was permitted in their house." As on the following Sunday he heard nothing but the scales, he wishes to know whether such things as "sacred scales" exist, and if so, where he can procure them.

THE solo soprano of a Catholic choir in New York has been expelled by the priest for being content with a civil marriage only. The reverend gentleman holds that she is not a wife in the eye of the Catholic Church. By the laws of the State of New York this marriage is a valid one. It is not, however, recognised by the Catholic Church as a marriage. What does the New York Legislature say to this setting up of an imperium in imperio?

WE hear of a new journal, to be called the Amateur Musician, and devoted to the "amateur interest"—whatever that may be as distinct from the interest of music-lovers in general. The editor is going to work with his "whole body and soul," which is satisfactory to know. Among the first articles will be one on "Dragons": not the mythical beast so called, but the third party who plays propriety when the second party is being taught by the first. A delicate subject!

A LONDON critic, speaking of the recent great performance of "Elijah" at the Crystal Palace, says that "the Baal choruses of 'Thanks be to God' may be said to sing themselves." We will not stop to enquire what is meant by "the Baal choruses of 'Thanks be to God,'" but we feel certain that many conductors who have worked hard at these pieces will be glad to find that, by some method, they can be made to "sing themselves."

THE prospectus of the Edinburgh Choral Union has just appeared, and we learn that among the novelties to be produced are Dr. A. C. Mackenzie's new Choral Cantata "The Cotter's Saturday Night," and a new Cantata, entitled "The Cameronian's Dream," by Mr. Hamish MacCunn. These works will be conducted by their respective composers. The season will commence on December 2.

DURING the performance of the Overture to "Don Giovanni," at the Italian Opera, a few evenings ago, a lady seated next to us said to her friend, "Very good! Do you know who's written the music?" Now, we are puzzled to discover whether she was unacquainted with the name of the artist who composed the opera she had come to hear, or whether she imagined the Overture is, as a rule, supplied by somebody else.

WE hope it is not true that Madame Cataneo, the Lyceum Desdemona, lost property worth £2,000 by the fire at the International Hotel, and we are encouraged in the hope by the fact that when the jewels of a prima donna are in question strict observance of the rules of arithmetic is not called for. If Madame Cataneo did suffer to the extent named, we can only say that she bore her misfortune remarkably well.

THE recent examination of the operatic class at the Royal Academy of Music shows that there is talent in it which only needs careful cultivation to be valuable. Why do not the authorities of the Academy appeal to the public for means to make such arrangements in the present concert-room as that a proper stage could be provided? The work is easy enough, and would involve no great expense.

A SUCCESSFUL artist who travels on the Continent may soon cover his breast with decorations if he care for that sort of thing, and especially if he visit the Danubian Provinces, where a plentiful crop of "orders" seems to wait anybody's picking. Mr. Ondricek, the violinist, being in Roumania lately, was at once presented by the King with a star, or a cross, or some such gew-gaw.

OUR native singers might take a hint from the success of the Lotus Glee Club in London during the past season—success which proves that there is still a public for glees when they are given with a perfect ensemble. By constant practice together and careful attention to the minutest details, these Bostonian artists sing so that everybody hears them gladly. Cannot our own people do the like?

MUSICAL competitions, so long a precarious importation from Wales, seem to have become acclimatised in the East of London. At the Stratford Musical Festival recently, there were 257 candidates for prizes and certificates in no fewer than thirty-three classes. This looks extremely healthy, and it is to be hoped that the example of the Wise Men of the East will everywhere be imitated.

THE report of a recent "musical evening" in a fashionable locality informs us that one of the vocalists gave a "serenade with a sneeze in it, which produced roars of laughter from the audience." As several excellent songs were also contained in the programme, we should imagine that the invitations were issued for what is usually termed a "variety entertainment."

CONCERNING performances of works by American composers at a recent meeting of the Music Teachers' National Association, Mr. Wilson writes in the Boston Evening Traveller: "Mr. X, of Detroit, or Mr. Y, of Cleveland, does not want his maiden score butchered in the sight of his assembled fellow-craftsmen; his own local orchestra could do the killing much easier, and there would be fewer to mourn."

THERE comes from Rome a piece of news which should interest operatic managers. A "theatrical confederation," in the nature of a trades union, has just been formed. One of its objects is to bring forward young artists and save them from the tyranny of speculators. We shall be glad to hear, in twelve months' time, that the members have not quarrelled amongst themselves.

THE Boston Evening Traveller says: "How delighted the English must be to find something new of Mendelssohn's; one can be enthusiastic even about a fugue." Indeed one can, though not necessarily about every fugue; and we are all delighted to find something of Mendelssohn's when it is worth having. So, the Boston Evening Traveller is not far from the truth.

OF course, whenever there are to be "great doings" at a well known place of resort, all tastes must be studied in providing the amusements; but for a "combined attraction" the little town of Cromer has, we think, distanced all its rivals. At the Assembly Rooms, a bill informs us that there will be "a grand entertainment, consisting of waxworks and a Cantata entitled 'The Seasons.'"

A MR. HEINTZ, writing about the "tale of Wagner's ingratitude toward Meyerbeer," says that "the time has come to free the master's name for ever from such disfiguring elements." Certainly the time has come, and we are waiting for Mr. Heintz to perform the operation. At present he has not got further than "You're another."

BALFE'S "Bohemian Girl" has been revived in New York, and we read thereabout: "The tuneful opera was received with hearty applause, and great enthusiasm was manifested over its familiar melodies." So it appears that in America, as in England, the "old Girl" refuses to be sneered out of existence by superior persons.

ADALBERT GOLDSCHMIDT, the composer of a terrible Oratorio, called "The Seven Deadly Sins," will by-and-by have as much to answer for as though he had committed them all. His latest enormity is the composition of a trilogy, entitled "Gää," which will, in performance, take up three entire evenings! O, Wagner, Wagner!

SOME musical puns have lately come across the Atlantic. We risk the indignation of our readers so far as to reproduce two of them:—"A new song is entitled 'The waves are washing the shore.' It ought to be for soap-rano." "When Queen Victoria knights any of the rich English beer brewers, we suppose the band plays 'Ale to the chief.'"

A NOVEL method of compelling a manager to "pay up" has been invented by the brother of a lady artist lately singing in Genoa. While his sister was playing the Gipsy in Verdi's "Ballo" he rushed upon the stage and dragged her off. The curtain fell, of course, upon an excited and wondering house, but presently rose again. Madame had received the cash.

IN our last number we referred to the fact of advertisements for musical artists stating that their height was as important as their musical accomplishments: here is one instance that it is sometimes even more so: "Required ('Beggars' Opera') one Principal Lady (soprano), two small parts (tall); voices less important."

SIR CHARLES HALLÉ will produce Handel's penultimate oratorio "Theodora" at Manchester on November 7 next. This interesting work has been once heard in London within recent years, but, we believe, it is unknown to the Lancashire public. The fact that it was the composer's favourite should excite interest and sympathy among Manchester amateurs.

ENGLISH admirers of Beethoven are at liberty to contribute towards the fund now being raised in Germany for the purchase of the great masters' "birth-house," and the establishment therein of a Beethoven museum. They may subscribe £2 ros. and be a shareholder (no dividends), or £25 and receive a diploma as patron.

A RECENT issue of the Musical Courier thus "contrives a double debt to pay":—"We don't see how anybody can afford to waste time in reading such a foolish paper as the Chicago —, when they have at hand such a bright and well-edited journal as the Chicago —, the most recent copy of which we have just received."

MESSRS. NOVELLO are publishing a new Harvest Cantata by Dr. Garrett, for chorus with organ accompaniment, adapted for use at Harvest Festivals, and Dr. Mackenzie's setting of Burns's "Cotter's Saturday Night," for chorus and orchestra, which is to be given for the first time by the Edinburgh Choral Union, early in December.

THE novelties to be produced at the Gloucester Festival, Mr. C. L. Williams's Church Cantata "The last night at Bethany" (words by Joseph Bennett), and Miss Ellicott's short Cantata "Elysium," for soprano solo, chorus, and orchestra, will be published at the end of this month by Messrs. Novello.

THE late, bandmaster, Carli Zoeller, had a good collection of wind and stringed instruments, including several examples of the viola d'amore. He also owned a small, but valuable, musical library. The whole will be sold by auction in the autumn for Mrs. Zoeller's benefit.

A VERY unpretending musical service was that at the recent royal wedding, but it included a new anthem, "O perfect love," composed for the occasion by Mr. Joseph Barnby. Loyal amateurs may be glad to know that the work is published by Messrs. Novello, Ewer and Co.

WE take a good specimen of journalistic smartness from America. "Last Sunday, the Herald started quite seriously, 'Signor Tamagno is a singer whose celebrity is largely due to his voice.' No doubt this is to distinguish the Signor from other singers whose celebrity is chiefly due to their divorce cases."

THE term "English Symphony" was applied by the annotator of the Philharmonic programmes to Dr. Parry's penultimate work of that class without consultation with the composer. It is a fact, however, that the idea of so styling it was at one time in Dr. Parry's mind.

THE New York Sun says that a musical leader must needs be "an immense beer-consumer, a jolly good fellow who can sit up all night and make the business go for the steward, a man who has no other opinion but that of the members, a man who can tell first-class puns, and a thousand other kinds of man."

THE ashes of another composer have been disturbed, but not, we are glad to say, for the purpose of being offered belated honour. It having been determined to pull down the Franciscan Church at Naples, the body of Paisiello, who was buried therein, has been removed to the Church of Donnalbina.

AMATEURS who wish to know all about the "motives" in "Parsifal" should read Mr. W. Ashton Ellis's translation of Wolzogen's "Key" to that work, published by Chappell and Co. They will probably suffer one or two headaches, but, as the copy-books used to say, "Perseverance conquers difficulties."

MUSIC must really be the cheapest article traded in, for we see that a publisher undertakes to send "25s. worth of songs, dances, or pieces for 1s. 3d., or 50s. worth for 2s. 3d., or £5 parcel for 4s.; all post free."

MR. F. F. BUFFEN has written, and Messrs. Chapman and Hall will shortly publish, a book entitled "Musical Celebrities." It contains biographical sketches of great living artists, with portraits, and forms a handsome volume de luxe.

DR. STANFORD's setting of Lord Tennyson's Ballad, "The Voyage of Maeldune," and Dr. Parry's "Ode to St. Cecilia's Day," both for soli, chorus, and orchestra, which will be produced at the Leeds Festival, will be issued shortly by Messrs. Novello.

AMERICAN papers say that the anxiety of Mr. Gericke, late Conductor of the Boston Symphony Concerts, to leave the States for Germany was due to an affection of the heart. The particular disease is not stated, but is referred to as common.

CANZONI, the composer of "Don Bucefalo," has completed an opera on the subject of "King Lear." It is as though the late Mr. Buckstone had played Hamlet, for which part he is said to have entertained a profound conviction of personal fitness.

EX-PRESIDENT CLEVELAND is said to have received a shower of flowers on a recent occasion with all the sang froid of a prima-donna. But not, we venture to say, with an equal knowledge of where they were bought and how much they cost.

P. S. GILMORE, the American band Conductor, has written his autobiography. Here it is:—"I first saw the light in the bogs of Connemara, but I was born in Boston in the nineteenth year of my age." Another injustice to Ireland!

THE paragraph-makers have lately concerned themselves much with Christine Nilsson. She was in London the other day, to all appearance enjoying the best of health and good looks.

MADAME GERSTER is said to have re-appeared upon the operatic stage—at Kroll's Theatre, Berlin—with her voice better than ever. We are glad to hear it, and hope the news is true.

SOME American papers declare that sympathy with Campanini on the ground of his losses in endeavouring to establish Italian opera is quite thrown away. We hope so.

THE returns of the Education Department show that 2,750,000 children are learning to sing by note in the elementary schools of Great Britain. And yet we are not of a musical nation!

THERE is some talk of so improving American pianofortes that they shall serve for life rafts when the floods are about. Readers are requested not to take this information in "portentous earnest."

DR. MACKENZIE will soon be seriously at work upon his Birmingham Oratorio, thus giving himself plenty of time to produce a magnum opus.

MR. HAMISH MACCUNN is composing a cycle of six love-songs. The lyrics are from the pen of Mr. Joseph Bennett, and form a continuous story.

RICHTER CONCERTS.

FROM the musician's point of view the penultimate Concert of the season on Monday, the 1st ult., was the most interesting of the series, hackneyed Wagnerian excerpts being for the time put aside in favour of some novelties of more than ordinary significance. Dr. Hubert Parry's Symphony in E minor, a work worthy of the prolific composer, though more elaborate and ambitious than the so-called "English Symphony," is the outcome of a request made to him by Herr Richter, after last year's Birmingham Festival, that he would write a Symphony specially for these Concerts. This probably accounts for the marked resemblance between the first movement of the Symphony and the opening of the same composer's Oratorio "Judith." We note the same alternation between rugged syncopated figures and suave, flowing melody, and even a distinct similarity in the character of the principal themes. Perhaps, on the whole, the movement is too restless; but it contains some very fine passages, equal to anything the composer has given us. The next section in the key of C is long drawn out, full of deep expression, and decidedly religious in character. The third movement, Allegro scherzoso in A minor, is the gem of the work. The annotator says that it suggests "an al fresco fête in the olden time—a coquettish dance of lords and ladies, interrupted by a song." This is right as regards the opening theme, but all the details are essentially modern. It is not of much consequence, for whatever may be the style the movement is thoroughly charming, and at its close Dr. Parry was called to the platform and vociferously applauded. The Finale is throughout triumphant in tone, but as it is even more restless than the first movement it was somewhat difficult to follow at a first hearing. This much however may be said, that it worthily concludes a work certain to be heard again. The next piece was a curiosity in its way, the first movement of a Pianoforte Concerto, alleged to be by Beethoven. It is said that the parts were found in the possession of Herr Emil Bezecny, of Prague, and that on being submitted to Dr. Guido Adler he pronounced the movement to be a genuine production of Beethoven, probably dating about 1790. The movement is in the ordinary Concerto form of the time, and might have been penned by Mozart in his weaker moments, though there is a Beethovenish touch here and there which gives colour to the idea that it is a juvenile effort of the mighty Bonn master. Intrinsically, however, it is of little value, and although Madame Stepanoff played it with the quiet refinement suited to the music of this period, she certainly might have been employed on more interesting music. The imposing Finale to "Götterdämmerung," in which Miss Fillunger sustained the part of Brünnhilde with considerable effect, and Beethoven's Symphony in F (No. 8), magnificently played, completed the programme.

On the following Monday the season was brought to a conclusion with a performance of Berlioz's "Faust," of which the splendid rendering of the orchestral portion and the indifferent singing of the choir were the most conspicuous features. Whether the defects of the choristers were due to insufficient rehearsal or other causes cannot be said. Enough that if choral works are included in these Concerts they should be more carefully prepared. Mrs. Mary Davies and Mr. Lloyd repeated impersonations in which they have won many successes, Mr. Max Heinrich was an extremely artistic exponent of the part of Mephistopheles, and Mr. Bantock Pierpoint was efficient as Brander. The season is understood to have been very successful, and next year Wagner's music is to figure more prominently than ever in the programmes.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

THE last month of the season at Covent Garden has mainly been devoted to repetitions of works produced earlier, Mr. Harris contenting himself with playing "Faust," "Carmen," "Roméo et Juliette," &c., over and over again, with the help of the excellent and favourite artists at the head of his company. Exceptions to this rule have been very few, and only one was of importance. We refer, of course, to the production of an Italian version of "Die Meistersinger," under the direction of Mr. Mancinelli, on the 13th ult. The use of an Italian text (every way a credit to the translator, Mr. Mazzucato) has been a good deal canvassed, and much criticised from a theoretical point of view. We may not assume that, practically, the change made any great difference to the audience, whose critical acquaintance with Wagner's peculiar German is hardly profound. London amateurs were, no doubt, indifferent on the matter, if they did not absolutely prefer the smooth and musical Italian to the harsh and guttural Teutonic speech. With Germany and German scholars the change must have been, for obvious reasons, a drawback. They, however, are so small a minority as to be "neglectable." The performances, of which Mr. Harris gave four, were, on the whole, satisfactory, though not equal, from a dramatic point of view, to those of the German company that brought the work to us in 1882. We give full credit to the ability displayed by the Poles and Frenchmen who took part in the representation, but they were not "to the manner born," nor could they be expected to know the traditions of the opera, or to be fully in sympathy with its peculiar character. Madame Albani, though she could not "look" the part of Eva, sang and acted with much acceptance, and it goes without saying that Mr. Jean de Reszké was a handsome and gallant Walther, able to sing the prize songs as no German had ever delivered them. Mr. Lassalle's Hans Sachs was, on the other hand, not the German cobbler to whom we have been accustomed. The artist could not get rid of his nationality, and the usages of the French stage, though he tried hard. But he sang splendidly, and that made amends. Indeed, we may question if ever "Die Meistersinger" has been sung anything like so well as at Covent Garden. For once, Wagner's vocal music—there is vocal music in this comic opera—had a chance and made its due effect. The accessories were generally adequate, and the production of "Die Meistersinger," drawbacks notwithstanding, takes rank as the memorable event of the season. The house closed on the 27th ult.

LYCEUM THEATRE—"OTELLO."

WHEN Verdi's "Otello" was produced at La Scala, Milan, two years and six months ago, the opera received at our hands a full measure of attention, and the reader who now desires to know our opinion upon it, as well as to make acquaintance with the leading features of the work, has only to refer to THE MUSICAL TIMES of that date. Our task, therefore, in connection with Mr. Mayer's introduction of "Otello" to London, is a simple one. In the first place, we desire to congratulate a really "enterprising impresario" upon the great courage with which he brought to England, not only the principal artists, but the orchestra, chorus, and even the "supers" of the great Milan theatre. The expense must have been enormous, and we are right glad to hear that, if the speculator has not gained much by his venture, neither has he lost. With regard to the first performance, which took place on the 5th ult., under the direction of Mr. Faccio, we may begin by stating that it was not ideally perfect, owing to the inadequate representation of Desdemona. Madame Cataneo did not satisfy the general conception of the heroine's appearance, nor was her acting, though intelligent enough, such as to excite the necessary measure of sympathy. Her singing, affected by a pronounced tremolo, gave, perhaps, the least satisfaction of all, and it may justly be said on the whole, while taking due note of merit having its origin in ripe experience, that the general representation of "Otello" lost rather than gained by Madame Cataneo's presence. Mr. Tamagno and Mr. Maurel, as Otello and Iago respectively, deepened the impression made at Milan. The tenor's voice and style, big and blustrous at La Scala, were overwhelmingly so in the smaller area of the Lyceum; but Mr. Maurel gained by the change, since his admirable facial expression and by-play were more under the eye and better appreciated. Beyond doubt, the French artist's Iago is the most finished and subtle impersonation on the present lyric stage. The minor parts were well sustained, and, as the chorus and orchestra were thoroughly up to their work, it may be conceived that, notwithstanding the blemishes we have pointed out, Verdi's opera was so presented to the London public as that a fair and adequate idea could be formed of its character. Whether "Otello" will have a place in the permanent repertory of Anglo-Italian Opera remains to be seen, and there are many who doubt it. We are of the number. Lyric dramas founded on Shakespeare have never been fortunate in England, and we fail to see anything in "Otello" likely to break the spell. In plain words, the opera, though masterly and interesting to musicians, is not adapted for popularity in the present state of public taste.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

As the Orchestral Concert in St. James's Hall, on the afternoon of the 26th ult., was taking place just as we were going to press, it is impossible to enter into details, but a brief record may be given of an extremely interesting programme. The most prominent piece was Weber's Hymn "In Constant order," which was performed for the first time in this country. This work was composed in 1812, several years before the composer made his first success in opera; but, although it bears but little trace of the mature Weber manner, it is extremely effective, and the excellent contrapuntal writing in the final fugue, "When storms are loud," shows that, had he elected to adopt the oratorio style, he might have won as much distinction as in the lyric drama. The performance gave evidence of very careful preparation, the choir being strengthened for the occasion by some members of the Novello Choir, and under the masterly direction of Dr. A. C. Mackenzie the work received full justice, and was warmly applauded. Of the four soloists the most promising was Miss Agnes Wilson, the soprano, a pupil of Mr. Shakespeare. The programme generally was very carefully arranged, and included, among compositions by students, a Romance for orchestra by Mr. Cuthbert Nunn; a Ballade, also for orchestra, by Mr. Learmont Drysdale; and an Andante from a Symphony, by Mr. Reginald Steggall. Mr. David Hughes (baritone), Mr. Henry Ward (bass), and Miss Emily Squire (mezzo-soprano) were perhaps the best of the vocal aspirants, and Mr. W. L. Lamb and Miss Rose Meyer of the pianists.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

THE sixth annual meeting of the corporation was held at Marlborough House on the 18th ult., the Prince of Wales, president, in the chair. Among the members of the corporation and the council present were Prince Christian, the Duke of Westminster, Lord Charles Bruce, Lord Aberdare, the Hon. G. W. Spencer Lyttelton, the Hon. J. Baring, Sir Richard Wallace, Sir Francis Cook, Sir Thomas Lucas, Sir John Stainer, Sir Daniel Cooper, Sir C. E. G. Philips, Baron de Reuter, Alderman Sir W. Lawrence, M.P., Sir Donald A. Smith (Montreal), Sir Andrew Fairbairn (Leeds), Mr. J. Barnby, Mr. Charles Stuart-Wortley, M.P., Mr. W. G. Cusins, Mr. T. P. Chappell, Mr. E. W. Hamilton, C.B.; Professors Bridge and Parry; the Masters of the Carpenters' Company, the Broderers' Company, and the Ironmongers' Company; Lady Ellis, and Sir George Grove (director).

Mr. Charles Morley, the hon. secretary, read the report of the Council, which stated that, in compliance with the provisions of the charter, they had elected the following gentlemen as their colleagues, viz.:—Mr. Horace Farquhar, vice Sir John Rose; Lord Aberdare, vice Sir Thomas Gladstone; Mr. Alfred Littleton, vice Mr. Carl Rosa. The Council had much pleasure in being able once more to report substantial progress in the work of the College. The Director had reported most favourably both of the conduct and of the progress of the pupils. The Council were gratified to state that negotiations were in progress for conducting local examinations in music throughout the country by the Royal Academy of Music and the Royal College of Music, acting in conjunction for that purpose, under the sanction of the Prince of Wales as President. In their last report the Council announced the munificent gift by Mr. Samson Fox of £30,000 for a new collegiate building, and the grant of a site by Her Majesty's Commissioners of 1851. They had now very great pleasure in stating that Her Majesty's Commissioners had granted a larger and more valuable site than that referred to, and that Mr. Samson Fox, in order that the new college buildings might be worthy of the improved site, had increased his original gift by £15,000, and had handed the sum of £45,000 to his Royal Highness the President. The Council tendered their sincere acknowledgments both to Mr. Fox for his splendid gift and to the Commissioners for enabling them to employ that gift according to the intentions of the donor. With regard to the finances, it appeared that the total capital invested amounted to £124,623, and that the available balance of revenue account in hand was £3,198, being an increase of £533 over last year.

In moving the adoption of the report, the Prince of Wales said: "You have heard the report that has been read to you by the Hon. Secretary, and the audited balance-sheets, and, from what appears therein, I think we may congratulate ourselves that the affairs of the College are in a most satisfactory condition."

The Prince of Wales replied to a vote of thanks, and then presented the Hopkinson Gold Medal to Miss Polyxena Fletcher, and certificates of proficiency to various students bearing the title of Associate of the Royal College of Music.

THE "TAMING OF THE SHREW" BY THE STUDENTS OF THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

THE earnest and intelligent efforts of the authorities at this establishment, to prepare young performers for the operatic stage, deserve the utmost sympathy, although the foundation of a really national opera seems as far off as ever. If the performances of "The Water Carrier," "Der Freischütz," and "The Merry Wives of Windsor" in former years merited praise, that of Goetz's "Taming of the Shrew," at the Prince of Wales's Theatre, on the 10th ult., should receive even higher commendation on various grounds. In the first place, it was a treat to hear this beautiful work again, after an interval of more than nine years. Though Mr. Carl Rosa did not find it expedient to continue it in his repertory, there is assuredly a future for an opera so full of lovely melody, masterly part-writing, and delicious orchestration. "The Taming of the Shrew" may fairly compare among humorous operas with "Die Meistersinger," and although the score is less complicated than that of Wagner's masterpiece, it is exceedingly difficult and elaborate, and is certainly not to be taken in hand lightly. How long and ardently the Royal College professors and scholars must have laboured at the work may be gathered when we say that, in a technical sense, it had been fully mastered. Principals, band, and chorus were note-perfect, and the mingled intelligence and enthusiasm of all concerned made the performance extremely interesting even where faults due to inexperience were inevitably noticeable. This was, of course, the case with regard to the representatives of the two principal characters, though it is only fair to say that Miss Emily Davies as Katherine and Mr. John Sandbrook as Petruchio both exerted themselves to much effect, the lady being most at home in the quieter passages, such as the air in the last act, while the gentleman displayed an excellent baritone voice. Perhaps the greatest promise was shown by Miss Maggie Davies as Bianca, Mr. Lem-priere Pringle as Hortensio, and Mr. Alfred C. Peach as the Tailor; the first and last for their natural stage capacity, and Mr. Pringle for a voice of exceptionally fine quality. The whole of the performers had been very carefully trained in their duties, and the orchestra and chorus were excellent, the former mainly and the latter wholly consisting of past and present students. The performance was conducted by Professor Villiers Stanford, who had every reason to feel satisfied with the result of his labours.

MR. EMIL BACH'S CONCERT.

MADAME SEMBRICH made her first—and, as it turned out, her only—appearance in London, after a long absence, at an Evening Concert given by Mr. Emil Bach at St. James's Hall, on June 25. The distinguished prima donna had been announced to appear at two Concerts, supported on each occasion by an orchestra under the direction of Mr. W. G. Cusins; but owing, presumably, to the very meagre attendance at the first, the other was abandoned. The programme offered on the date above mentioned was of a sufficiently diversified character, ranging from Mendelssohn's "Hebrides" Overture down to a number of compositions from the pen of the artist in whose name the Concert was given. The latter comprised a Pianoforte Concerto in C minor (first time), a somewhat laboured work, in which Mr. Bach himself sustained the solo; a group of "Carols of Cradleland," set to English words, sung by Miss Lena Little; and a set of three Polish Sketches for orchestra. Naturally, however, the most attractive feature of the evening was the singing of Madame Sembrich, whose voice retains its pristine freshness and charm, and whose vocalisation is not less brilliant than when we last heard her. These qualities were abundantly demonstrated in airs from "Le Nozze" and "Lucia," in addition to Lieder by Mozart, Schumann, and Rubinstein, and a Waltz by Arditi, all of which efforts evoked the heartiest manifestations of pleasure. Miss Lena Little also sang, for the first time, the contralto air written by Mr. Goring Thomas for the intended Berlin production of his opera, Nadeshda—a production unhappily so long delayed that it is now, we hear, unlikely to take place at all, at any rate at the Hof Oper. Some violoncello solos played by M. Hollman, and Mr. Cusins's Concert Overture, "Les Travailleurs de la Mer," completed the scheme.

MADAME BACKER-GRÖNDAHL'S CONCERT.

PRINCES' Hall was well filled on Saturday, the 13th ult., when the gifted Norwegian pianist, who had created so marked an impression at the Philharmonic Concerts, gave her first Chamber Concert in London. Favourable reports concerning Madame Backer-Gröndahl's skill as a composer had been received, and they proved to be accurate. The examples presented on this occasion were seven songs rendered by Miss Louise Phillips and a Suite in G minor for pianoforte. The songs are all more or less charming, and one entitled "Geachtet" pleased so greatly, on account of its Scandinavian character, that it was encored. The Suite is in five movements, of which the most original are the second (a Nocturne) and the fourth (a Minuet). They are all tinged with northern colouring, and the entire work might have been signed by Grieg. The pianist's rendering of some of Schumann's pieces, notably the Nachtstück in F and the Aufschwung, was open to question; but there was something attractive in its unconventionality, heightened by the perfect touch of the executant. Mr. Johannes Wolff contributed some violin solos, and took part with the Concert-giver in Grieg's Sonata in C minor, for pianoforte and violin (Op. 45), which appears to have become a favourite. Its performance on this occasion presented it in the most favourable light.

LONDON SCHOOL BOARD VOCAL MUSIC COMPETITION.

THE Royal Albert Hall was the scene of an interesting exhibition on Wednesday afternoon, the 17th ult. The School Board for London had arranged for a series of school competitions in Swedish drill and choir singing, and the vast hall was thronged by companies of eager school children and their friends and teachers. Of the drill it is sufficient to say here that the rhythmic precision of the children's movements was remarkable. Several of the schools sang whilst moving their arms or bodies somewhat violently. This practice is open to adverse criticism, on the ground that injury is likely to be done to lungs and voices in the effort to sustain musical tone just when the "in and out" breathing must be quick. The conditions of the vocal music competition were that no choir should exceed sixty voices; that each choir should sing a two-part piece at sight, a piece of its own choice, and a three-part arrangement of Mendelssohn's part-song "The Primrose." The prize was a handsome medallion, on which the name of the successful school was to be inscribed. Mr. W. G. McNaught adjudicated. Eight schools, selected, we understand, from eighty that desired to enter, competed. The sight test was an anthem written for the occasion, and, considering the use to which it was to be put, it must be described as outrageously difficult. This being so, it was amazing, as Mr. McNaught remarked in his adjudication, that one school (Crawford Street, Islington) sang the piece through and made only one slight mistake. The chief fault in the execution of the prepared pieces was the loss of pitch that occurred almost constantly. But when all the faults are noted, it is not to be denied that the whole result was a pleasing demonstration of the musical aptitude of the Board School class, and an assurance that the teachers are working enthusiastically and intelligently. The prize was awarded to Crawford Street. The choirs from Bellenden Road, Olga Street (Bethnal Green), Medburn Street, and Fleet Road were highly commended.

GIOVANNI BOTTESINI.

THE death of Giovanni Bottesini, unrivalled as a double-bass virtuoso, and well-known also as a composer and conductor, has put an end to an artistic career which is full of interest and redounds to the credit and glory of the country that gave him birth. Bottesini died at Parma, on the 7th ult., at the age of sixty-six, after a somewhat protracted illness. The Municipality paid him his last honours by officially solemnizing his funeral at the public expense, and the ceremony was rendered still more impressive by the presence of the Prefect of the Province of Parma, of the members of Parliament of the district, and of the municipal representatives of Parma and other cities, who acted as pall-bearers; while the procession was preceded and followed by the various local artistic institutes and associations, with their bands and banners.

Giovanni Bottesini was born at Crema, in Lombardy, on the 24th December 1823, and received his first musical training in harmony and on the violin in his native town, after which, as a boy of thirteen, he entered the Conservatoire of Milan, where he studied the double-bass under Rossi, and harmony and counterpoint under Basili, his musical education being afterwards finished by Vaccai, Basili's successor at the Conservatoire. About 1840 the young artist of seventeen left the Conservatoire and undertook a highly successful concert tour throughout Italy, which occupied nearly four years. At the age of twenty-three he was offered and accepted an engagement as conductor at the Opera House of Havana, where he wrote a comic opera in Spanish, entitled "Christopher Columbus," which achieved considerable success. Upon leaving Havana, Bottesini undertook an extensive concert tour—subsequently several times repeated—in the United States, in North America, and in Mexico, where he was in 1854, at the time when Henrietta Sontag (Countess Rossi) died in the capital of that country.

After his first prolonged stay and various tours in England, he was for several seasons (1855-1857) Conductor at the Italian Opera in Paris; indeed, it was here that he first established his reputation, not only as operatic and orchestral conductor, but also as composer; in which latter capacity he brought out his "Assedio di Firenze," an opera which, if not enthusiastically, was very cordially received. Having been comparatively stationary for two years, Bottesini set out, in 1857, for another concert tour in Germany, Holland, Belgium, France, and England. In the year 1859 he returned to Italy, and produced his comic opera "Il Diavolo della Notte," in Milan, where it had a successful run. Subsequently he filled the post of operatic Conductor in various of the leading theatres both in Europe and America—never, however, omitting an opportunity of showing himself in the concert-room as soloist in his favourite capacity of double bass virtuoso. In 1863 his opera "Marion Delorme," since then also set to music by Ponchielli, was brought out at the Liceo of Barcelona, under his direction. Later on he produced his opera "Ali Baba," in London, and shortly afterwards wrote his "Ode," or "Cantata," in honour of Cavour, which gained the first prize, and on that occasion excited extraordinary enthusiasm in Florence.

Bottesini accepted the Conductorship of the Opera at Cairo, which post he ably filled till 1877, producing an extensive répertoire of leading modern operatic works of the Italian and French school. It is also worthy of notice that Bottesini was the first Conductor to whom Verdi entrusted the direction of "Aida."

Bottesini's best operatic work is undoubtedly his "Ero e Leandro," which was produced first in Turin at the Teatro Regio in 1879; in Rome with Stagno, the celebrated tenor, as Hero, and also in Milan, on which occasion the composer himself played his favourite instrument as a humble member of the orchestra. It was his last appearance in Milan. This opera, "Hero and Leander," derives special interest from the fact that the libretto is by Boito, who originally had intended to set it to music himself, but made it over to Bottesini. In the field of sacred music, Bottesini's most noteworthy work is probably the Oratorio "The Mount of Olivet." Besides these works, Bottesini wrote a model and complete "Method of Double Bass," a "Requiem," and a "Quartet for Stringed Instruments." Indeed, there is hardly any class of composition which he has not touched with more or less success. It appears, moreover, that he has left the score of a new opera, which his friends in Parma have already taken steps to produce.

As a composer, Bottesini could not, and, in his modesty, never pretended to, rise to the lofty level of his friends and countrymen, Verdi, Boito, and Ponchielli; but, on his favourite instrument, the double bass, he was absolutely phenomenal. The beauty of the tone and sound he elicited from that unwieldy instrument, his marvellous facility, not to say agility, in executing the most difficult passages—the grace, elegance, and delicacy of his touch and method, gave proof of the most consummate art and unrivalled talent. He often competed victoriously even with celebrated violinists—as, for instance, in a duet for violin and double bass, of his own composition, which he frequently played with Sivori, and in which his part of the performance invariably electrified the audience. Nothing could be more extraordinary, from a musical point of view, than this match between two instruments so entirely different in tone, size, and character. In precision, dash, accuracy, and withal in the softness of touch and phrasing, Bottesini had no equal on the "contra-basso."

Being, besides a great artist, also a man of the world, and, moreover, kind-hearted and fond of humour, he had an inexhaustible store of anecdotes, the reminiscences of his travels, his triumphs, and his intercourse with royal and other personages with whom, in the course of his artistic peregrinations, he had come in contact. Suffice it to mention only one or two of these stories, which illustrate, more or less, all the rest.

On one occasion, after a concert he had given at the "Kursaal" of Wiesbaden, an English lady, plainly dressed, approached him and said: "Oh, Signor Bottesini, I am charmed with your playing, and should be so glad if you would come some day soon and play at my house." Bottesini, thinking that the lady before him was one of the innumerable "Anglaises" to whose eccentric and extravagant displays of hero-worship he was so accustomed, simply smiled and bowed in silence. "Besides," continued the lady, "I have heard you play before in London." The artist smiled and bowed again. "Yes," persisted the lady, "I heard you play at my mother's." "And who," Bottesini now rejoined, "is your mother, madam, if I may ask?" "The Queen of England," was the quiet and placid reply; whereupon it at last dawned on Bottesini that the lady before him was no other than the Crown Princess of Germany, then staying at Wiesbaden.

Bottesini might have accumulated a large fortune; but he spent his easily acquired gains freely, gave generously, and died comparatively poor. He was not married; and weary at last of his peregrinations and triumphs, he accepted only last year, and chiefly upon Verdi's recommendation, the post of Director of the Parma Conservatoire, to the welfare of which he devoted himself with untiring zeal, while he also acted as Conductor at the Parma Opera House, and in that capacity did much to revive the old reputation of that beautiful theatre for operatic performances of a high order.

Bottesini was, to his very latest hours, fondly attached to his instrument. On the last occasion, a few months ago, when he played at Parma for the benefit of an artistic society, he had a strange presentiment of his approaching end. The resin broke to pieces in his hands as he was rubbing the bow, whereupon he remarked with a sad smile, "There goes the resin; who knows?—soon I may have to go too." His own performance on that evening, though it carried away the audience as usual, did not satisfy him, and he complained to those near him that there was something wrong with his old friend: "It would not act." His presentiment was but too true; for on the very next day he was struck down by fever, from which he never recovered.

OBITUARY.

MR. CARL ZOELLER died on the 13th ult., in consequence of an accident he met with at the Military Tournament at the Agricultural Hall, Islington. He was born in Berlin, March 28, 1840, and came to England in 1873. He was bandmaster of the 7th Hussars and afterwards of the 2nd Life Guards. He was well known as a performer on the viola d'amore, and wrote many compositions for the instrument. He also wrote a work upon its history and the method of playing it. He was the author of a handbook on the "Art of Modulation," and of several works for voices, orchestra, pianoforte, &c., including a lyrical monodrama "Mary Stuart," some masses, a cantata with viola d'amore solo, quartet for strings, quintet for wind instruments, songs, &c.

FRANCIS ROMER, at one time a famous teacher of singing, and a composer, died on the 1st ult. He was born in London on August 5, 1810. He wrote two operas, "Fridolin" and "The Pacha's Bride," and many songs and pieces of part-music, which were published by the firm of Hutchings and Romer, in which he was a partner. His "Physiology of the Human Voice," issued in 1850, went through several editions.

WILLIAM HARRISON, Organist of St. James's Church, Leith, died in Edinburgh of pleurisy, on June 21, after an illness of many weeks' duration. He was the son of Mr. W. Harrison, of Lichfield, and was born in that city in 1841. He was educated as a chorister in the Cathedral, and in due time became a teacher of music in Rugby School and at Liverpool. He was appointed Organist at Leith in 1867, and was Conductor of the Choral Society at Dunfermline. He was an admirable player on the pianoforte and organ. His compositions, both sacred and secular, show him to have been possessed of a vein of originality and artistic taste, and the geniality of his disposition endeared him to all within the circle of his acquaintance, while the good work he did in the promulgation of a knowledge of the art he loved so earnestly will serve to keep his memory green.

CARLOTTA PATTI, the elder sister of Adelina Patti, died in Paris on June 28. Born at Florence in 1840, she made her début in New York in 1861, and was for many years the leading soprano in America. A slight lameness interfered with her career on the operatic stage, but she was famous throughout the world as a concert singer. Her voice was of uniform good quality and of extensive compass. She was married to Mr. de Munck, a violoncello player, in 1879.

The death is announced of Mr. ELISHA WALTON, who at one period was a prominent tenor singer in Manchester and the North of England. He sang with Madame Malibran in her engagement at the Manchester Musical Festival upwards of fifty years ago. Mr. Walton was in the eightieth year of his age.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE newly formed Choral Society has chosen the following works for performance during the coming musical season:—Brahms's "Requiem," Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," the same master's "St. Paul," and Schumann's "Mignon's Requiem." On the 16th ult. the General Committee of the Society met, when a strong Executive Committee was elected, and the first practice was fixed for October 1 next. It was mentioned that 350 honorary, and 240 singing members had already joined. The Conductor of the Society is Mr. George Riseley.

An interesting event connected with music took place on Sunday, the 7th ult., when Mr. and Mrs. Roeckel, of Clifton, celebrated their silver wedding. Mr. Roeckel is the well-known song writer, and Mrs. Roeckel, under the nom de plume of "Jules de Sivrai," is the composer of numerous pianoforte pieces and songs. Both the lady and gentleman in question occupy a deservedly high position as professors of their art in Clifton, where they have resided during the whole of their married life.

Another local musical silver wedding that occurred during the course of the past month was that of Mr. George Chapman, the popular Conductor of the orchestra at the Princes' Theatre.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE only performance I have to chronicle is the last of six Recitals which Miss Clara Lichtenstein has given throughout the session in connection with Charlotte Square Ladies' Institution. A long course of study at the Budapest Conservatorium has equipped her with a comprehensive répertoire, and, as the Recitals had avowedly an educational end in view, she was hampered in no way by popular prejudices. Perhaps a more historical sequence might have been observed in her programmes, although it would have interfered with their variety. Her interpretation of the Brahms Scherzo was her most successful effort at the last Recital, and her rendering of Beethoven's Trio in C minor, with the assistance of Mr. Carl Hamilton and Mrs. Kedzie, was appreciated by the audience. The singing of Miss Georgette Lichtenstein, from the same Conservatorium, has added greatly to the charm and interest of the Recitals. At the last she gave a most beautiful rendering of Mackenzie's "In our boat" (violin-cello obbligato by Mr. Hamilton), and also sang Grieg's "Ich liebe dich" with great expression.

MUSIC IN SOUTH WALES.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE present month has been almost a blank; long evenings and fine weather even have the effect of rendering the rehearsals of the various choral societies less energetic than usual. A few, however, of the larger choral societies are very busy preparing for the great National Eisteddfod struggle next month at Brecon. Two choirs from Dowlais and one from Llanelly will be able to give a good account of themselves. I have not yet heard whether those of Carmarthen and Swansea intend to put in an appearance, but, if they do, South Wales will be well represented. The admirable choir from Swansea which competed at the National Eisteddfod in London two years ago, under the excellent conductorship of Eos Morlais, was disbanded as soon as the contest was over, and the good results that should have been the outcome of such careful training as they received were therefore thrown aside to waste. Innate love of music, per se, appears to form but a very small element indeed in the constitution of your average Welsh musical amateur. Their motto seems to be "competition or nothing," a state of things that should receive serious consideration from the Committee or Directors of the National Eisteddfod. We are sorry to hear that Eos Morlais is out of health and will not conduct any choir at the forthcoming meeting.

At Bridgend Eisteddfod the prize of £100 was won by the Llanelly Choir, conducted by Mr. R. C. Jenkins.

A Society has been formed at Swansea for the promotion of instrumental and vocal music, the principal aim of which is to endeavour to improve the instrumental section, so as to make it equal to the adequate performance of the orchestral portions of oratorios and other works, a matter which has hitherto been very much neglected. We hope in a reasonable time to see a very good orchestra in regular practice. The musical management of the Society is in the experienced and able hands of Mr. W. F. Hulley and Mr. J. Squire, who have been appointed joint Conductors and leaders.

The Cardiff Orchestral Society, under its new and energetic Conductor, Dr. Joseph Parry, appears to be moving forward with increasing spirit. The Society is continuing its rehearsals through the summer months, and has already concluded some very important arrangements for the coming season, which promises to be unusually successful and brilliant.

Two excellent Concerts were given by Mr. Max Heinrich in the Princes' Hall on Saturdays, June 29 and the 6th ult., in which the talented vocalist was assisted by Miss Lena Little, Mr. Willy Hess, and Mr. Schönberger. Among other high-class vocal pieces, Mr. Heinrich brought forward at the first Concert a selection of Brückler's "Young Werner's Rhine Songs" (Op. 2), in which so much promise is shown that it is a misfortune for music that death has already claimed the composer. Two new duets by Mr. Goring Thomas may also be mentioned, as they are very charming, and, as usual with this composer, distinctly French in style. Mr. Schönberger gave a remarkably thoughtful and highly finished rendering of Schubert's "Wanderer" Fantasia (Op. 15). The leading instrumental piece in the second Concert was a Sonata in D minor, for pianoforte and violin, by Mr. Oliver King. We are inclined to regard this work, so far as a first hearing permits any judgment to be formed, as one of the most successful efforts of a musician whose talents will assuredly bring him into the front rank in due time. The first and last movements are full of interesting points, and the Intermezzo is not far behind them. This Sonata is certain to be heard of again. Mr. Hess played Bach's Chaconne extremely well, and a very favourable impression was created by three light but well written pianoforte pieces by Mr. Schönberger.

THE second Concert of the third series by the pupils of the Hyde Park Academy of Music took place at Steinway Hall, on the 4th ult. There was a good attendance. As usual, the singing of Mr. H. F. Frost's choir of young ladies constituted the chief feature of the afternoon's work. Under the tuition of their excellent trainer they had made themselves familiar with such compositions as Hofmann's Cantata "The Song of the Norns," the Chorus of Priestesses (Morning Hymn) from Spontini's "Vestal," and the Evening Song of Maidens from Sullivan's "Martyr of Antioch," repeating, in addition, the selection from Mancinelli's "Isaias," which this choir was the first to render before a London audience. The solos in these various pieces were sustained by Miss E. Wilde, Miss A. Malden, Miss Day, Mrs. Lindley White, and Miss Janet Tatham, while Mr. Frost conducted with his customary care and zeal. Mozart's Trio for violin, viola, and pianoforte was capably executed by Miss Kate Willis, Mr. S. D. Grimson, and Mrs. Thouless. Miss Mary Willis was heard to advantage in an air from Meyerbeer's "Prophète," and Miss Cherry Enriquez exhibited decided talent and a well-marked style in her interpretation of a Prelude and Toccata for pianoforte, by Lachner. Miss Mary Carmichael and Signor Vannucini accompanied.

THERE was a good muster of the students and friends of the College of Organists, on the 19th ult., at Neumeyer Hall, Hart Street, Bloomsbury, when the fellowship diplomas that had been gained by the students were presented by Sir John Stainer. In his address to the students, the Oxford Professor expressed his pleasure at the steady increase in the number of those who submitted themselves for examination, and that despite the constantly increasing severity of the examination. He felt sure the students would also appreciate it, as the value of the diploma would be increased by it, both in its commercial and social respects. Dr. Bridge moved a vote of thanks to Sir John Stainer, which was seconded by Mr. C. Stephens, and carried by acclamation. Sir John Stainer, in reply, expressed his pleasure at seeing so many Royal Academy and Royal College of Music students present, and was glad to know that both these institutions favoured the examinations of the College of Organists. Votes of thanks to Mr. E. H. Turpin, the Hon. Secretary, and Mr. M. E. Wesley, the Hon. Treasurer, for their services, closed the proceedings.

THE Earl of Aberdeen presided at a meeting held in the Music Room of his lordship's residence, on the 5th ult., in support of the Popular Musical Union. The report and balance sheet for the year, presented by Mrs. Ernest Hart, disclosed a highly satisfactory state of affairs. The subscriptions and donations amounted to £256, the concert receipts to £155, and the choral and orchestral class fees to £111; and after payment of all expenses there remained a fair balance in hand to go forward to the credit of the coming year's account. Lord Brassey moved that the report be adopted, this being seconded by Sir E. Hay Currie and supported by the Rev. S. A. Barnett. Cardinal Manning then moved, "That this meeting is of opinion that the development of training in the theory and practice of vocal and instrumental music among the working classes is of great social value and deserves active and influential support." The motion was seconded by Mr. Oscar Wilde and carried unanimously. A vote of thanks to the officers and executive of the Society was moved by the Rev. C. J. Ridgeway, and another to the Chairman by Mr. Hamilton Aide.

An evening performance was given at St. George's Hall, Langham Place, on the 24th ult., by the students of the London Academy of Music, in connection with the annual distribution of medals and diplomas awarded by the Examiners. The Concert, vocal and instrumental, which opened the proceedings, revealed much talent and careful training on the part of not a few of the executants; the rendering by Miss E. Fraser of a Mazurka for pianoforte by Godard, of the Romanza "Non conosco il bel suol" by Thomas, on the part of Miss B. Lindo, as well as the clever violin playing of Miss Mabel Fraser, eliciting more especially well-merited applause. In the absence, through illness, of Madame Marie Roze, who was to have presented the awards, that office was undertaken by Mrs. Wylde, the wife of the Principal. The performance of Wilfred Bendall's operetta "Quid Pro Quo" terminated the entertainment.

MR. HERMANN KLEIN, one of the professors of singing at the Guildhall School of Music, delivered a Lecture before the pupils of that institution in the practice-room of the School, on June 27. He took for his subject "The Revival and Progress of English Opera under the régime of Carl Rosa." Having first described the condition of English Opera a generation or so prior to the year 1875, the lecturer related how Carl Rosa started his opening campaign at the Princess's, and then proceeded to give the history of each London Carl Rosa season down to the last visit to Drury Lane in 1887. Mr. Klein thus traced by clear steps the growth and development of the enterprise set on foot by the late impresario, and showed how, under its influence, English Opera rose higher in the public esteem and attained to a more exalted artistic level than it had ever done before. At the close of his remarks the lecturer was cordially applauded.

THE Association of Tonic Sol-fa Choirs gathered at the Crystal Palace on Saturday, June 29, and gave a Concert in the Handel Orchestra. The voices taking part numbered about 3,000, Mr. L. C. Venables conducting, while Mr. H. W. Weston, Mus. Bac., F.C.O., did excellent work at the organ. Mendelssohn's "Athalie" was performed (of course without the recited verses, which would have been lost in so vast an area), and, apart from an admirable rendering, the event derived special interest from the first performance of an unpublished fugue, originally intended by Mendelssohn to have formed part of the Finale of "Athalie." The fugue, an elaborate and well-worked out composition, was capably sung by the choir to an organ accompaniment. The vocal soloists of the afternoon were Miss Clara Leighton, Miss Clara Dowle, and Madame Annie Leighton.

MR. JOHANNES SCHUBERT, a pianist hailing from Dresden, made his début in this country at a Recital, which he gave at Steinway Hall, on the 3rd ult. Unlike Madame Geisler-Schubert, he does not, as far as we are aware, claim descent from the illustrious Viennese composer. He is comparatively young, and has been trained in a good school, his playing being marked by sound technique, a clear intellectual style, and, when occasion requires, great brilliancy of execution. Mr. Schubert's reading of Beethoven's Sonata in F minor (Op. 57) met with general approval; it was straightforward, earnest, and interesting. In some Chopin pieces and Schumann's "Carnival" the player seemed thoroughly in sympathy with his task, and his touch was delightfully crisp and neat. He also executed some well-written pieces of his own, and Saint-Saëns's arrangement of the Ballet music from Gluck's "Alceste."

SIGNOR DE PICCOLELLIS, a violoncellist of exceptional ability, gave a Concert at the Steinway Hall on the afternoon of the 15th ult., and secured a large and fashionable audience, partly drawn together, it may be, by the announcement that Signor Tosti would sing for the only time in public this season. The popular song-composer confined himself to a selection of his own ballads; but his hearers were fully satisfied, for he was twice encored. Signor de Piccolellis played Servais's somewhat tedious Concerto in A minor, and pieces by Popper and Davidoff, in a manner that showed his ample command of his instrument, and that his tone is of excellent quality. Signor Papini and Signor Albanesi contributed some violin and pianoforte solos respectively, and took part with the Concert-giver in two movements of Rubinstein's Trio in B flat (Op. 52).

THE so-called "Matinée Recital" given by Miss Agnes Huntington at the Whitehall Rooms, Hotel Metropole, on the 17th ult., showed the talented American contralto in the light of an artist capable of something higher than the work which falls to her share in Mr. Planquette's comic opera "Paul Jones." Her voice, inclining more perhaps to the timbre of a mezzo-soprano than a contralto (though limited in the compass of the head register for the former class of organ), has been trained in a good school, and Miss Huntington is not only a refined vocalist, but capable of rare depth and variety of expression. She much impressed her numerous auditory and was the recipient of frequent and cordial applause. Mr. Ben Davies, Mr. Alec Marsh, and M. Johannes Wolff also appeared.

WE have much pleasure in stating that Festivals in aid of the Choir Benevolent Fund will be held at Exeter, on October 8, at Plymouth on October 9, and at Harrow on October 24. The Society is established for the purpose of rendering assistance to its members and their families in time of need, as well as to provide a fund for the payment of sums of money on the death of a member. The stipends paid to the members of the several choirs are not large enough to allow them to make much provision for their families, and the Choir Benevolent Fund, aided by outside contributions, is able to augment the small savings of the members. For the purposes of this design, choral festivals, in which the members of the various choirs lend their help, are occasionally given. By these means the objects of the Fund are brought prominently before the public.

MR. SIMS REEVES gave a Concert on the 6th ult., at St. James's Hall, and, as a matter of course, there was a very large attendance. Of the share taken in the programme by the popular tenor himself there is little to be said. Everyone knows how he sings "The Message" and "Come into the garden, Maud." He also took part with Mr. Lloyd and Mr. Ben Davies in Curschmann's curious Trio for tenors, "Evviva." One of the most attractive features of the Concert was the remarkably refined singing of the Boston Lotus Glee Club. The ensemble was perfect. A highly favourable impression was made by Miss Hélène de Duncan, a pianist from St. Petersburg. Miss van Zandt, Madame Sterling, and Mr. Foli also took part in the Concert, and Mr. Henry Irving and Mr. J. L. Toole gave recitations.

A NEW Association, styling itself the London Military Band, gave a trial performance before an invited audience at the Princes' Hall, on the 22nd ult., and fully justified its formation by the conspicuous merit of a series of efforts almost unsurpassable in their way. The force is composed of wind instrument players formerly attached to regimental bands, and now belonging to various theatrical and other orchestras. In the programme were such pieces as the March from Mackenzie's "Story of Sayid," the Overture to "William Tell," Weber's "Invitation à la Valse," and the Ballet music from "Faust." The Conductor is Mr. John Hill, who may be congratulated on the successful inauguration of the enterprise. The London Military Band is certain to be in great request, particularly at open air gatherings.

A VIOLIN and Pianoforte Recital was given by Mr. Nachèz and Mr. Arthur Friedheim at the Princes' Hall, on the 1st ult. Unfortunately it was the Shah's week, when all ordinary performances suffered, and the audience was depressingly small. It may have been owing to this cause that Mr. Nachèz was not at his best, his intonation and execution of rapid passages in Beethoven's "Kreutzer" Sonata, Max Bruch's Concerto in G minor (No. 1), and Bach's Sonata in G minor being very incorrect. Mr. Friedheim played in a solid and accurate manner, so far as regards his notes, but he did not succeed in making Liszt's Rhapsodical piece, miscalled a Sonata in B minor, satisfactory or interesting. Altogether the performance did not leave a very favourable impression on the mind.

A CHORAL Festival was held in St. Barnabas' Church, South Kennington, on Sunday, June 30, when the choir of the church was assisted by the members of the Choral Society. The Canticles were sung to Tours in F, and after the sermon selections from Schubert's "Miriam," Barnby's "Rebekah," and Farmer's "Christ and His Soldiers" were given. The solos were taken by Miss L. Jecks, Miss Williamson, and the Rev. St. Clare Hill. The whole of the service, including the Canticles, Hymns, and selections, was accompanied by an efficient orchestra of twenty performers, in addition to the organ. Mr. Fred. W. Lacey, the Organist of the Church, conducted, and Mr. Sydney R. Young, the Assistant Organist, presided at the organ.

MR. WALDEMAR MEYER gave his final Concert of the season at St. James's Hall, on the evening of the 4th ult., the programme consisting of chamber music. He played with Miss Marian Osborn (a clever ex-student at the Royal College) Handel's Violin Sonata in A and Brahms's new Duet-Sonata in D minor (Op. 108), both works being performed with admirable technical skill and finish. Mr. Meyer also displayed his powers of virtuosity with entire success in solos by Bach, Spohr, Viotti, and Zarzky. The vocal element of the Concert was sustained by Madame Patey and Miss Wakefield, the latter lady evoking unqualified approval for her rendering of Schumann's Lieder-Cyclus, "Frauenliebe und Leben." Mr. Sydney P. Waddington was at the pianoforte.

THE second Vocal Recital of Miss Herminie Spies on the 2nd ult., at St. James's Hall, did not attract such a large audience as could have been wished; but the special entertainments given in connection with the Shah's visit drew away a large portion of the public just at this time. The most interesting feature of an admirable programme was Schumann's cycle of songs "Auswahl aus der Dichterliebe." Other pieces by Weber, Schubert, Franz, Massenet, and Brahms were given in equally faultless style, and the next visit of Miss Spies will be awaited with much interest. Mr. Theodor Frantzen was a competent accompanist, and Miss Zimmermann contributed some pianoforte solos in her usual artistic manner.

THE annual meeting of the Guild of Organists took place on Thursday, June 27, at Lonsdale Chambers, 27, Chancery Lane. Mr. J. T. Field, the Sub-Warden, occupied the chair. The Hon. Secretary, Mr. Moreton Hand, read the annual report. Mr. Field stated that owing to the difficulty in getting in the subscriptions, a balance sheet had not been prepared, but there was a balance in favour of the Society. The following members of the Council, who retired under Law XI., were re-elected:—Messrs. Grey, Harding, Hand, Lawrence, Pinney, Vinning, and Vaughan. Messrs. J. Warriner, F. Townsend, and H. Young, B.A., were elected new members of the Council. A vote of thanks to the Chairman terminated the proceedings.

THERE is little to be said respecting the new series of Festival Plays at Bayreuth, which commenced on Sunday, the 21st ult., as the performances consist merely of works given in previous years. The Festival was opened with "Parsifal," in which Herr van Dyck repeated his splendid impersonation of the hero, and Madame Materna her intelligent conception of Kundry. Next day "Tristan und Isolde" was given, Herr Vogl and Madame Sucher resuming their unsurpassable embodiments of the two leading characters; and on the 24th "Die Meistersinger." The little Bavarian town is crammed with visitors, and the demand for seats considerably in advance of any previous series.

THE Music Scholarships at the Mary Datchelor Collegiate School, Camberwell, have been awarded this year to Miss Grace Keeble (pianoforte pupil of Miss Fitch) and to Miss Marion Kitching (singing pupil of Miss Bessie Cox). In the latter competition, two students (Misses Emily Bullock and Amy McDowall) received special prizes; while in the former Miss Jessie Foster and Miss Rose Campbell earned honourable mention. Miss Fitch, the superintendent of the music teaching in the Datchelor School, is to be congratulated on the successes achieved by her students, three of whom have won honours in the Royal Academy Local Examination, and eight out of nine sent up have passed.

SIR CHARLES HALLÉ brought his Concerts to a close on Friday, June 28, with a familiar programme, including Brahms's Quintet in F minor (Op. 34), Beethoven's "Kreutzer" Sonata, Handel's Violin Sonata in A, which surely might give place for a time to some of its companions which are never heard, and Schumann's delightful "Wald-scenen" for pianoforte alone. The executants were the same as on previous occasions, and no one would wish for any changes. Sir Charles Hallé's season has been exceptionally interesting, the production of the three hitherto unknown Quartets of Cherubini being sufficient in itself to give distinction to a series of Chamber Concerts.

THE opera season at Her Majesty's Theatre closed abruptly, though it can scarcely be said unexpectedly, on June 29. The announcement that Madame Sembrich had been engaged gave ground for hope that Mr. Mapleson might yet retrieve his fortunes; but the prima donna was taken ill and could not appear, and as the public showed very scant interest in the faded operas upon which Mr. Mapleson was relying, there was no choice but to close the house. The experience of the season affords a valuable lesson to managers which it is to be hoped they will learn and inwardly digest.

AN interesting Concert was given at the Steinway Hall, on June 26, by the pupils of Mr. Arnold Dolmetsch. The programme was eminently educational in design, and included the Overture and Ballet Music from Purcell's "Dioclesian," Corelli's Sonata in F (No. 10), and several compositions by the Concert-giver, among which were four clever pieces for string band, capitably rendered by about thirty young players. Among the soloists may be mentioned Miss Dolmetsch, who, although a mere child, showed great promise on the violoncello; and Miss Buzzard, who has the making of an excellent violinist.

It is gratifying to be able to announce that the fund formed to perpetuate the memory of the late Sir Frederick Ouseley has been warmly taken up by many influential musicians and others. The Musical Committee, of which Mr. Alfred Littleton is Chairman, comprises, amongst others, the names of Mr. J. Barnby, Dr. W. A. Barrett, Dr. J. F. Bridge, Dr. H. J. Edwards, Sir George Grove, Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, Dr. G. C. Martin, Sir Herbert Oakeley, Dr. Hubert Parry, Sir John Stainer, Sir Robert Stewart, and Sir Arthur Sullivan. Mr. H. King is the Secretary.

ON Wednesday, June 26, Schubert's "Song of Miriam" and the 34th Psalm, for soli and chorus, composed by Mr. J. P. Attwater, were sung at Clapham Congregational Church. The soloists were Master Charles Steward, Mr. R. Currie, Mr. F. Shortland, and Mr. G. Brown. This was the first performance of the Psalm, and Mr. Attwater is to be congratulated on having achieved success. The choruses were rendered by the choir of the church, under the direction of Mr. Clement Colman. Mr. J. P. Attwater presided at the organ.

A VERY attractive Bazaar and Garden Fête was held from the 17th to the 20th ult. in the grounds of the North-East London Institute School of Music, Science, and Art, in aid of the funds for providing a new building, the present accommodation having become insufficient to meet its demands. The opening ceremony was conducted on the 17th by Mrs. H. L. Lawson, and on the 18th by Dr. A. C. Mackenzie. The School of Music (Principal, Mr. Ebenezer Prout) now numbers over thirty Professors, and is doing most successful work.

MR. W. DE MANBY SERGISON gave his fifth annual Concert on June 26, at Princes' Hall, assisted by a number of talented artists, both vocal and instrumental. The highly interesting programme which was provided included Beethoven's Sonata for pianoforte and violin in F major (Mr. Tivadar Nachéz and the Concert-giver), Rubinstein's "Salon Stücke," for pianoforte and violoncello (Mr. Leo Stern and the Concert-giver), Chopin's Scherzo in C minor for pianoforte (Miss Jeanne Douste), and vocal solos by Concone, Diaz, Haydn, Clay, and others.

MR. JOHN THOMAS gave his annual Harp Concert on June 29, at St. James's Hall. The programme, as usual, contained pieces for a band of harps, also a charming Trio for harp, violin, and organ, and two harp duets by the Concert-giver. Among those who took part in the programme, which, to a considerable extent, was made up of familiar ballads, were Madame Valleria, Madame Edith Wynne, Miss Liza Lehmann, Miss Eleanor Rees, Mr. Hirwen Jones, Mr. Daniel Price, and Misses Clara and Marianne Eissler.

THE Plain Song and Mediæval Music Society held a meeting in the College Hall, Westminster, on the 15th ult., when an able and exhaustive paper on the subject of Gregorian music was read by Mr. H. B. Briggs, the Hon. Secretary of the Society. A part of the Society's work is to publish fac-similes of ancient manuscripts containing examples of Plain Song, and in this way good service may be rendered to the history of church music. It should be added that some specimens of Gregorian Chant were excellently sung by a small male voice choir.

AN excellent performance of "Elijah" was given at St. Peter's Church, Eaton Square, on the 5th ult., by the three parochial choirs, under the conductorship of Mr. de Manby Sergison, the talented Organist of St. Peter's. There was a full (professional) orchestra who, with the chorus, numbered some 230 executants. The soli were rendered by Masters Ling, Wood, and Major, Messrs. Sarjeant, Gregory Hast, and Charles Ackerman, all of them members of Mr. Sergison's choir; the admission having been free and without ticket.

ON Wednesday evening, the 3rd ult., a Concert-Lecture, "Mendelssohn," was given in the large Lecture Theatre of the Birkbeck Literary Institution by Mr. W. G. Pye, which was interspersed with selections from the composer's works performed by Madame Ellen Lamb, Miss Leslie Trowbridge, Mr. Sidney Barnby, Mr. Reynolds Wood, and Mr. J. N. Clarke as vocalists, and by Miss L. Budden, Miss Elsie Evans, and Mr. Twyford Taylor as pianists.

ON the 20th ult. Miss Annie Marriott was married, at St. Matthias Church, Earl's Court, to Mr. Percy Palmer, a tenor singer favourably known on the Concert platform. The service was fully choral, and it included the air "Be thou faithful unto death," from Mendelssohn's "St. Paul," sung by Mr. Harper Kearton. Dr. Bridge, of Westminster Abbey, and Mr. J. Mallitt Jones shared the duties of Organist.

MR. EDWIN HOLLAND'S Sixteenth Annual Matinée took place on June 28, at Portman Rooms, Baker Street, there being the usual numerous array of artists and pupils to assist the Concert-giver. The programme, albeit somewhat lengthy, presented many interesting features, which the audience were not slow to appreciate.

REVIEWS.

Novello's Short Anthems. Nos. 1 to 12.
[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THE object of this new publication is, we are told, "to meet the want of short and easy Anthems adapted to the Church's Seasons, and suitable especially for Introits." Great as the advance has been during the past generation both as regards the multiplicity and efficiency of church choirs, there are still, and probably ever will be, a large number of churches and chapels where choral music can only be introduced in a very modest manner, and perhaps only at important seasons. These short Anthems may therefore serve a double purpose: they cannot fail to fulfil the special end for which they are issued—namely, providing choirs with a regular series of Introits, reasonable in length and musicianly in structure; while they will be found suitable for use in places where only on special occasions can any departure be made from the usual routine of congregational music. The words have not been restricted to those of the Introits in use in ancient times, and in general estimation this freedom will be regarded as wise. It is also as well that the Anthems should not at present be arranged strictly in ecclesiastical sequence, as they will have to find their way gradually into use in ordinary choirs. The present instalment includes examples for Advent, Lent, Easter, Whitsuntide, Trinity Sunday, Saints' days, and general use. Among the composers are Dr. Garrett, Dr. Bridge, Mr. Baptiste Calkin, Dr. Martin, Dr. F. E. Gladstone, Mr. Harford Lloyd, Mr. Luard Selby, Mr. E. H. Thorne, and Mr. Berthold Tours. The names of such musicians are a guarantee of the excellence of the compositions. We may single out "Who are we, O Lord?" by Mr. Harford Lloyd; "Beloved, now are we," by Mr. E. H. Thorne; "Grant, we beseech thee," by Mr. J. Booth; and "The pillars of the earth," by Mr. Berthold Tours, for special mention, though where all are excellent it seems invidious to make distinction. It is easy to predict that a large sphere of usefulness is waiting for this new series of Anthems.

Theoretico-Practical Elementary Pianoforte School, for Students of the Lower, Middle, and Upper Grades. Prepared by Heinrich Germer (with the co-operation of B. Boekelman). [Leipzig: C. F. Leede.]

THE general scope of this work is sufficiently indicated by its title. We have before pointed out in these columns what we consider the leading characteristics of Herr Germer's workmanship—viz., a thorough mastery of his subject, combined with the comparatively rare qualities of lucidity of exposition, and a most rational arrangement and condensation of the "material" before him. These qualities are again fully displayed in the present volume, which, while by no means ignoring the well-tried precepts of the old school of pianoforte playing, endeavours to supply, even in the preparatory stage of the student's training, the ever-increasing demands made upon him by the modern development of the art. In this connection—i.e., in view of the immense strides effected in the technique of the instrument in these latter days—the judicious condensation of the requisite material, alluded to above, becomes a matter of the highest importance in modern tuition, one of the first aims of which should be to economise the time and energies of the pupil. The due recognition of this principle, the attractive nature of the material selected for practice, together with the clear and incisive instructions conveyed in the letterpress, render the present "Pianoforte School" a most valuable adjunct to the tuition of a conscientious master, desirous of keeping pace with the times.

There is no indication of the extent of Herr Boekelman's co-operation in the compilation of the volume before us. To judge from the conspicuous type in which Herr Germer's name appears on the title-page, as well as from other indications, he should certainly be credited with the lion's share in an eminently useful work. It only remains to acknowledge the ability displayed by the translator in the by no means easy task of rendering the German text, with its numerous technicalities, into very presentable English; and to join our wishes with those expressed by the author at the conclusion of his preface—viz., "May this Manual then go forth, and faithfully co-operate in the successful development of the musical capacities of young pianists, that they may not only learn to listen to musical art-works with intelligence and lively interest, but may also be able to interpret them in an enjoyable manner at the instrument."

Original Compositions for the Organ. Nos. 113—118.
[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THE usefulness of this publication is proved by the rapidity with which fresh numbers are issued, and it is highly creditable to organists that new compositions are now received with interest, reliance having been at one time placed chiefly upon transcriptions, with perhaps a modest substratum of Bach and Mendelssohn to give an air of dignity to the player's repertory. We will glance briefly through the series of new pieces indicated above. Nos. 113 to 116 contain twelve "characteristic pieces" by Rheinberger. It is almost needless to say that the characteristics of German organ music are solidity and dignity rather than showiness; but, while Rheinberger's pieces are marked by the qualities first-named, the composer is essentially a modern musician, and in several the melody and the harmonies show the influence of late nineteenth century developments. Perhaps the most effective are the piquant canzonetta in No. 113, the duetto in No. 114, and the pastorale in No. 115. The composer follows Mendelssohn's excellent plan in suggesting rather than fixing the stops to be employed. Mr. George Calkin's Festal March (No. 117) is bright and tuneful. Mr. Battison Haynes's Romance (No. 118) is a charming piece, perhaps slightly suggestive of Spohr in the chromatic harmonies, but none the worse on that account.

Twelve Characteristic Pieces. Composed by J. Jacques Haakman. Op. 10. (Albums for Violin and Pianoforte, No. 16.) [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

IT is necessary to minister to the needs of the many students who now take up the violin as a serious study by the production of pieces of various kinds likely to interest them and to make the path of study pleasant. The day has gone by when arrangements of popular airs served the needs of those who longed for something less dry than mere scale practice. Musical knowledge has increased so that melodic pieces not necessarily associated with familiar words are sufficiently understood to be attractive for their own merits. Composers who foresaw the need and provided for it have done a good work; composers who recognise the necessity and continue to supply its demands deserve the earnest thanks of both teachers and masters. The latest addition to Novello's Albums for Violin and Pianoforte, by Mr. Haakman, will be gladly received; if merit has any power of recommendation here is a forcible one indeed. These twelve pieces, varied in style, interesting in effect, and easy to play, are well calculated to develop expressive cantabile playing. They demand no very great technical skill and may be approached by students scarcely out of the initiatory text-book. They may also be enjoyed by those who have advanced sufficiently to be able to bring out their inner musical meaning.

Harvest Cantata. For chorus, semi-chorus, and organ. Composed by George Garrett, M.A., Mus. D. (Op. 20).
[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

IN the forthcoming months Harvest Thanksgiving Services will be general throughout the country, and as music usually occupies a prominent position in such celebrations, there can be no doubt but that so soon as the existence of Dr. Garrett's Cantata is made known it will be eagerly welcomed as most appropriate and valuable. The words are arranged by Dr. Waller, partly from the Scriptures and partly in original verse. There are also a few well-known hymns, such as "Come, ye thankful people," "Lord of the Harvest," and "We plough the fields and scatter," the use of which is optional, as the Cantata is complete without them. Dr. Garrett's music, which occupies about twenty minutes in performance, is very effective, because it is melodious and inspiring, and the solos and recitatives may be sung by a single voice or full. The Cantata so happily fills its requirements that it is without doubt destined to a wide popularity.

The Morning, Evening, and Communion Service in F.
By B. Luard-Selby. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

IN this service we have a truly noble example of genuine church music as it has existed in this country for three centuries, combined with modern feeling and expression. Mr. Selby, however, eschews the procedure of eighteenth century composers, who cut up their settings of the Canticles into little pieces, marked alternately "full" and "verse," and reverts to the style of Gibbons and his contemporaries, so far as regards musical continuity, though never once losing sight of the fact that the object of a musical setting of the sacred offices is to heighten the meaning of the words. Numberless felicitous touches might be quoted, and not once does the composer fall into the errors of accent so common with church composers. In the "Gloria" to the Benedictus, there is such an effective fugato, that it is impossible to help regretting that it was not developed into a regular fugue, though of course Mr. Selby is to be commended for his reticence. It may be as well to add that the service needs a capable choir for its execution; and to those organists and choir-masters who are fortunate enough to preside over such a force, we warmly recommend it.

Bridal March. For the Pianoforte. Composed by T. J. Linekar. [Augener and Co.]

MEDELSSOHN'S Wedding March has for so many years taken its place as the recognised farewell piece to English brides and bridegrooms, that we can readily understand the desire on the part of composers to supply us with another of the same character which, at least in turn, may be selected for performance on these interesting occasions. Unfortunately, however, we cannot say that the work before us is likely to gain this enviable position. A bold, marked subject, a tolerably well contrasted trio, and a return to the original theme, with a contrapuntal accompaniment in octaves, seems the universally accepted model for this class of composition; and all these points are duly observed by Mr. Linekar; but the passages are conventional, and wanting in vigour. No fault, however, can be found with the writing; and the piece may fairly take its place amongst the Marches of the day.

Trio for Violin, Viola, and Violoncello. By J. A. de Orellana. [Charles Woolhouse.]

THE composer of this excellent Trio is a musician of no mean acquirements, and an advanced thinker in the art. He understands how to write effectively for the instruments he has chosen, and also how to invest his work with a proper amount of interest. The Trio opens with a short Adagio in C minor, followed by a spirited Allegro full of joyous phrases for each instrument, all helping to sustain the attractiveness of the design or construction which favours the teaching of the modern school. The Andante in E flat is a beautiful movement, and the Menuetto quasi Allegro is quaint and original, albeit it possesses an old-fashioned flavour. The final Allegro in C minor is as sweet as though it had been written by Haydn or Mendelssohn, yet it possesses no small amount of novel thought. It brings the work to a happy conclusion.

The Album of Twelve German Songs, with English Translations. By Liza Lehmann.

[Stanley Lucas, Weber and Co.]

THIS Album gives evidence of considerable musical taste and ability on the part of the composer. She is already most favourably known as an accomplished vocalist, but these songs show that her musicianship rests upon a firmer foundation than the power to interpret melodious thoughts in an intelligent fashion. The words are from various sources, and the musical treatment is in all cases thoroughly artistic and full of expression. The accompaniments are well written, and the collection is one that is likely to be highly prized by those who appreciate to the fullest extent the value of songs written for higher purposes than those which are influenced by commercial considerations.

Twelve Easy Pieces. By Arnold Dolmetsch. (Albums for Violin and Pianoforte, No. 15.) [Novello, Ewer & Co.]

THE composer of these elegant little pieces has already done good service to violin students by his arrangement of Corelli's Sonatas and other works, and it is therefore with much pleasure that we take the opportunity to recommend some of his original thoughts to those who like to know that which is new. He shows a preference for "old-world" forms in his compositions, such as the Sarabande, Gavotte, Minuet, Bourrée, Sicilienne, Polonaise, and other dance forms. These, with a Romance, a March, a Serenade, a Canon, and a piece of quasi-religious character which is called "Mystica," make up a most interesting collection of pieces of attractive music by no means difficult of execution either for the pianoforte or the violin.

Polacca for three Violins, with Pianoforte accompaniment; Cradle Song; and Lament. By H. Heale.

[Augener and Co.]

THE Polacca is an ingeniously designed piece for three violins, with pianoforte accompaniment. It is not difficult, and will be found extremely useful in violin classes now so popular. Each part may be played separately with the pianoforte accompaniment, or any two together. The "Cradle Song," set to Dr. Watts's well-known words, "Hush! my dear, lie still and slumber," is a graceful simple melody, which seems to be fitly associated with the words. The "Lament," to Shelley's words, "Swifter far than summer's flight," has a very pleasing spontaneous melody, well suited for effective singing. There is much that is indicative of excellent feeling and promise in Miss Heale's music.

The Heart ever Faithful. A Set of Four Songs. Words by R. S. Hichens. Music by Gerard F. Cobb.

[Weekes and Co.]

UNDER this peculiar and not very original title Mr. Gerard Cobb has written four admirable songs, entitled respectively "There is my heart," "Why did you come?" "The last farewell," and "Constancy." They may be sung by soprano or tenor, or mezzo-soprano or baritone, according to the statement upon the title-page, in transposed keys. They are likely, however, to obtain their best effect from a tenor voice, and as they are capable of much when studied and delivered with intelligence, there is no reason whatever why amateurs and even professional singers should not be willing to add these songs to their répertoires. The accompaniments are good and helpful.

Lo, Summer comes again. By J. Stainer. (Octavo Anthems, No. 335.) [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THIS Anthem is intended for harvest or general use, the words being by the Dean of Wells. It is somewhat lengthy, but not very elaborate, no solo voices being required. It opens with a vigorous passage for tenors and basses in unison, which is repeated in full harmony, and developed into a boldly-written chorus principally in diatonic harmony. The next movement is longer and more strictly devotional in character, in accordance with the prayerful nature of the words. After another unison passage for male voices we arrive at the final chorus, in which some use is made of contrapuntal devices, though there is no regularly developed fugue. The peroration is very effective.

Sing unto the Lord. Anthem for Harvest-tide. By E. A. Sydenham. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

IN a month or so from the present time Harvest Thanksgivings will be general, and new compositions of merit suitable for this season will be eagerly sought for. The present example is a full Anthem in three movements, of which the first is the most extended. The style is appropriately bright, but dignified and churchlike, and parish choirs will find the piece quite within their powers.

Serenade (B dur) in vier Satzen, für Pianoforte zu vier Händen. Von Algernon Ashton. Op. 40.

[Berlin: Simrock.]

MR. ALGERNON ASHTON has given to the world many clever things in music, and this Serenade is not the least important of them all. The ideas are well based and thoughtfully carried out. The work for the fingers shows intimate knowledge of the resources of the instrument, and the four parts of the composition, with the help of quaint rhythmical figures and masterly harmony, will make them fascinating and attractive to players, while the charm of the melodies will render them popular with listeners.

The Vale of Flowers. A Pastoral Idyl. By P. Godfrey. [Augener and Co.]

THE music of this Cantata, set for female voices with soli and chorus, is very pretty, effective, and easy to sing. The accompaniments are well written and characteristic. The work of the musician is far superior to that of the versifier, whose design is trite, his images hackneyed, and his rhymes somewhat commonplace.

Trois Morceaux de Salon pour Pianoforte. Par J. Jacques Haakman. [Charles Woolhouse.]

THE title given to these pieces has been so often employed to describe weak, invertebrate, and uninteresting works, that it serves often as a hint to pass them by. These three pieces are so far out of the common as showing good purpose, strengthened and supported by musical skill, that they are satisfactory exceptions to the general rule.

Six Celebrated Pieces. By J. S. Bach. Transcribed for the Harmonium by King Hall. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THESE are arrangements of movements from the Sonatas and Suites for violin and violoncello of the old Leipzig master, and are so skilfully transcribed that persons unacquainted with the originals would never suppose they were not written for the harmonium. Some of them are, perhaps, too light to serve as Voluntaries, but they are all extremely effective.

Soft Voluntaries for the Organ. By George Calkin. Book XII. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

As in all the previous instalments of this publication, we have here six pieces in which dignity and a melodious, elegant style are happily united. They are, perhaps, more even in merit than any of the previous books, and organists will find them very acceptable.

FOREIGN NOTES.

IN view of the Bayreuth performances now in progress, it may not be uninteresting to enumerate the various German operatic institutions, both Royal and Municipal, which have contributed leading members to the body of some three hundred artists taking part in these unique representations. They are the following—viz., Berlin, Herr Betz and Frau Rosa Sucher; Vienna, Herren Hans Richter and Van Dyck and Frau Amalie Materna; Dresden, Herr Gudehus and Frau Therese Malten; Munich, Herren Levi, Strauss, Porges (musical directors), Fuchs, Gura, and Siehr, and Mesdames Dressler and Borchers; Carlsruhe, Herren Felix Mottl and Ernst Wehrle and Frau Reuss-Belce; Darmstadt, Herren Hofmüller and Kranich (technical director); Hamburg, Herr Wiegand; Bremen, Herr Friedrichs; Leipzig, Herr Perron, &c. The largest contingent of orchestral members has been furnished by the Court Theatres of Carlsruhe and Mannheim.

Madame Etelka Gerster is just now the great attraction at the Kroll'sche Theater of Berlin; while at the Friedrich-Wilhelmstadt House, in the same capital, Millöcker's comic operetta "Der Bettel-Student" has been revived, and appears to be as popular as ever.

The Berlin Sing-Akademie has arranged an attractive programme for its Winter Subscription Concerts. Mendelssohn's "Elijah," Handel's "Israel in Egypt," and Blumner's "Abraham" are to be performed, and Bach's Christmas Oratorio will be given at the end of December. The first Concert is to take place on October 25, when "Elijah" will be given.

Johannes Brahms has completed a new work for eight-part chorus a capella, entitled "Fest und Gedenk Sprüche," which is to be first performed at the Music Festival to be held in September next, at Hamburg, under the direction of Dr. Hans von Bülow.

The Swedish Students' Choir of the University of Lund, numbering some thirty-two vocalists, under the direction of Mr. E. Norrmann, has met with a most hearty welcome at Concerts given last month both at Berlin and Leipzig.

Herr Angelo Neumann, the energetic impresario, has arranged for a series of performances at the Berlin Victoria Theatre, his répertoire including Wagner's early opera "Die Feen," Peter Cornelius's comic opera "Der Barbier von Bagdad," and Weber's "Die drei Pintos" (Herr Mahler's version), all of them novelties to Berlin audiences.

M. Saint-Saëns's opera "Henri VIII." having had to be shortened, after production, by about one-half, a French wit suggests that the title should now be Henri IV.

At a recent performance at Bâle of Bach's "St. Matthew Passion Music," the bass soli were sung by Professor Julius Stockhausen, the eminent German singer, well remembered by many amateurs in this country. Herr Stockhausen, who has just completed his sixty-third year, still remains at the head of German concert-singers.

We again read, in Frankfort papers, most eulogistic accounts concerning the pianoforte playing of Mr. Howgrave, the young Englishman of whom mention has been previously made in these columns. At a recent public Concert of the Raff-Conservatorium, Mr. Howgrave (who is still a pupil of that institution) played, inter alia, Beethoven's Variations in E flat major (Op. 35) in a manner which, says the Frankfurter Zeitung, "entitles him to the first place amongst the executants of the three days pupil performances. We seldom have heard Beethoven," adds the journal in question, "interpreted in a more truly classical style, and then only by mature artists."

Herr Felix Mottl, the eminent German Conductor, proposes to perform next season, at the Carlsruhe Hof-Theater, Berlioz's opera "Les Troyens" in its entirety. The performance will be an event in the musical world, as the work has hitherto been produced only in an enormously curtailed condition, notably at the Théâtre-Lyrique, of Paris, years ago, where the first and second acts were entirely omitted.

At the Imperial Opera of Vienna, three operas of French origin will obtain a first performance during the coming season—viz., Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini," Bizet's "Les Pêcheurs de Perles," and M. Paladilhe's "Patrie."

Capellmeister Riccius, of Dresden, has been appointed librarian of the important musical library belonging to the King of Saxony, whereof the late Professor Fürstenau had been for so many years the highly esteemed custodian.

The Order of the Iron Crown has been conferred by the Emperor of Austria-Hungary upon Antonin Dvorák.

M. Ambroise Thomas is just now engaged upon the composition of a new opera, "Circe" (a Spanish subject, the libretto by Jules Barbier), which is to be brought out next year by the Opéra Comique Company.

M. Gounod is said to have declined, at the eleventh hour, the setting to music of the prize-poem written in glorification of the Revolution Centenary. "Quatre-Vingt-Treize" is the title of M. Theodore de Banville's verses, but the veteran French composer finds himself unable to make anything of them.

Forty recent performances at the Paris Opéra of M. Gounod's "Roméo et Juliette" have brought the exchequer of that establishment the sum of no less than 800,000 francs.

M. Tomas Breton's opera "Gli Amanti di Ternel," recently brought out with great success at Madrid, has just met with an equally favourable reception at Barcelona.

Performances of what is called "picturesque music" are just now being given at the Paris Trocadéro, among the home and foreign instrumentalists being the Provençal Tambourine Players and the "Muntere Musikanten," or Joyous Musicians of Finland. The Finn students come from the University of Helsingfors, and they have had a genial reception from the students of Paris, as well as from the Exhibition authorities.

Mr. Ambroise Thomas's music to the new ballet "La Tempête" (founded upon Shakespeare's "Tempest") continues to be the attraction at the Paris Grand Opéra, abounding, as the score of the work does, with graceful melodies and most effective instrumentation.

Pablo de Sarasate and Eugene d'Albert have just signed an engagement for a joint concert-tour in the United States of America during the coming winter.

The Swedish composer, Ivar Hallström, has just completed an opera, "Neaga," the libretto of which is from the pen of "Carmen Sylva," the well-known nom de plume of Queen Elizabeth of Roumania. The Royal authoress is now engaged upon another operatic text, founded upon a Swedish popular legend, for which M. Hallström is likewise to furnish the music.

The so-called Baruzzi prize, instituted at Bologna, has been conferred, for the year 1888, upon Signor Emilio Pizzi, for the composition of an opera entitled "William Ratcliff." The composer is a native of Bergamo and a pupil of Ponchielli.

An opera on the subject of "King Lear," composed by Signor Antonio Cagnoni, will be produced at Genoa next spring.

A Conservatoire of Music is about to be established at Buenos Ayres.

Rubinstein's latest opera, entitled "Goruscha," will be produced at St. Petersburg during the composer's jubilee celebrations.

The Société de Musique, of Brussels, has just celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of its foundation, during which period it has rapidly developed into a truly representative national institution. M. Peter Benoit, for twenty-three years the musical Director of the Society, has written a Cantata, entitled "De Rhyn," in commemoration of the event.

Wagner's "Tristan und Isolde" and "Die Meistersinger" will be produced during the approaching season at Buda Pesth, in the Hungarian language, after which the performance of the entire series of Wagnerian music-dramas is to be represented at the Hungarian National Theatre.

A new opera, "Florence," whereof Madame Helen Manletell is the composer, has been brought out with success at the Royal Theatre of Stockholm.

Herr Nikolaus Oesterlein, the well-known proprietor of the unique "Richard Wagner Museum" at Vienna, is just now engaged upon the completion of the third volume of his "Wagner Bibliographie," which will comprise a (relatively) complete record of the existing literature, in books, pamphlets, and periodicals, concerning the Bayreuth master and his works.

A new edition (the third) of Otto Jahn's standard biography of Mozart is about to be published in Germany, edited by Herr H. Deiters.

Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel, of Leipzig, announce the completion of their splendid edition of the musical compositions of Frederick the Great, King of Prussia. The edition consists of four volumes, containing twenty-five sonatas and four concertos, all of them written for the favourite instrument of the King, the flute, and presenting their Royal author in the somewhat novel light of a very estimable and imaginative musician.

The mortal remains of Paisiello, the amiable composer of "La serva Padrona," have just been transferred from the Church of St. Francisus (which is being demolished) to that of Donnalbina, at Naples.

Auguste Mermet, the composer of the opera "Roland à Roncevaux," died at Paris, on the 4th ult., at the age of seventy-nine. The deceased artist, who was his own librettist, leaves behind him several operatic works which have never yet been performed—viz., "Jeanne d'Arc," written many years ago; an opéra bouffe, "Pierrot Pendu," and a five-act grand opera, entitled "Bacchus dans l'Inde."

Henri Jacquier, an excellent violoncello player, for many years a leading member of the Théâtre de la Monnaie orchestra, of Brussels, died at that capital on the 4th ult.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE GUILD OF ORGANISTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—I was unwilling to be drawn into a newspaper correspondence, but as I fear that if Mr. Lewis's letter in THE MUSICAL TIMES for July is permitted to pass without any reply, it might be inferred that the Council of the Guild "allow judgment to go by default," I trust you will give me a small space in your paper, that both sides of the question may be placed before your readers.

Mr. Lewis says he was not dismissed from the office of Hon. Sec. The following resolution passed by the Council, unanimously, April 10, 1889, will show whether he was dismissed or not.

"That in consequence of the action of the Secretary in issuing a circular calling a General Meeting without any authority or consultation with the Council, and his intentional neglect to call a Council Meeting, the Council hereby resolves that he shall forthwith cease to act as Secretary of the Guild, and requires him to deliver up the list of Fellows, Associates and Members, and all other books and papers relating to the Guild."

As to the power of the Council to dismiss the Hon. Sec., I presume that as they had the power to appoint him (and we have it in our minute book, in his own writing, that the Council did appoint him*), so they had the power to remove him if they considered it necessary.

I should very much like to ask Mr. Lewis what actions of the Council he has exposed. I must confess I was under the impression that the Council exposed his actions, which certainly were not for the good of the Guild. I can assure you there is no necessity for "imputing to him errors he has not committed," and the Council have no desire to screen themselves by doing so.

They have offered a full explanation and investigation to the members, and have received a very large number of letters from members who could not attend the general meeting, all of whom approve entirely of the step the Council felt it their duty to take.—Yours very truly,

J. T. FIELD,

Sub-Warden, Guild of Organists.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—In your journal for December, 1887, you very kindly permitted the insertion of a letter from me, asking the opinion of organists and choirmasters as to the advisability of admitting ladies to assist our church choirs. I thought then, and think now, that mature voices only would be of service to the choirmaster; and as those would be ladies with trained voices, advanced musical knowledge, some in all probability married, the rest certainly not children, the question arises—Would those ladies care to don the surplice and college cap? Your correspondent "E." says the opponents of choirs consisting of "ladies and millinery" visited the Anglican Cathedral at Adelaide, and were so delighted with the singing (i.e., of boys, ladies, and gentlemen together) that they offered to defray the expense of the whole choir going over to Melbourne to give an octave of services. Just so; that, to my mind, is all that is required—good singing, good music.

I read your journal in the good old days, when you released the ambitious amateur from his dirty, well-thumbed, and incorrect collection of choruses in manuscript, by offering him a full score of "The Messiah" and other oratorios, with pianoforte or organ accompaniment, for the modest sum of 2s. 6d. (that same amateur soon after made the Handel Festival a possibility, augmented the sacred Harmonic and other London Societies, opened his mind to instruction, and now forms the basis of the finest choir in the world—the Royal Choral Society); and now that your impartiality is acknowledged, your authority established throughout all lands, and as this new departure of ladies' choirs is liable to become a question of Dress v. Good Music, I think I may venture to say an early word from you upon the subject will be most anxiously looked for and appreciated by your readers in general and Churchmen in particular.

BRET MILLER.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—I have read the correspondence in your current number, and am also acquainted with the facts relating to the innovation in question made in Melbourne, and the controversy which was raised at the time about it. It appears to me that the dictum of St. Paul, "Let the women

* Extract from Minute Book:—"Third Council Meeting, 15th June, 1887. The following officers were elected: . . . Hon. Sec. and Treasurer, James Henry Lewis, Ph. D., F.M.I.C., F.G.S.E.—Signed by CH. VINCENT, Mus. Doc."

be silent in the church," covers the whole question, and who can deny that the carrying out of that instruction, whether intentionally or not, has been of the greatest service to the proper and efficient rendering of church music, so much improved within the last decade? In numberless churches the mixed choir has been abolished, and boys substituted for women, with the best results. Every choirmaster of experience will bear me out in saying that far better ultimate results can be obtained from boys, with all their troublesome ways, voice breaking, and the rest, than from women or girls. All this, however, is beside the ecclesiastical view of the matter, and in many cases which have arisen within my own experience, the employment of girls or women instead of boys in the choir, is pure laziness on the part of the authorities. Apart from this, the idea of vesting females in surplices, or a modern adaptation of the same, must surely be abhorrent to any true member of the Church, male or female. What authority has a nineteenth century clergyman for inventing a new ecclesiastical vestment?—Yours truly,

GEO. DIXON.

7, Lynton Road, Crouch End, N., July 1, 1889.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—As enquiries are being made in your valuable and widely circulated paper concerning the above, and as my name has been mentioned in the matter, perhaps you will allow me a few words.

Until a little over two years ago the choir of my church (St. Luke's, Birmingham) was in the west gallery. It was composed of ladies and gentlemen. At that time it was determined to have a surplised choir at the east end, and as I did not wish to have boys in place of the ladies, it became necessary to consider the question of a robe. Of course what is known as a surplice would not do. Two ladies, therefore, designed a robe, and it has given every satisfaction. I immediately received letters from different parts of the country, and among them from Skelton-in-Cleveland, Yorkshire, which has been mentioned by two of your correspondents. The Vicar of Skelton obtained from me the patterns of the robe and cap (after the style of a D.C.L., not "Tam O'Shanter"). I have also had letters from Winnipeg and New York, each and all showing the desire there is to avoid the difficulties in connection with boy choirs, and to improve the quality of the singing by introducing the lady element. I have one before me now from an organist who has taught boys for over thirty years, and was totally opposed to the admission, by the vicar, of ladies into the choir. He now says that he finds it an improvement in every way. Having myself had twenty years' experience of choir training, I may say that, if good conduct, reverence, and sympathetic and refined rendering of music in the service of God are sought, give me the ladies in preference to the boys. In addition to this, although we have an Anthem every Sunday, one practice a week is sufficient in the place of the three or four necessary for boys.

Let not any condemn the practice of having ladies simply and gracefully robed in white in church choirs without having seen and heard for themselves.

Clergymen have come to my church, acknowledging that they were deeply prejudiced, and have gone away delighted.

In conclusion, I may say that the robe is very simple, of thin Scotch lawn, and essentially feminine.

Yours faithfully,

WILLOUGHBY B. WILKINSON.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

BLACKBURN.—The St. Cecilia Society, the principal society in the town, and the Blackburn Vocal Society, after a separate existence of about fifteen years each, have amalgamated, and the new Society will be known as the Blackburn St. Cecilia and Vocal Union. Mr. J. H. Rooks, who has been Conductor of the St. Cecilia for the last seven or eight years, will be the Conductor of the new Society. Great things are expected from the amalgamation, and it is undoubtedly a step in the right direction.—The Philharmonic Society will open its season on November 1 with Rossini's Moses in Egypt. Madame Albani, Miss Fenna, Miss Hilda Wilson, and Messrs. Lloyd, Piercy, Grice, and Bridson are announced as principals.—On the 10th ult. Mr. W. H. Thorley gave a Recital on the new Organ (two-manual), presented to St. Barnabas' Church by Mr. W. Tattersall at a cost of £800. Messrs. Wilkinson of Kendal are the builders. The programme included Andante and Allegro (F. E. Bach), Wedding March from Lohengrin, two Andantes by Batiste, Adagio in D (Mozart), and Sterndale Bennett's Barcarolle.

BRIGHTON.—Handel's Oratorio Samson was performed at the Dome on Thursday, the 4th ult., by the Sacred Harmonic Society, which thus introduced a work comparatively unknown in Brighton in its entirety. The soloists were Miss Marian Fenna, Mr. P. Newberry, and Mr. Brereton. Mr. R. Taylor was the Conductor. The Choruses were well sung, especially "Fixed in His everlasting seat," which created a profound impression and elicited an enthusiastic encore. The orchestra played with excellence of tone and delicacy. Mr. P. J. Starnes was at the organ.

CAMBRIDGE.—The ninth Annual Festival of the Epping Forest Choir Association was held on Saturday, the 13th ult., at King's College Chapel, Cambridge. Some 1,200 persons, besides the 230 members of the Choirs forming the Association, journeyed by special train to Cambridge. The service commenced with the hymn "Saviour, blessed Saviour," by J. Roe. Psalms cxviii. and cxlviii. were sung to chants by Cutler and R. Cooke; the Magnificat and Nunc dimittis to chants by Stainer. The Anthem, "I will sing of Thy power," was by Sir A. Sullivan, the tenor solos being rendered by Mr. Charles Strong. The Dean of Chichester preached the sermon, this being preceded by Barnby's hymn, "I could not do without Thee," and followed by the hymn of Sir John Goss, "Praise, my soul." The service concluded with Berthold Tours's Te Deum, and Barnby's hymn, "For all the Saints who from their labours rest." The organ accompaniments—by Dr. Mann (Organist of the chapel) and Mr. H. Riding—were supplemented by three brass instruments. The singing of the Choirs was most excellent. Altogether the Festival may be said to have been the best the Association have yet held. The offertory amounted to £6 6s. At the conclusion of the service the members of the Ilford Choir presented a silver-mounted ebony bâton to Mr. F. J. Brand, their Choirmaster.

CHESTER.—Miss M. J. Jones, the Organist of Queen Street Congregational Church, on the occasion of her marriage with Mr. James T. Pye, of Glasgow, was presented by the congregation with a handsome silver hot-water flagon and case of silver fish knives and forks, as a mark of appreciation of her services; and the bridegroom was presented by the congregation of Anderston United Presbyterian Church, Glasgow, with a very handsome and valuable black marble timepiece and pair of bronzes, and a beautifully inlaid case of silver dessert knives, forks, &c., for the bride.

FOREST GATE.—At a Garden Party, held on the 20th ult., upon the invitation of Mr. Curwen, an impromptu choir of about 200 sang a number of part-songs by Mendelssohn, Abt, Macfarren, Sullivan, Hatton, and others. The singers came from Australia, Canada, and all parts of Great Britain, and were drawn to the Tonic Sol-fa College by the normal classes for teachers held there in the summer. The part-singing was most effective.

HENLEY-ON-THAMES.—Mr. H. B. Wilsdon, Organist of the Parish Church, gave a morning Concert in St. Mary's Hall on Wednesday, the 10th ult., assisted by about thirty members of the "Oxford Gleemen" (of which Society he is the Conductor), and Miss Amy Knight, Mr. Ernest Warrington, and Miss Marie Ernst, violinist.

HERNE BAY.—Mr. E. A. Crutenden's Annual Concert was given in the Town Hall on the 9th ult. The vocalists engaged were Madame Clara West, Miss Lottie West, and Mr. J. H. Mullerhausen, all of London; these being supplemented in the instrumental department by pupils of Mr. Crutenden, and others.

KING'S LYNN.—The annual Choir and School Festival of the London Road Primitive Methodist Church was held on Monday, the 15th ult., in St. James' Hall, when G. F. Root's Cantata "Under the Palms," with full band accompaniment, was performed. Special scenery illustrating the subjects of the Cantata was fitted up by Mr. G. M. Bridges, with palms, ferns, and other plants on the platform. The music was rendered with excellent effect and precision. The several choruses by the children were well received. Mr. J. G. Churchman was leader of the band, Miss Barnard, Miss Rutter, Miss Sporne, Mr. E. Taylor, and Mr. G. Rose were the principal vocalists. Mr. W. O. Jones presided at the pianoforte, Mr. B. Hewetson at the organ, and Mr. Jasper J. Wright conducted.

LEEDS.—The Borough Organist gave the last but one of the half-yearly Organ Recitals at the Town Hall on the 13th ult. The following programme was given:—Grand March, L'Etoile du Nord (Meyerbeer); Romance, "Resignation" (Eugene Wagner); Old English organ piece, Voluntary in D (John Keble); Larghetto in A from the Grand Symphony in D (Beethoven); modern French organ pieces—(a) Pastoral in G, (b) Finale in D (Widor); Duet, "Come, ever smiling liberty," and chorus, "Sing unto God," Judas Maccabæus (Handel).

—The rewards for proficiency attained by students during the past year at the Leeds Conservatoire of Music, in Cookridge Street, were distributed on the 13th ult. in the Albert Hall, by Alderman Sir Edwin Gaunt. An entertainment was given by the pupils. Herr Alfred Giessing was the Conductor, and Herr Christensen accompanied. The fourteenth annual Service of Song of the Choir of Salem Chapel was held on the 14th ult., when Sir A. Sullivan's Oratorio The Prodigal Son was given by a choir of sixty voices. The solo parts were entrusted to Mrs. Naylor, Mrs. Cresser, Mr. C. Suther, and Mr. John Browning. Both solos and choruses were rendered with much expression and taste, and were much appreciated. Mr. Hardingham accompanied, and also played J. S. Bach's Toccata and Fugue in D minor and Sir W. Sterndale Bennett's Barcarolle in F. Mr. W. Toothill was the Conductor.

MOFFAT, N.B.—The new organ, built by Messrs. Bevington and Sons, London, for the United Presbyterian Church, was opened by Dr. Cresser, Organist of the Parish Church, Leeds, assisted by Mrs. Cresser, as vocalist, on the 5th ult.

PHILADELPHIA.—The Convention held in Philadelphia, from the 2nd to the 5th ult., by the Music Teachers' National Association of America, was one of the most successful ever known, although the great heat prevailing seriously interfered with the proportions of the audiences. The Essays and Addresses included two by Messrs. Edwin Chadfield of Derby, and John Towers of Manchester, who met with a most cordial reception. The music performed and sung was mostly by rising American composers, and was of such a high standard as to encourage the hope that more will, ere long, be heard of American music than has hitherto been the case. All the executants were of exceptional ability, but the greatest success was obtained by August Hyllested, who gained golden opinions by his rendering of a brilliant Pianoforte Concerto by Richard Burmeister of Baltimore, who will shortly re-visit England. The local members of the profession vied with each other in hospitality to the visitors, and the doors of the musical club, the "Utopia," were thrown open for their comfort and convenience.

ST. PETER'S, PARKSTONE, NEAR BOURNEMOUTH.—An Organ Recital was given by Mr. G. E. Lyle, Organist of Sherborne Abbey Church, on Monday, the 8th ult., on Messrs. Bryceson's Electric Organ. The programme included pieces by Scotson Clark, Haydn, Handel, Romano, Mendelssohn, Schubert, Mozart, Batiste, Pleyel, W. H. Richmond, G. E. Lyle, and Lemmens.

SALTASH.—The Saltash Choral Society performed Gaul's sacred Cantata The Holy City on the 10th ult. in the Church of St. Stephen. The members of the Society, attired in white, were arranged in the choir stalls. A short service was conducted by the Vicar, the Rev. W. Fraser, and the hymns sung during the evening were "Jesu, Lover of my Soul," "At the Name of Jesus," and "The Old Hundredth." The solos in the Cantata were sung by Misses Dora Rogers and Bulley, Mrs. Farwell, Mr. Sidney Williams, and Mr. Tufnail, who also sang "It is enough" from Elijah. The accompaniments, although they were rather difficult, were played on the organ by Miss Hunter; and the tasteful manner in which the choruses were sung reflects great credit on the Honorary Conductor, Mr. A. C. Faull, of Plymouth.

SHERBORNE.—The Sherborne School Musical Society, which has been established eighteen years, was founded in 1871 by Mr. James Sterndale Bennett, the son of Sir William Sterndale Bennett. He was succeeded as Conductor by Mr. Louis N. Parker. There are about 300 boys in the school, and the Musical Society, which is perfectly voluntary, numbers 100 members. On Commemoration Day, June 26, this Society gave its 10th Concert, and the occasion was rendered memorable by the performance of Sir Arthur Sullivan's Golden Legend. The orchestra was strongly reinforced from town by such artists as Messrs. Barrett, Malsch, Morrow, Eayres, and many others. Two little boys sang the parts of Elsie and Ursula, Mr. Hodgson, one of the masters, took the part of Lucifer, and the choruses were well sung. From first to last the performance went without a hitch, and in such places as the scene round the spire of Strasburg Cathedral, the procession of pilgrims with Lucifer in their midst, the breaking in of the door at Salerno, &c., the appreciation of the dramatic situation by all the performers was most marked. The solo with chorus, "The night is calm and cloudless," and the Epilogue, were excellently rendered. The whole performance was received with enthusiasm.

SOUTHSEA.—The Summer Concert of the St. Michael's Choral Society was held in the Victoria Hall, on June 27. Anderson's Norman Baron, Schumann's "Gipsy life," and part-songs by Barnby, Sullivan, &c., were performed very creditably. The ladies' voices were especially effective in Mackenzie's Trio, "Waken, waken." Solos were sung by several members of the Society, including an excellent rendering of Gounod's "Ave Maria" by Miss M. Horniman. Organ and pianoforte duets were given by Mr. Harvey Pinches and Mr. Monk Gould; the latter also played a pianoforte solo, and conducted the Concert.

TENBURY.—The Tenbury Musical Society gave the first Concert of its nineteenth season on the 4th ult. Mendelssohn's Walpurgis Night and Brahms's Song of Destiny were the two Cantatas chosen for performance. We should mention that the soloists were Miss Napper (a member of the Society) and Messrs. Castings and Ineson, of Hereford Cathedral, who contributed in no small degree to the success of the performance. In Brahms's Song of Destiny there was not a slip from beginning to end in either the vocal or instrumental part. The programme was supplemented by a couple of songs and a duet, by Messrs. Castings and Ineson, the overture and ballet music of Schubert's Rosamunde, and Auber's Overture Le Maçon, concluding with Handel's characteristic chorus, "Crown with festal pomp the day." The band cannot be praised too highly for their performances; the light and shade which they imparted to the crescendo and diminuendo passages was, in most places, quite masterly. The secret of their success was doubtless to be found in the inspiring conducting of the Rev. J. Hampton, who kept them well to their work.

ORGAN APPOINTMENTS.—Mr. Gilbert H. Greenwood, Organist and Choirmaster to St. John's Church, Dewsbury.—Mr. C. Powis Whittaker, Organist and Choirmaster to the Parish Church, Abbot's Langley.—Mr. R. M. Long, to St. Oswald's Parish Church, Filey.—Mr. H. C. Willis, Organist and Choirmaster to St. Mary's Church, Faddington Green.—Mr. J. KING ARTHUR

A DRAMATIC CANTATA

JAMES SMETON, M.A.,

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

JOHN MORE SMETON.

(Op. 15.)

PRICE 2s. 6d. BAND PARTS ON HIRE.

SCOTSMAN.

"This beautiful work will enhance the reputation won for its composer by his similar composition 'Ariadne.' It shows a charming gift of melody and no small musicianly skill in its merely technical qualities. It may be recommended to Choral Societies as well worthy of study."

SCOTTISH LEADER.

"The work opens with a charming prelude in sacred style, which sets the mind admirably in tune for the drama which is to follow. In the first scene the Romance sung by the King is a little gem, and would make a beautiful song even apart from its surroundings. In the third scene, the wedding of Arthur and Guinevere gives rise to a whole suite of characteristic novelties. No. 15, which introduces a hymn sung by maidens, is perhaps the finest thing in the whole Cantata; and an effective epilogue brings the work to a striking close. 'King Arthur' will certainly add to the reputation of its gifted composer, and will be welcomed by all lovers of music."

DUNDEE ADVERTISER.

"We began by congratulating Mr. Smeton on the excellence of the libretto, and we conclude with our equally hearty congratulations to him on the excellent use he has made of it. We cordially recommend 'King Arthur' to the notice of choral societies desiring a work which would make their practisings a pleasure and their performances a public benefit."

DUNDEE COURIER.

"The whole of 'King Arthur' shows a great power of construction, a wide range of melody, and while there is not a dull or unattractive number in the book, there are several items which stand out pre-eminently as beautiful beyond anything the composer has hitherto achieved, and which are already being sung widely both by professionals and amateurs."

London and New York: NOVELLO, EWER and Co.

Dundee: METHVEN, SIMPSON and Co.

SAVE ME, O GOD. Motet. Composed by M. W. BALFE (1846). Set to English words and arranged for the Organ by W. A. BARRETT. Price Sixpence.

VOCAL SCORE. OLD NOTATION. 16TH & 17TH THOUSAND.

RUTH

EDWARD OXENFORD

MUSIC BY

ALFRED R. GAUL

THANKSGIVING SERVICES.

"The Biblical story of which Ruth is the central figure lends itself with remarkable suitability to an illustration of a harvest celebration. The country landscape, the ripened corn, the sturdy reapers, the standing sheaves, the active gleaners, and the busy farmer, all combine to fill the mind's eye with a pleasant scene of excitement. Set to music by a competent composer such as Mr. A. R. Gaul, the narrative of Ruth's eventful episode lends itself to a pathetic, picturesque, and pleasant performance. The bereaved and sorrowful trio of women on whom the calamity of poverty and famine has fallen, as if to give intensity to their greater grief, and the unexpected and happy influence of patriarchal benevolence displayed by the mighty Boaz, who so quickly transforms sorrow into joy, are all introduced and aptly take their allotted place in the melodious music of Gaul's interpretation of the tale."—Gloucester Citizen.

"The work, like the 'Holy City,' is full of beautiful orchestral passages, while the vocal score abounds with charming numbers."—Bucks Herald.

"Ruth" is a work of sterling power; its musical form is that of perfect tunefulness combined with simplicity and strength. . . . The composer has grasped his theme in a thoroughly sympathetic manner, and has produced a work which is worthy of the subject."—Bradford Observer.

"Bright, tuneful, fresh, and musicianly—this work will be a great favourite, and will add to Mr. Gaul's reputation."—Birmingham Weekly Dart.

"Ruth" has been set to music by several composers; none, however, has become so worthily popular as the Cantata under notice. . . . It contains some charming music, and is highly characteristic of the story it so vividly illustrates."—South Wilts Express.

"Full of flowing melody."—Salisbury Times.

PERFORMED IN THE TOWN HALL, BIRMINGHAM,

"Mr. Shinn is well known as the author of several Cantatas and other compositions, all of which are written in a style at once musicianly and popular. 'The Captives of Babylon' may be highly commended as an interesting and valuable addition to our shorter Oratorios and Cantatas. The work contains several solos of much beauty; also duets, quartets, and choruses in great variety."—Sunday School Chronicle.

"Mr. Shinn is well known as the writer of many popular pieces for choral societies; but this is certainly the best thing he has produced."—Nonconformist Musical Journal.

"In our judgment no better work of the kind has yet been published. It is brimful of pretty melodies, and the harmonic effects show the skill of a painstaking and talented musician."—Free Methodist.

"It is cleverly written, and in an attractive style. The music is of a varied and pleasing character, so that it is likely to become very popular."—The Portsmouth Evening Mail.

"Mr. Shinn is well known, and deservedly so for his musical talent. Continuity of design and freshness of conception are apparent throughout the work. It contains many effective solos and choruses, and the music is not difficult. There is no doubt that the Oratorio will become very popular."—South London Press.

"Mr. Shinn has produced a work which is one of the most acceptable of the minor Oratorios."—Bristol Mercury.

THE MONTHS

MUSIC BY

ALFRED R. GAUL

(Composer of the "Holy City," "Ruth," &c.)

"There are in this series of duets the sweetest things of the kind we have ever met with. No. 4, 'April,' and No. 5, 'May,' are our special favourites, the one being delightfully playful, the other tenderly melodious. Things to be treasured in households where sisters or friends delight in joining voices. The pianoforte accompaniments are well written, and such as an ordinary pianist may successfully undertake."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

STANDARD SERVICES AND ANTHEMS

The Organ Accompaniments Arranged and the whole Revised

BY
W. J. WESTBROOK,
Mus. Doc., CANTAB.

In making a new Edition of these Popular Services and Anthems, it seemed well that the Accompaniments should be made playable upon the modern Organ, the old G manual having almost disappeared from churches and "places where they sing." In doing this, the Editor has been careful to make it easy to play—easier than it was before—and at the same time clear and effective. As these Services have been, and most likely will continue to be, more widely sung than any others, there can be no reason why they should remain in a fossil condition.

This Edition claims to be, therefore, something more than a mere reproduction of existing copies.

EASY HARVEST MUSIC.

EIGHT HARVEST HYMNS

REV. S. CHILDS CLARKE

MUSIC BY

DR. DYKES, DEAN ALFORD, MR. LANGRAN, and the Editor, MR. A. H. BROWN.

Price 2d.; Words only, 1s. per 100.

"The hymns, which include a fine Processional, are excellently written, and as suitably set; and, if music is ever to win its way, will assuredly become great favourites at harvest festivals. They vary considerably in metre; but gladness and thanksgiving are the twin keynotes of all."—Western Morning News.

"A very excellent set of hymns, and most suitable for country parishes."—Church Times.

"The tunes are much in the current vein of thought, pleasant, tuneful, and having a part-song flavour. Nos. 1 and 3, by the Editor, are fresh and effective, and No. 5, by the same composer, is elegant in its melody and smooth in its harmony. No. 6, by that man of many accomplishments, Dean Alford, has a not unpleasant flavour of mixed antique and modern thought. Mr. Langran's (No. 4), a plain note against note tune, will be found to sing well. Dr. Dykes's (No. 2) is elegant and melodious, and set in the quasi-ecclesiastical measure, six-four, a time borrowed by the Church from an early period of modern dramatic music. The tunes will not fail to please modern choirs."—Musical Standard.

"We would specially draw attention to the unusually good common metre tune 'St. Angelus,' No. 5, which might well pass for a composition of 250 years ago."—Church Herald.

NOVELLO'S SHORT ANTHEMS.

A SERIES OF SHORT AND EASY ANTHEMS

ADAPTED TO THE

Seasons of the Church, and Suitable for Introits

EDITED BY

THE REV. W. RUSSELL, M.A., MUS. BAC.,

Succentor of St. Paul's Cathedral,

AND

SIR JOHN STAINER, M.A., MUS. DOC.

THIS Series is an attempt to meet the want of short and easy Anthems adapted to the Church's Seasons and suitable especially for Introits.

It would have been more satisfactory, from an ecclesiastical point of view, if the words selected could have been restricted to those of the Introits in use in the English Church in ancient times. But this was found to be impossible. For, while in many instances they did not lend themselves to the form of music required, in others—being derived, as they mainly are, from the Psalms—they had been already set to music once, or twice, or even oftener, by earlier writers. And, quite apart from the question of the suitability of that music for the present purpose, composers, as a rule, much prefer to proceed by untrodden paths.

Hence an endeavour has been made to select passages from Holy Scripture, which had not been previously employed for such a purpose, and which would still satisfy the end in view. And in doing this, it has been attempted—after the example of the Introits and Antiphons of old—to try and enter into the spirit of each season, and to breathe out its sentiments by inference frequently rather than by direct allusion.

Possibly, in trying to carry out this idea, the words selected have in some instances necessitated a musical setting longer than was at first intended; but it would neither have been possible nor desirable that the whole of the compositions thus put together should have been framed upon one uniform pattern. Several of them too—as will be perceived—have been already published in other forms.

But it is hoped that the series will, as a whole, so help to meet the want felt that its further extension may be rendered necessary. With this idea in view, it has been thought undesirable that the Anthems should at present be arranged strictly according to the Church's seasons, although, as the series is increased, this and other improvements may be effected.

OF
ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS FOR THE PIANOFORTE

EDITED AND FINGERED BY AGNES ZIMMERMANN.

PREFACE.

IN preparing the present edition of Schumann's works, the greatest care has been taken to ensure accuracy, not only as to the notes, but also in regard to slurs and all other marks of expression.

The task of translating the German terms and directions was one of great difficulty, the literal equivalent of a word being in many cases quite inadequate to convey the feeling and spirit of the original. The translation now offered aims throughout at an intelligent rendering of the meaning, rather than at the exact literal reproduction of the text.

In every instance where the words are Schumann's own (as in the case of the Preface to Op. 3, the titles of the various pieces, the indications of tempo, &c.), the original is retained with the translation; when, however, the information is obtained from other sources (as in the case of the Appendix to Op. 5, the Preface to Op. 6, &c.), it has been deemed sufficient to give it in English alone.

The only pieces which Schumann seems himself to have fingered in detail are Op. 3 and 7, and these are, of course, left exactly as they appeared in his original edition. In the other works he has occasionally given a little fingering, which, however, calls for no special attention, except in some few instances, when the unusual difficulty of the method indicated by him makes it desirable to give the option of an easier one. The latter is then placed in (), so that, when two sets of figures appear, the player will understand that the fingering in () is by the present editor, the other being that of Schumann himself. A few additional P's and F's will be found marked in the same manner.

A source of great inconvenience to students and players is the want of uniformity in the signs used to express fingering. In England the thumb is represented by +, whereas, on the Continent and in America it is marked 1; thus the figures 1, 2, 3, 4 have a different meaning in an English edition from that which they have in a foreign one, a discrepancy which cannot but cause embarrassment, especially in reading new music. The advantage of having only one set of figures in general use is obvious, and as it cannot be expected that the mode recognised by a majority of countries will be altered to agree with that which is used in England alone, it seems inevitable that what is called "foreign fingering" should ultimately prevail.

Messrs. Novello, Ewer and Co. have, therefore, decided on the important step of adopting this mode (that is, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 instead of + 1, 2, 3, 4) in their future publications, and it is accordingly introduced in this edition.

NEW WORK FOR SINGING CLASSES.

CHAPPELL'S PENNY OPERATIC PART-SONGS

FOR SOPRANO, ALTO, TENOR, AND BASS.

The present Collection of Part-Songs is entirely new, being selected and adapted from the most striking and popular Choruses in the favourite Foreign Operas. The Arrangement is purely Vocal, such Choruses only being chosen as can be sung without the aid of an Instrumental Accompaniment. The words have been expressly written for the work, and the harmonies arranged in four parts, as likely to be most useful in small Classes.

CHARLES HALLÉ'S "PRACTICAL PIANOFORTE SCHOOL."

SECTION I.—Elementary.

SECTION III.—Moderately Difficult.

SECTION V.—Very Difficult.

FORSYTH BROTHERS beg to announce that, in compliance with the request of many eminent teachers, both in England and the Continent, they have issued an edition of this celebrated work with GERMAN or CONTINENTAL FINGERING.

PREFACE.

A few remarks will suffice to explain the object of this Publication and its distinguishing features.

"THE PRACTICAL PIANOFORTE SCHOOL" consists of a series of Pieces selected from the best Composers, and calculated to guide Students, by gradual steps, from the very beginning to the highest degree of execution, and at the same time to form their taste and style.

The work is divided into five sections—namely, ELEMENTARY, EASY, MODERATELY DIFFICULT, DIFFICULT, and VERY DIFFICULT.* Commencing with the rudiments of Musical Notation, the Pieces succeed each other in such progressive order that Students, after having mastered one number, may safely proceed to the next, thus sparing both teacher and pupil the difficult task of selection.

Each Piece is prefaced by a certain number of Exercises written expressly by me for this Publication, and having some bearing upon the difficulties of the composition which they introduce. The daily practice of these Exercises should always precede that of the Piece, until both are completely mastered.

Long experience has convinced me that the usual mode of fingering is insufficient to guard Pupils from the danger of contracting bad habits, as they cannot always be under the eye of the Master, and yet require a constant guide in this more than in any other matter. Every note, therefore, is fingered, except that in the case of reiterated chords the fingering is marked only once, and Octaves are not fingered when they are to be played with the thumb and fourth finger.

All Turns, Shakes, Appoggiaturas, and other ornaments, are clearly explained in foot-notes, whenever their proper execution may be doubtful; and in the more advanced Pieces there will be found, in brackets, supplementary signs of expression, where they may appear to me to facilitate the correct rendering of the Composer's intention. These I give on my own responsibility, and as my interpretation of the masterpieces which I have made my study for many years.

Two Metronome marks are prefixed to every Piece and Exercise;—the first indicating the time beyond which Students ought not to venture before they can play both Piece and Exercise without fault; and the second giving the correct time.

The utmost endeavours have been used to keep the entire Work free from errors, and the greatest care bestowed upon its publication, which the long and intimate relations I have had with Messrs. FORSYTH BROTHERS have led me to entrust to them.

A long experience as a Teacher and Performer, and a thorough acquaintance with the whole range of Pianoforte Music, encourage me in the hope that this "Practical Pianoforte School" may prove what I wish it to be—a safe guide towards a sound Musical Education.

CHARLES HALLÉ.

* The title "Very Difficult" is not meant to convey the idea that this Section provides Pieces of the extreme difficulty suited to exceptional cases only (this being beyond the scope of a "School"); it is by taxing in a high degree the general Students' intellectual faculties, as well as their mechanical powers, that the works included will be found "very difficult" to play well.

THE FISHERS

CANTATA

Written by HENRY ROSE. Composed by J. M. COWARD.

Vocal Score, 4s. net. Chorus Parts, 8d. each net.

"The libretto is cast in dramatic form, and tells an interesting story about folk who 'go down to the sea in ships.' To this Mr. Coward has set nineteen 'numbers' of extremely pleasing music—unaffected, unassuming, but quite the music of an artist. . . . 'The Fishers' may be commended to the attention of choral societies."—Daily Telegraph.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR.

SEPTEMBER 1, 1889.

ANGLO-CANADIAN COPYRIGHT.

A SHORT paragraph, which appeared in the August number of THE MUSICAL TIMES, directed attention to an agitation now being carried on in Canada with reference to the Law of Copyright, at present affecting the interests of authors and publishers as between the mother country and the colony. Seeing that this agitation has proceeded so far as to assume the form of an Act, which, having passed the two Houses of the Canadian Legislature, is now awaiting the Royal Assent, it is time that the matter formed the subject of grave consideration in this country, where acts of confiscation, affecting any section of the community, are not, as a rule, accepted without a murmur. In the article referred to a point was taken that, before any expression of English opinion upon the merits of the Act in question is called for, there exists a preliminary objection, which Canada should at once be required to dispose of. It was pointed out that, under the laws which now regulate Anglo-Canadian copyright interests, large sums of money are due from, and unpaid by, the Canadian authorities to British copyright owners; and that, until that account is discharged in the usual way, it is premature to discuss any proposals for a change in the law.

A preliminary objection, however, is, as often as not, indicative of a weak case behind it, the object being to put off and embarrass the more open discussion of the case upon its merits. A careful consideration of the history of the Copyright Law between England and Canada will at once demonstrate that the mother country has no reason to take advantage of any such subterfuge; on the contrary, it will appear that such an investigation will be all in favour of the mother country, and that it will cut the ground from under the feet of the colony in its unwarrantable attempt to place an Act of obvious confiscation upon the Canadian Statute Book. The preliminary objection may be, therefore, waived for the present, although later on it will form a substantial argument; and it will be profitable to at once consider the case historically and critically.

At the outset it may be laid down, without fear of contradiction even in Canada, that the English Copyright Act of 1842, which is still the fountain-head of the English law on the subject, applied to Canada, and to all other English possessions, in precisely the same way as it applied to the United Kingdom. Not only was this expressly laid down by the 29th Section of the Act, but it was held by the House of Lords in the important case of "Routledge v. Low"—(1) That an author residing in Canada can, under the Act of 1842, acquire copyright in England; and (2) that British copyright, when once it exists, extends to every part of the British dominions. It is not necessary to go into the detail of the provisions of the Act of 1842; because if it can be shown that Canadian authors and publishers are as well protected under that Act, and subsequent Acts, as British authors and publishers are, the Canadian case for agitation and confiscation is clearly disposed of. To demonstrate that this is so, however, two provisions of the Act of 1842 must be borne in mind—one a condition necessary to be observed before English copyright can exist even in England; the other a provision which prohibits the importation into the United Kingdom or any British colony for sale or hire, by any person, other than the owner of the copyright work, of any foreign reprint of such work. The condition referred to makes it necessary that the work be first published in the United Kingdom. If it is so published, it is protected throughout the British dominions; but if the work is first published in Canada, or any other British colony, no copyright—i.e., no English copyright—can, under the Act of 1842, be acquired in that work. Of course the local laws of the colony could protect it in that colony; but outside that colony it was, under the 1842 Act, without protection. Canada, however, by a series of Acts, commencing with an Act of 1841, and continued as recently as 1875, has passed laws which regulate Canadian copyright as regards works published in Canada.

Here, then, was an anomaly. Works first published in the United Kingdom were protected everywhere within British Dominions; but works first published in a colony were only protected in the colony where they were first published; assuming, of course, that the colony had passed a law for the purpose. This anomaly no longer exists; and at the present moment the only distinction which remains between the laws which protect British publications and those protecting colonial publications, is in favour of the colonies.

Already it has been observed that the other provision of the Act of 1842, necessary to be borne in mind, is the prohibition which prevents anyone, other than the owner of the copyright work, from importing into the British Dominions, for sale or hire, foreign reprints of British copyright works. Three years later another Act absolutely prohibited a similar importation of reprints produced in any other country. Both these Acts, however, failed to check the steady flow of foreign reprints of British copyright works into the colonies, and enormous quantities of these pirated reprints found their way into Canada from the United States. The British protests against this state of affairs may be without difficulty imagined, and it was to protect the British owner of the copyright, as much as to enable Canada and the other colonies to enjoy the benefit of a literature, which being stolen, as it were, was necessarily sold to them at a cheap rate, that an Act of 1847 was passed in England.

This Act of 1847 enabled Her Majesty, by an Order in Council, to suspend the prohibitions against importation into British colonies of foreign reprints, contained in the Acts of 1842 and 1845, provided the colony chose to accept its benefits by passing a local law which, in the opinion of Her Majesty, made due provision for protecting the rights of British authors there. Canada, in due course, accepted the benefits offered by the Act, and in the year 1850 passed an Act authorising the Governor in Council to impose a duty, not exceeding twenty per cent., on foreign reprints of British copyright works for the benefit of the author of the work; and on December 12, 1850, an Order in Council was issued, under the English Act of 1847, suspending, as regards Canada, the prohibitions contained in the Acts of 1842 and 1845. The duty was fixed at twelve and a half per cent. ad valorem.

Here it is necessary to remark that, in consequence of the Confederation of Canada in 1867, and of the passing of an act by the Canadian Legislature in the following year (31 Vict., c. 7), for the purpose of imposing fresh customs duties for the Dominion generally, it became doubtful whether, owing to the words used in the Customs Act, the Act of 1850 had not been repealed. Accordingly, the Canadian Legislature passed an Act in the year 1868 (31 Vict., c. 56) for the purpose of removing that doubt, and for re-enacting the Act of 1850, so as to make it apply to the Dominion generally. In consequence of the passing of this last Act Her Majesty's Order in Council of December 12, 1850, which had been issued to give effect to the Canadian Act of 1850, became of doubtful value; and it was necessary to issue a fresh Order in Council to give effect to the Canadian Act of 1868. This was done by the issue of an Order in Council dated July 7, 1868. So that, it will be noted, the Act and Order in Council of 1868 made no change in the law; they merely provided for the continuity of the law by exactly filling the places up to that date occupied by the Act and Order in Council of 1850.

Both Orders in Council, however, proved to be mere waste paper, so far as they concerned the author's interests. The duty—the altar upon which those interests were sacrificed—was, to all intents and purposes, never collected; and the obstruction which was opposed to the author's endeavours to collect it was so carefully organised that British copyright owners soon became conscious of the fact that the duty was a mere pretext; and they have long ago ceased to concern themselves about it, or to rely upon the provisions of the Canadian Act, which, had it been designed for the purpose, could hardly have deprived them more effectually of the compensation which was, in theory, reserved to them. Had this duty really been collected large sums of money, which at present only swell the "bad debts" account in the reckoning, would have been paid by Canadian dealers to British authors and composers.

The Act of 1847 is probably the only statute on the English Statute Book which permits the receiver of stolen goods to reap the benefit of his transactions with the purloiner. It was only because the Act in question made due provision for compensating the owner of the goods that it was possible for it to become a law in England. What then can be said of the receiver, who, permitted to carry on his trade under certain conditions, completes his transactions with the purloiner, but ignores his obligations to the owner, and the conditions subject to which alone his transactions were to be tolerated? Can it be argued that such a receiver is to be allowed to go one step further and to snatch the goods from the owner himself? Yet this is what the Canadian Act, now awaiting the Royal assent, is framed to facilitate.

Recapitulating, for a moment, it will be seen that upon the issue by Her Majesty of the Orders in Council of December 12, 1850, and July 7, 1868, the position briefly was as follows:—1. Under the Act of 1842, works first published in the United Kingdom enjoyed copyright throughout the British Dominions; 2. Canada, by publishing in England, would reap all the benefits of that Act precisely as though Canada were an English county; 3. Under Canadian statutes Canadian authors and publishers could enjoy absolute protection in Canada for works copyrighted there; and (4) Under the Orders in Council of December 12, 1850, and July 7, 1868, Canadian dealers could import foreign pirated reprints of English copyright works. On the other hand, the British author had no rights in Canada other than those derived under the Act of 1842; and under no circumstances were British dealers permitted to import into this country the pirated editions referred to, notwithstanding that these editions were being constantly poured into Canada, and, as events proved, with an utter disregard of the duty to which they were subject. The consequence was that, by the importation of these pirated reprints into the Dominion, British owners lost the sale of their works in the Canadian market; while, by the failure of the Canadian Legislature to provide for the collection of the duty, reserved as compensation, they lost that also.

For some six or seven years the situation remained unaltered: British authors were clearly duped; and, as the collection of the duty was practically impossible, their only chance of redress was to be, if possible, admitted to the benefits of the Canadian Copyright Law, under which, by republishing their works in Canada, they would be in a position to restrain the importation of the pirated reprints of their works into the Dominion. In the year 1875 this very desirable change was effected by the passing of an Act in the Canadian Legislature which, in due course, received the Royal assent.

It is important here to observe that Acts of the Dominion Legislature are usually ratified by the mere assent of Her Majesty. As, however, the Order in Council of 1868 was still in force when the Act of 1875 was passed, a doubt was raised whether the Royal Assent could operate so as to modify that Order in Council, in a manner necessary to give validity to the provisions of the Act of 1875. Accordingly a special Act of Parliament was passed to remove all doubt and to enable the Royal assent to be given: and the Canadian Act was duly ratified.

This measure of justice, of 1875, for which full credit must be given to Canada, enabled British and colonial copyright owners to protect their property under the Canadian Law, and to obtain a Canadian copyright, on condition that the work was printed and published, or reprinted and republished, in Canada, with the necessary formalities. And it was provided that nothing in that Act was to prohibit the importation from the United Kingdom of copies of the work lawfully printed there.

Upon this change in the law taking effect the prospects of the British owner very much improved. Canada had enabled him to minimise the evil consequences of the Orders in Council of 1850 and 1868, and all that he had to do was to print and publish, or reprint and republish, in Canada. So far everything looked promising. Yet, before the Act of 1875 had been in force for twelve months, a very gross attempt was made by the Canadian publishing world to twist and distort its provisions in a manner which, had the attempt proved successful, must have made the Act a far greater stumbling-block for the British copyright owner than the Orders in Council of 1850 and 1868 have proved to be.

It was contended in Canada that this Act of their Legislature had practically repealed, as far as Canada was concerned, the English Act of 1842! It was maintained that the English Act of 1842 and the Canadian Act of 1875 were to be read together, and that the provisions of both Acts were to be duly observed; and that the Act of 1875, being the later, must be taken to have repealed the Act of 1842 to the extent to which its provisions did not harmonize with the Canadian Act. Canadian publishers accordingly asserted that, as their Act required printing and publication in Canada, no works not so printed and published could enjoy copyright in Canada, notwithstanding that, prior to the date of that Act, they had enjoyed it under the Act of 1842. They further supported these monstrous arguments by maintaining that the English Act of Confederation of 1867, commonly known as the British North America Act, which united into one Dominion the various Federated Provinces of Canada, had, by conferring on the Dominion Parliament "exclusive legislative authority" in various matters, including copyright, given Canada the power to legislate on the subject, not only against the various provincial legislatures, but also against the United Kingdom itself; and that, even if the Canadian Act of 1875 could not have the force of repealing an English statute, at all events the English Parliament had, by a special Act (referred to

On the strength of arguments such as these they not only sought to fritter away the provisions of the Act of 1875, but they went so far as to publish an English copyright work, which had not been printed and published in Canada. To resist this outrage the famous action of "Smiles v. Belford" was instituted in the Canadian Courts. The action was by an English copyright owner to restrain the publication in Canada by the defendant of the plaintiff's work "Thrift," a work in which he claimed copyright in Canada under the Act of 1842, notwithstanding that he had not availed himself of the provisions of the Canadian Act of 1875.

One by one the Canadian arguments were disposed of, and the Canadian Vice-Chancellor by his judgment decided that it is not necessary for the author of a book, which is copyright in England, to copyright it in Canada with a view of restraining a reprint of it there; but that if he desires to prevent the importation into Canada of pirated copies from a foreign country, he must copyright his book in Canada. He further held that the British North America Act did not give the Dominion Parliament any right to legislate on copyright questions as against the United Kingdom, but only as against the various provincial legislatures; that the special English Act confirming the Canadian Act of 1875 could not be held to have repealed any portion of the English Act of 1842; that there was nothing inconsistent between the Acts of 1842 and 1875; that there was nothing to compel a British copyright owner to avail himself of the provisions of the Canadian Act of 1875 if he preferred to protect his copyright under the Act of 1842; and that all he could gain by the Canadian copyright was the right to prevent importation into Canada of foreign reprints of his work; which the combined effect of the Act of 1847 and the Order in Council of July, 1868, would interfere with his doing if he preferred to ignore the Canadian Act of 1875.

The case was carried to the Canadian Court of Appeal, where the Canadian Chancellor and three Judges of Appeal affirmed unanimously, and on all points, the decision of the Court below.

The attempt, therefore, of the Canadian publishers again to filch the property of British owners was, in this instance, completely frustrated by the decisions of their own Courts of Law; and to the present day the law remains as it was laid down in 1876 in the case of "Smiles v. Belford."

Only one other statute need be referred to before the Act which has provoked this discussion will be considered. The reader will have been struck by one hardship which has throughout affected the interest of the Canadian publisher. It has been observed that he could obtain no copyright in England unless he published in England, and that if he published in Canada his work could only claim the protection afforded by Canadian Acts, which, of course, could not control the mother country, nor diminish the effect of the Act of 1842, which made publication here a sine quâ non.

The establishment of an International Copyright amongst the various countries who agreed to be bound by the provisions of the Berne Convention of 1886 afforded the opportunity of removing this one cause of complaint which, at that date, Canada could advance. The English Act of Parliament passed in 1886, to confirm what was undertaken in the name of Great Britain and her colonies at the Berne Convention, enacted that the English Copyright Acts were to apply to a literary or artistic work first produced in a British possession in like manner as they applied to a work first produced in the United Kingdom; and that nothing in the English Copyright Acts was to prevent the passing in a British possession of any Act or ordinance respecting the copyright, within the limits of such possession, of works first produced there.

By this last change in the law was swept away the only anomaly which worked to the prejudice of the Canadian; and at the present moment, on all questions of copyright, whether English, Canadian, or International, the Canadian is, in all respects, in as good a position as the Englishman. To all intents and purposes Canada has become a portion of England, and the only distinction that exists between the two countries is that Canada may, under certain conditions (which are ignored) import foreign reprints of British copyright works, which under no conditions can be admitted into the United Kingdom.

Under these circumstances the proposed new Canadian Act (1889) has, very naturally, created no small stir among British authors and publishers. This Act proposes to grant a Canadian copyright to Canadians, British subjects, and to those foreign countries which are entitled to the benefits of the Berne Convention, only on condition that the work is registered in Canada before, or simultaneously with, its publication elsewhere; and that it is reprinted and republished in Canada within one month of the date of its production elsewhere. Section 3 enacts (i.) that "if the person entitled to copyright under the said Act" (i.e., the Act of 1875) "as hereby amended fails to take advantage of its provisions, any person or persons domiciled in Canada may obtain from the Minister of Agriculture a license or licenses to print and publish or to produce the work for which copyright, but for such neglect or failure, might have been obtained; but no such license shall convey exclusive rights to print and publish or produce any work"; and (ii.) that "a license shall be granted to any applicant agreeing to pay the author or his legal representatives a royalty of ten per cent. on the retail price of each copy or reproduction issued of the work which is the subject of the license and giving security for such payment to the satisfaction of the Minister."

By Section 4 provision is made for the collection of the royalties by the Canadian Inland Revenue; but the Canadian Government is "not to be liable to account for any such royalty not actually collected." Section 5 provides for prohibiting or allowing the importation of copies of works, as to which licenses have been granted, according as the licensees do or do not provide adequately for the public demand. And Section 6 provides that the Act is not to be taken as prohibiting importation from the United Kingdom of copyright works lawfully published there; nor is it to apply to any work for which copyright has been obtained in the United Kingdom or other countries affected by the Act, before the Act comes into force. Such are the main provisions of the Act which now awaits the Royal assent.

That it must be resisted to the utmost, in the interests of British authors and publishers and the nation generally, is made obvious by a mere glance at its provisions; and it is of vital importance that steps be at once taken with that object.

It is impossible within the limits of these columns to exhaust all the arguments which may be advanced against the Act in question. The more serious objections to it will probably be discovered only when it is, if it ever will be, in actual operation. But it will be useful to point out even a few of the more fatal objections which suggest themselves, as attaching not only to the Act itself and its provisions, but to any Act which may be conceived in a similar spirit.

(i.) The Act goes beyond the powers of the Dominion Legislature. The Canadian Courts have decided that the British North America Act of 1867 did not empower the Dominion to legislate against the United Kingdom. So that, even if the Act were to obtain the Royal assent, it would still be powerless to repeal the provisions of the English Act of 1842, which are in direct opposition to the provisions of the Canadian Act. Consequently the Act is premature; the way is blocked by the Act of 1842; and, unless the Dominion Parliament is to be allowed to repeal Acts on the English Statute Book, the Canadian Act is, ipso facto, impossible.

(2.) It is unjust, and contrary to the spirit of all modern legislation, national and international, on the subject; which is to extend, and not to restrict, the measure of protection afforded to those whose intellects are devoted to literature, science, and the arts, from the encouragement of which nations derive so great a benefit.

(3.) The Act is unnecessary. The history of Anglo-Canadian legislation on copyright questions shows that fresh legislation is absolutely uncalled for. At the present moment, and since 1886, Canada, upon all copyright questions (with the one exception already alluded to, which is in favour of Canada), is in exactly the same position as if the colony were geographically a portion of England. Every facility that is afforded to a British subject for the protection of his works is equally available for the benefit of the Canadian. In both cases works, whether first published in the United Kingdom, in Canada, or in any portion of the British dominions, are protected throughout the entire British dominions and in many foreign countries. The markets of the whole world are open to the Canadian no less than to the Englishman, and if, by a fair and open bargain, the Canadian publisher can arrange with an author or composer of any country for the purchase of his works, the Canadian publisher, no less than his English competitor, is protected in the enjoyment of the property which he has acquired. No author or composer, whatever his nationality, will decline to deal with the Canadian publisher merely because he is a Canadian; but the Canadian must pay the author's price, and so acquire in a straightforward way property which Englishmen and most foreigners will respect. If he cannot pay the author's price let him take his hands off property which so many English speaking and foreign nations have agreed is to be secured to the legitimate owner of it. What more can the Canadian want: unless it be the confiscation of those works or compositions which his own apathy prevents his originating, or which his own want of enterprise prohibits his acquiring in the open market, or openly?

(4.) The Act is unaccompanied by any guarantees. There is no probability that Canadian dealers or publishers will be more honest in the future than they have been in the past. What certainty is there that the ten per cent. royalty will be collected? The history of the twelve and a half per cent. duty does not inspire confidence on this point; and nothing short of absolute certainty will suffice, having regard to the important interests which are to be placed in jeopardy upon the pretext of a royalty. The Act provides that security is to be given to the satisfaction of the Canadian Minister; but the history of the same duty has demonstrated that Canadian Ministers are easily satisfied in these matters; and, when once the Minister is satisfied, the British copyright owner will be at the mercy of the Canadian publisher. Clause 4 of the Act declares that the Canadian Government is not to be liable for any royalty "not actually collected": those words are full of meaning, and give character to the whole Act.

(5.) If the object of the Act is to obtain a cheap literature in Canada, the Canadian Government may go a long way towards that end, without confiscating the property of others, by abolishing an import duty of fifteen per cent., which is attached, as a fiscal tax, to all literature imported into the colony.

(6.) The provisions of the Act are vague and unreasonable; and, if the Act were in other respects acceptable, it must go back to the Canadian Parliament to be redrafted. The expression "each copy or reproduction issued" needs explanation. Does it mean copies printed, or copies sold and otherwise distributed? There is no machinery provided to enable the author, affected by the grant of a license, to ascertain what number of copies really have been "issued." The provision requiring reprinting and republishing in Canada, within one month of printing and publishing elsewhere, is arbitrary as regards the limit of time; and, as no power to extend it is reserved to anyone, it can only have been inserted as an excuse for expediting the moment for confiscation. The royalty, when collected, is to be paid over to the persons entitled thereto, "under regulations to be approved by the Governor in Council." Are the British and Colonial Legislatures to be consulted in the drawing up of these regulations? It will be interesting to learn how, and when, the payments will be made, and to what deductions they will be subjected.

(7.) The necessity of registration in Canada will oblige the British or Colonial copyright owner to employ agents in Canada to act for him; this will involve trouble and expense, and will leave the copyright of the work at the mercy of the agent, who, by delaying its registration, whether by negligence or by design, may deprive the author of his Canadian copyright for ever.

(8.) Anyone may obtain the license on giving the so-called security, so that, unless the conditions as to registration, reprinting, and republication in Canada are complied with, valuable copyright works and musical compositions, the property of Englishmen, will in all probability be utilised as material for Canadian newspapers and periodicals, and sold for a few cents per copy.

(9.) The Canadian reprints will go forth into the world unrevised by the author, to the detriment of his works.

Such are a few of the objections to this Act which are suggested by a casual glance at its provisions. The Act has the obvious appearance of being a means to an end, and that end is the complete abolition of Anglo-Canadian copyright. If this is what the Canadian desires, let him say so, without resorting to "licenses" and similar pretexts, and we in England will know how to deal with him. Let him assume the position which has been persistently maintained by his American neighbour, who candidly avows his determination to ignore such questions as International Copyright. If he were to adopt this line, English authors and publishers would be on their guard, and fresh legislation in England may be necessary to protect them. But there is one feature in the case to which it will be well to call the very serious attention of these reckless plungers, whose habit apparently is to pass a law to-day for the purpose of distorting it to-morrow. They must not overlook the fact that the familiarity which has bred contempt in their dealings with their English relations is not likely to be thoroughly appreciated in those countries which, by joining in the Berne Convention of 1886, have as important a voice as England has in the settling of this question. The matter becomes an international one. Germany, Belgium, Spain, France, Haiti, Italy, the Republic of Liberia, Switzerland, and Tunis are all entitled to be heard; and before the Royal assent can be accorded to such a measure of universal confiscation as is now put forward, very grave questions will have to be settled to the satisfaction of everyone of those countries; and if Canada or England should attempt to deal lightly with interests such as these, it is not impossible to imagine that temerity of that kind will, in many instances, bring about very awkward situations with countries whose goodwill we appreciate, and whose honesty and straightforwardness in dealing with these questions might form a profitable subject for reflection by the colony whose aims and objects have ever been but clumsily disguised.

LADIES' SURPLICED CHOIRS.

THE correspondence upon this subject which was started in these columns, includes a number of letters containing facts, opinions, and suggestions. Many of these are interesting, some are instructive, and others are amusing. The variety of these qualities has been further extended by the numerous letters which have appeared in a daily contemporary, wherein the views of many musicians, amateur, clergy, and laity—very few of which have kept to the matter at issue—have been set forth. The questions involved have many sides—social, practical, convenient, æsthetic, and ecclesiastical. The letters on the subject were in answer to an inquiry as to whether there were any choirs in England in which the female members wore surplices. The practice had its origin, it is said, in the Cathedral of Melbourne, Australia. Whether it arose from expediency or inclination does not signify much. It may have sprung from the difficulty of obtaining boys to sing the treble part in the musical portion of the service. The utility of female voices being admitted, the character of the vestments most suitable became the subject of consideration. The matter was settled, and afforded a pattern for imitation, with modifications according to circumstances. It was felt that if ladies were to appear in the choir, some uniform costume was desirable, in order that it might harmonise with ecclesiastical surroundings and neutralise the effect of "the daily changing caprices of fashion in feminine attire." Among the vestments mentioned as being actually worn by those members of female choirs already existing, are: "An ordinary surplice over a dark dress with a small cap or biretta on the head; surplices pleated at the back to fit the figure, with violet velvet Tam O'Shanter caps to match the hangings of the church; robes specially designed by the ladies themselves with D.C.L. caps," and other peculiarities of millinery more or less fanciful. The appearance of the female singers, called by our contemporary "the Angelic Choir," being thus provided for, the value of the aid of the gentler sex in adding to the attractions of the service have formed no inconsiderable point in certain of the letters written on the subject. The ladies themselves have urged their claims to an active share in the performance of the musical portion of the service, while others, quoting St. Paul's words, "Let your women keep silence in the churches," would deny them the right to have lot or part in the performance of the act of worship under any conditions.

The belief expressed and endorsed by some, that the appearance of a female choir would have the effect of drawing men more frequently to church, need not be confirmed, as it is founded upon an entire misconception of the purport of the service. The "thousands of men who now keep away from church," who might be drawn by the attraction of a female choir, could scarcely be expected to attend the services with proper motives, and those who based their arguments on such grounds may probably have had in mind the experience of the theatre rather than that at the church. Those pursuing the train of thought arising from this suggestion, who are of opinion that "an additional zest to the proceedings would also result from the monthly practice of a lady in the pulpit," appear to have ignored St. Paul's precept, which while it does not apply to women singing in the church, most certainly has reference to their preaching or leading the service. Of course in the ventilation of the several opinions there would be many correspondents who should express themselves concerning the difference in the quality of boys' and women's voices. On this ground there are conflicting opinions, some preferring the one, some the other. The most practical views are those of writers who speak with the conviction of experience. It might be assumed that young ladies undertaking the duties of singing in church would be more amenable than boys to discipline. This may be so. Differences, if they were created, would most likely have reference to the shape and pattern of the regulation costumes. The sober uniformity of the adopted clerical vestment adapted to female needs, would of necessity be subjected to the vagaries of the ever-changing modes in dress; for with women, even more than with men, the axiom "that it is better to be out of the world than out of the fashion" would be an ever present instigation to modification.

The question of adornments is of less importance than that of discipline, and in this respect the females of the choir would be superior. But, as a Conservative Vicar points out, there are other sides to the question. "Boys, it is true," he says, "are in many ways a nuisance; their eyes have a knack of wandering; their apprehension of new work is not so subtle and quick as that of the fair sex; their discipline is not always all that might be wished; while their voices will insist on cracking just when the choir-master has completed their education to his satisfaction. But, though young damsels are demure and obedient enough, it is not so with their charming elders. To reprimand a lady chorister is a very dangerous experiment, and may mean the decimation of your flock. This peculiarity of the feminine mind is no new experience. Those who remark the continual disputes between prima donnas and their managers will appreciate my meaning. Then there is another troublesome element to be considered. These fair creatures do not always appear to recognise the solemnity of their position."

The supposed advantage of gaining greater expression in the performance of solos where women are employed was not overlooked by certain advocates. The passionate beauty of the female voice, as contrasted with the coldness of the voice of the boy, was held to be an argument in favour of its introduction. It is not necessary to speak in detail of the various suggestions put forth, or to criticise seriatim the peculiar crotchets of many who have entered upon the subject. It is a matter of note, however, that few, if any, of those who could speak with authority with regard to certain of the points discussed have done so, and the whole correspondence has been less profitable than might have been expected, because it has been too discursive.

Some of the remarks we need not notice. Others which lose sight of the customs of the Church may be dealt with at once. Those who have been so delighted with their appearance that they have expressed a wish to see the introduction of surpliced women in our Cathedrals, are moved by fancy and speak without knowledge. There can be no doubt that it would be good to enlist the help of "willing women" in those places where there is no provision for the training of boys' voices; but they should not be habited in any semblance of ecclesiastical vestments, and their place should be in a gallery or in the front benches of the nave. They would be out of place in Cathedrals. These foundations are derived from the old monastic establishments, and the union of male and female voices in the ordinary services of the Cathedral is inconsistent with tradition and custom. There are, it is true, choirs attached to certain congregations of women in the Roman Church, but that Church, constant to ancient practices, forbids the employment of women in the choirs where men are also engaged. In the whole history of the Cathedrals of the Anglican Church there are no records showing that women singers have assisted in the celebration of daily worship. The decency and order of the ministration would be at an end if once the practice were to become general. It would be, therefore, not only inexpedient, but it would be unwise to countenance the innovation.

However delightful it may be to hear female voices in the choirs, and to mark the effect gained by the "expressive and passionate" interpretation of "beautiful music by beautiful voices," there can be no question that the integrity of the Service is better maintained by the performance of the music by the passionless tones of well-trained boys' voices. The service of the Church does not lose any dignity by the unemotional character of the singing of boys. Those who have any experience of a well-ordered service can testify to the effect produced by the tone of "the childish treble," an effect far more elevating than ever can be gained by the voice of a woman in church. The character of the service is therefore better sustained by the use of boys' voices.

If there are difficulties in the way of obtaining boys' voices, the attempt to form choirs in parish churches after the Cathedral models should be abandoned. The services of the ladies can be utilised in another way. They should be kept out of prominent view, and they might be distributed over the church and lead the singing among the congregation. The congregation should be encouraged to join in the Psalms, Canticles, and Hymns, and a weekly or more frequent practice might be instituted. This has been and is still done in many of the churches and chapels of the Nonconformists, with the best results. It is true that years ago the experiment was tried among the congregations of the Anglican Communion without producing the end expected. But musical knowledge was not so widely spread then as now, and it would be worth while to revive the practice and so make the endeavour to solve the question of congregational singing. This would obviate the necessity of establishing "Angelic Choirs" tricked out with undesirable imitations of ecclesiastical vestments, of which Dr. Liddon has remarked that "it is difficult to say whether the spectacle of ladies dressed in surplices, and so on, in church, is more irreverent than it is certainly grotesque."

By JOSEPH BENNETT.

WE have now reached a period in Handel's career when it began to take a steady and uniform course. He had one more battle to fight with his old enemies, the aristocracy; one more fall to suffer at their hands, and one more proof to give his foes that, like the fabled hero, contact with mother earth inspired him with renewed strength and courage. But these events, though they disturbed, did not change the current of the master's life. He had done for ever—in effect, if not intention—with Italian Opera and its vicissitudes, and he had settled down to regular work as a writer and producer of Oratorios and kindred things. At last Fate had placed him, after many corrections, and much against his will, in the right way to an immortality more glorious than any success in connection with the operatic stage could possibly have achieved.

We now see Handel busily engaged upon his own proper work. He brings out "Joseph and his Brethren" at Covent Garden in 1744, while engaged in the composition of "Belshazzar," the words of which had been supplied by his friend Jennens, the librettist of "The Messiah." Some, if not all, of the master's letters to Jennens in connection with "Belshazzar" have been preserved, and must necessarily be quoted here—necessarily, because even the slightest biographical sketch of Handel's career must contain every word from his pen that has come down to us. The first letter is simply a request for an instalment of the libretto:—

"Dear Sir,—Now I should be extremely glad to receive the first act, or what is ready, of the new oratorio with which you intend to favour me, that I might employ all my attention and time in order to answer, in some measure, the great obligation I lay under. This new favour will greatly increase my obligation. I remain, with all possible gratitude and respect," &c.

This brief note well illustrates the stately courtesy and ceremonious language of the time. Had Handel and Jennens lived a hundred and fifty years later, the first would probably have written to the second: "Dear Jennens,—When are you going to send me some more words? I am waiting, so hurry up, there's a good fellow, and oblige yours," &c.

The second letter, dated July 19, 1744, ten days later than the first, shows that Jennens had, in the interval, sent on the first "Act"—

"Dear Sir,—At my arrival in London, which was yesterday, I immediately perused the act of the oratorio with which you favoured me, and the little time only I had it, gives me great pleasure. Your reasons for the length of the first act are entirely satisfactory to me, and it is likewise my opinion to have the following acts short. I shall be very glad and much obliged to you if you will soon favour me with the remaining acts. Be pleased to point out these passages in 'The Messiah' which you think require altering. I desire my humble respects and thanks to my Lord Guernsey for his many civilities to me, and believe me to be," &c.

"Be pleased to point out these passages in 'The Messiah' which you think require altering." The reader is probably wondering what the sentence implies. It implies that Charles Jennens, Esq., of Gopsall Hall, was not satisfied with Handel's masterpiece, and had the temerity as well as the impertinence to point out what he regarded as open to improvement. We know this from one of his own letters, addressed to a friend, about a year later, in which the following passage occurs: "I shall show you a collection (compilation) I gave Handel, called 'Messiah,' which I value highly, and he has made a fine entertainment of it, though not so good as he might and ought to have done. I have with great difficulty made him correct some of the grossest faults in the composition. But he retained his overture obstinately, in which there are some passages far unworthy of Handel, but much more unworthy of 'The Messiah.'" Through these words we get a glimpse into the inner nature of the writer, and find Charles Jennens, Esq., to have had a considerable amount of the self-sufficiency which makes a man look like a fool. "I have . . . made him correct some of the grossest faults in the composition!" There's for you! Alas, poor man! Against the merit of his "Messiah" book must ever be set the demerit of his own pretensions to criticise what he was clearly unable to comprehend.

We now come to the third letter—an acknowledgment of words received and a request for more. It is dated "London, Agost ye 21, 1744":—

"Dear Sir,—The second act of the oratorio I have received safe, and own myself highly obliged to you for it. I am greatly pleased with it, and shall use my best endeavours to do it justice. I can only say that I impatiently wait for the third act, and desire (you) to believe me to be," &c.

On September 13 Handel addressed a fourth letter, very flattering to his correspondent's self-esteem, and, we may well believe, thoroughly appreciated by the critic of "The Messiah":—

"Dear Sir,—Your most excellent oratorio has given me great delight in setting it to music, and still engages me warmly. It is, indeed, a noble piece, very grand and uncommon; it has furnished me with expressions, and has given me opportunity to some very particular ideas, besides so many great choruses. I entreat you heartily to favour me soon with the last act, which I expect with anxiety, that I may regulate myself the better as to the length of it. I profess myself highly obliged to you for so generous a present, and desire you to believe me to be, with great esteem and respect, Sir," &c.

The final epistle—the most interesting and valuable of all—bears date October 2, 1744:—

"Dear Sir,—I have received the third act with a great deal of pleasure, as you can imagine, and you may believe that I think it a very fine and sublime oratorio, only really it is too long; if I should extend the musick it would last four hours and more. I retrenched already a great deal of musick, that I might preserve the poetry as much as I could; yet still it may be shortened. The anthems come in very properly, but would not the words 'Tell it out among the heathens that the Lord is King' be sufficient for our chorus? The anthem, 'The Lord preserveth all them that love Him, but scattereth abroad all the ungodly' (verse and chorus), 'My mouth shall speak the praise of the Lord, and let all flesh give thanks unto His holy name, for ever and ever—Amen,' concludes well the oratorio."

Handel would have been something more than human had he not taken a secret pleasure in correcting his corrector, and cutting out 200 of his lines. We do not know what answer Jennens made to the last letter, but, however he expressed himself, Handel carried out his fell design, and sacrificed the part to the exigencies of space. But Jennens would not submit to the shortening of his piece as far as the public eye was concerned. The 200 lines may go from Handel's score, as perforce they must, but they shall appear in the book of words, accompanied by a Nota bene: "The oratorio being thought too long, several things are marked with a black line drawn down the margin, as omitted in performance." Thus the world did not lose the full light of Jennens's genius, and he himself found balm for his wounded self-esteem.

"Belshazzar"—called at first "Belteshazzar"—was performed on March 23, 1745, and twice later, during the same Lenten series, the place being the King's Theatre, which Handel had taken after another failure of the nobility's opera. How the master must have triumphed in the capture of his enemy's citadel, and the taking possession, with beat of drum and sounding trumpets, of the stage they had been compelled to abandon! At the King's Theatre, during the same season, he produced "Hercules," which, in order of composition, immediately preceded "Belshazzar" (July 19—August 17, 1744). There, also, he revived "Deborah," "Saul," "The Messiah," and other works. Unfortunately, as foes of Handel, the nobility, though scotched, were not killed. Unable to start oratorios in opposition, as they had given operas, the distinguished personages in question anticipated modern political practices, and sought to damage the man they hated by giving social entertainments in order to keep people away from his concerts. My Lord this and my Lady that, as well as a certain Lady Brown, who "distinguished herself as a persevering enemy of Handel," opened their houses, even in Lent, and invited all the snobs and toadies of the day to come and bask in the refulgence of their presence. Thus the saloons were filled and poor Handel's theatre left almost empty. It is hardly matter for surprise that women were the master's bitterest enemies. "Always more impassioned than men, both in their hatred and in their love," writes Schœlcher, "the women were the most furious against him. They it were who invented the balls and tea-parties which were so fatal to the performances of Handel." And they it were, as we learn from a note to Smollett's satire, "Advice," who, in their heartless folly, wrecked the life of a poor, harmless entertainer named Russell—using him as a tool and then flinging him away. Russell, says the note, "was a famous mimic and singer engaged by certain ladies of quality, who engaged him to set up a puppet-show in opposition to the oratorios of Handel; but the town not seconding the capricious undertaking to injure one against whom they were unreasonably prejudiced, deserted their manager, whom they had promised to support, and let him sink under the expenses they had entailed upon him. He was accordingly thrown into prison, where his disappointment got the better of his reason, and he remained in all the ecstasy of despair, till, at last, his generous patronesses, after much solicitation, were prevailed upon to collect five pounds, on the payment of which he was admitted into Bedlam, where he continued bereft of understanding, and died in the utmost misery." Moved by the wrongs of this betrayed and wretched man, Smollett lashed the "generous patronesses" with a whip which some of them may have been thin-skinned enough to feel.

Again shall Handel raise his laurel'd brow,
Again shall harmony with rapture glow.
The spells dissolve—the combination breaks,
And Punch—no longer Frasi's rival—squeaks.
Lo! Russell falls a sacrifice to whim,
And starts amaz'd in Newgate, from his dream,
With trembling hands implores their promis'd aid,
And sees their favour like a vision fade.

But the sympathy of poets and noble natures could not save Handel from the consequences of a severe and resolute boycott. In vain the master engaged the best artists obtainable. His theatre remained empty; the remaining savings of his Irish enterprise were quickly absorbed by the expenses, and, early in 1745, the struggle seemed so hopeless that Handel, for the second time, went into bankruptcy. There was joy among the Philistines that day. Mayfair had again triumphed, and at every tea-table were chuckles of satisfaction, with more or less profane asseverations of delight in every club. "Now," they may have thought, "the 'bear' is down for good!" Was he? For a while he kept quiet, writing nothing and making no sign. But quietness with such a man is ominous to his foes. The lion is quiet just before he leaps, and, as the Lent of 1746 approached, Handel flashed out once more, ready for another struggle. Amazed and confounded, his enemies turned tail and fled. The feminine schemers and the swearing dandies gave up the fight, and we hear nothing of them through their mighty antagonist's remaining years of glory and success.

THE VALUE OF SECLUSION.

It was the luminous and voluminous Gibbon, we think, who once remarked that, while conversation might enrich the intellect, solitude was the true school for genius. The truth of this saying may not be of universal application, but it seems to us that in no province does it hold good with greater force than in that of musical composition. Whether we look at the matter from the à priori or the à posteriori standpoint, we shall find that the results of our enquiries conform to the Gibbonian maxim. It might, therefore, be imagined that, in recommending composers, and especially native composers, to pay more attention to this salutary precept, we are only engaged in the task, as the French say, of staving in an open door. We may be accused of preaching the most self-evident truism; but if the reminder be really needed, as we firmly believe, no further justification is demanded for offering advice—a thing which genius is not at all given to accepting. As we said at the outset, whichever way we look at the matter, the appropriateness of Gibbon's dictum to music is evident. If we view it apart from all details, nothing is more obvious than that a composer—who is, or should be, an entirely self-sufficing personage—will work best alone, say on a desert island or in a lighthouse, where he is free from all the interruptions of society and the roar and jangle of town life. The original incentive to the composition on which he is engaged may be either in nature or humanity—a landscape or a ladylove—but we contend that the sounds into which the subject-matter translates itself are likely to be more beautiful and appropriate when the composer is alone and undisturbed than otherwise. The intrusion of mundane noises has a good deal, but not everything, to do with it; for the ear with which the composer hears is the mental or inner ear, and there have been instances of musicians—Mozart, for instance—who could write down what had taken shape in their brains when all sorts of discordant noises were going on around them. But although silence is a great boon to the composer, solitude is a greater. We do not suppose that the sighing of the breeze or the roaring of the waves would ever seriously interfere with the flow of a composer's inspiration—rather the reverse; while the rattling of cabs, the unseasonable caterwauling of cats, the crash of the incoming coals, or the long-drawn blasts of the street cornet-player, can hardly be argued to stimulate or sooth the imagination. Now, if we turn from this general and abstract speculation on the value of solitude to concrete examples, we shall find that the practice of many of the most eminent composers entirely bears us out. The conditions of Haydn's surroundings were undoubtedly such as to secure him leisure and quiet through a great many years of his life. Mozart's case was peculiar. His power of abstraction was so remarkable as to exempt him from the necessity of isolation. But we read that he had a special predilection for sitting up late at night to play, and found his brain worked better and quicker in the open air. Its isolation was one of the chief features of Beethoven's life. It might be urged that it was a necessity, and that we have no right on that ground to regard it as a virtue. But, so far as his creative faculties were concerned, there can be no doubt that solitude was essential to their free play. He was devoted to nature and the country, and his inspirations seem to have come most readily to him in his solitary rambles in the summer, which he always spent in the country. Sir James Crichton-Browne, in the address recently read at the British Medical Congress, stated it as his opinion that the imagination was most active in the spring. With Beethoven the summer was the creative time. In the winter, he told a friend, he did little beyond writing out and scoring what he composed in the summer. Beethoven's isolation, however, was materially enhanced by his physical infirmities. Nothing cuts a man off so much from his fellows as deafness. But there are not wanting those who urge that in a great composer the calamity may not be an altogether unmixed evil. Mr. Finck, in his essay on "How Composers work," points out how musicians are in one respect more fortunate than painters. "If Titian had lost his eyesight he could never have painted another picture. Whereas Beethoven, after losing his principal sense, still continued to compose better than ever. Mr. Thayer even thinks that, from a purely artistic view, Beethoven's deafness may have been an advantage to him; for it compelled him to concentrate all his thoughts on the symphonies in his head, undisturbed by the harsh noises of the external world." Weber and Wagner were both greatly addicted to solitary walks. Mendelssohn was one of the most sociable of men, but some of his finest work was the outcome of a direct communing with Nature as she revealed herself to him in her forests and floods and caves. The long lonely rambles in the Italian hills which Berlioz describes with so much charm in his Memoirs were fertile in musical thoughts. If we come down to the present time, we shall find that the leading composers of the day are constituted like their predecessors. Verdi leads the life of a country gentleman, rarely emerging from his solitude and entertaining but few visitors. Admirers of Grieg will remember that he loves to compose in a little cottage which he has built for himself in a secluded spot on the bank of one of the most beautiful fjords in Norway. And, finally, with Brahms the need of solitude and quiet in the country is imperative whenever he is engaged on any creative work. Many are the stories told of the ingenious devices by which he endeavours to secure immunity from all noise or interruption.

Whether one theorises about the matter, or regards it from the point of view of history, the results, as we have seen, are much the same. One would naturally expect the great creative minds to be enamoured of isolation, and so they have generally been found to be. Let it not, however, be supposed that our aim is to urge every student of composition to go out into the wilderness in the hope that the divine afflatus will at once fall upon him. Solitude will not create genius any more than society will destroy it. The fact is, that the ability to go into intellectual retreat, as it were, and shut oneself off from one's fellows is the mark of a self-sufficing and independent nature which it is not given to all to possess. The average man is gregarious, and likes the company of his kind whether at work or play. To be able to live alone is rather a test of originality or of strength of purpose. A great many people frequent places of amusement for the reason assigned by Dr. Johnson—they are afraid to sit at home and think. They are either bored because their minds are ill-stored with subjects of reflection, or depressed by the intrusion of harassing and worrying thoughts. Happy, in such a case, are those who have the creative instinct to fall back upon, indulgence in which brings the keenest intellectual pleasure of which mankind is capable. The self-absorption of an original musical composer, when at work, can only be compared with that of a great mathematician engaged on the most transcendental problems. For, whereas, to quote another sensible remark of Mr. Finck, "in literature we blame a writer who, as the expression goes, 'evolves his facts from his inner consciousness,' in music this proceeding is evidence of the highest genius, because music has only a few elementary ‘facts’ or prototypes in nature.” This it is which gives to the highest forms of music an indefinable, transcendental, and inaccessible character—the fit outcome of that attitude of isolation and abstraction in which they are conceived in the brain of the composer. It is possible, as we have seen in the case of Mozart, for a man to attain to this state even when surrounded by his fellows and in the midst of distracting influences. But solitude and quiet are in most cases indispensable for the free exercise of the creative faculty, and, as the world grows older, solitude and quiet are increasingly difficult to attain. For, in the first place, the minds and ears of many of us have become so attuned to the noise and bustle of city life that the calm of the cloister would prove disconcerting. There are many, in fact, to whom solitude proves a strain rather than a relaxation, and whose brains are stimulated by the friction of town life. This is true above all of the journalist and literary piece-worker. To use the cant phrase, there is no “copy” to be made out of country life. Those who have tried to do so, even when endowed with real genius, like the late Richard Jefferies, have found it exceedingly hard to make both ends meet. Composers, however, are not under the same obligation to find materials for “copy” outside themselves. The thoughts out of which their works are constructed spring up unbidden in their brains, and the annals of their art go far to show that their productive powers are enhanced and not impaired by the isolation and tranquillity which a life in the country affords. Unfortunately, with a musician the choice of residence is not a mere matter of inclination and preference. He must live where the means of subsistence are most readily afforded, and that in England is, in nine cases out of ten, amid the turmoil of the largest city of the world. We feel convinced that the great musical work of the future to be done in England is that of decentralization. Once the demand for first-rate music in the provincial towns is sufficient to induce first-rate musicians to settle there, one can have little doubt as to the salutary and stimulating effect which this diffusion of talent will exercise on the taste of the public. On good local orchestras, above all, we believe the future of English music to depend. London must always remain the headquarters of the representative side of the art, but it is in the greater quiet and seclusion, attainable either in the country or in country towns that the creative side of our music will be best attended to.

In this connection it is permissible to revert to a point on which we have touched in former contributions to these columns. We refer to the power—say, rather, the privilege—which our cultivated millionaires have of befriending music by establishing private orchestras at their own residences. There are not a few men in this kingdom who are considerably exercised to devise means of getting rid of their riches. They manage to spend four or five thousand a year on a racing yacht, a similar sum on a moor or a deer forest, and certainly not less on their hunters. Then there are their gardens and conservatories to be kept up. Some original minds run to a real tennis court. But what single instance is there at the present day of an English peer or commoner who has conceived the idea of retaining the services of a private Kapellmeister and of keeping up a small orchestra of his own? Life in a great country house is often rapid enough. How far brighter it would be for a daily or even a weekly concert! In such surroundings, always presuming that the musician had a free hand, good work could not fail to be done, if the analogy of Germany holds good to any extent. Failing the advent of such enlightened patronage, we venture to propose that a Society should be started having for its aim the preservation of young composers of merit by exempting them from the necessity of teaching, and by supplying them with the funds necessary to enable them to study and compose, “far from the madding crowd’s ignoble strife” in an atmosphere of serene and leisurely seclusion.

MUSICAL CLEFS AND THEIR ABOLITION.

By T. L. SOUTHGATE.

WE are constantly being told that this is an age of reform; institutions and methods, whether social, political, or artistic, are on their trial. If any of these do not come up to, what some deem, the modern enlightened standard, they must be improved away, and something new set up in their place. It is useless to plead that “constitutions” (to employ the word in the sense that Newton, Dryden, and Shakespeare used it) have rendered signal service to humanity in the past; to point out that no mundane system is absolutely perfect, and it not infrequently happens that a complaint advanced against a certain constitution reflects less on that method or institution itself than on the people connected with it. The majority of mankind lack the power of perception, and thoroughness; this deficiency alike affects the judgment of many of our people and causes the indolent school-boy to lament the difficulties of the system he is set to study. It is futile to tell such persons that all consolidated institutions and recognised systems are the outcome of long, well-tried experience, and that they represent the concrete result of satisfied requirements extending from the dawn of civilisation to the wants of to-day. A certain section of mankind constantly demands what are termed “royal roads,” and faddists are continually starting up with some ignis fatuus to gratify this sort of people for the nonce. The system of musical notation has from time to time afforded a suitable target for the literary shafts of smart iconoclastic writers who dwell upon the difficulties it presents to beginners, and are usually ready with some new plans of their own which they guarantee will make everything simple and delightful.

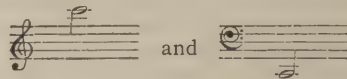

Some such thoughts as these will probably occur to the minds of our musicians who have perused a singular article entitled “The Abolition of Musical Clefs,” which appeared in a recent number of the Universal Review, under the signature “E. Globe Ellis.” The name of this writer is not familiar to our musical world, and judging from some of his (or her) statements, it is doubtful whether he possesses sufficient acquaintance with the subject of notation to qualify him for dealing with its improvement. True, he obtains a sort of quasi-certificate, for at the commencement of the essay we read:—“This article has been read and approved as suggesting a practical and much-needed reform by several eminent musical authorities.—Ed. U.R.” But Mr. Harry Quilter, the editor of the Universal Review, is not looked upon as an expert in such matters, and if proof were needed of the value of his knowledge musical, it is aptly afforded in this very issue by the insertion of a coarse picture representing a girl playing a viola (or a fiddle much out of drawing) in the customary position, which bears the title “The Violoncello”! But beyond these accidents, the internal evidence supplied by the article itself cannot but excite a suspicion that its writer has not mastered the subject on which he poses as an authority and a reformer. We meet with examples of this throughout the article. It opens with the following argument:—

are relics of an obsolete method of notation invented by the monks of the Middle Ages. When first devised they formed part of a reasonable plan; the plan itself was a clumsy one, but so far as it went it was complete. In later times, when the awkwardness of the system became evident, a compromise was arranged, and its unity was destroyed. What we now have is an unscientific and accidental method, consequently an imperfect, confusing one; its cause, its origin, are matters of history, known to but one in a hundred performers; its inconveniences are suffered by all. Among the many institutions that still interfere with study, and cry aloud for reform, there can scarcely be found one so irrational, so easily amended, as the division of the musical stave. The five or six clefs now surviving are the G; the C, in the form of soprano, alto, and tenor clefs; and the F clef. Every note in the compass of the piano may be written in five different ways; any one symbol may mean five different things, the distinction lies in the sign that goes before."

Did space permit it might be usefully employed in examining and refuting almost every statement in this introduction, but the errors can only be glanced at. In the first place, there are not, and have never been, "five or six clefs." There are but three, though we no longer call them the F finale, the C acutum, and the G superacutum, as did the "clumsy" monks of the Middle Ages. The clefs or keys (clavis) to indicate the particular lines employed, and the method of notation which the old musicians invented, are in no sense of the word "obsolete." The only part of the old system that is obsolete is the distinction that was once made in the form or shape of the clefs, according as they were used for plain-song or for figurate and measurable music. Examples and an explanation of these peculiarities will be found in "Erotemata Musicae," by Lucas Lossius, 1570, and also in M. M. David and Lussy's "Histoire de la Notation Musicale." Although Mr. Ellis, in common with others, speaks of the soprano, alto, and tenor clefs, this is a misnomer; the C clef never changes its position of standing on the middle line of the great stave of eleven lines, and any consecutive set of five lines can be selected to use with it. The clef really retains, though to the unpractised eye it appears to change, its place; instead, therefore, of speaking of the soprano, alto, and tenor clefs, we ought more correctly to say the soprano, alto, and tenor staves. The two coloured lines of Guido, yellow for C and red for F, that first served to indicate the relative position of the hitherto uncertain pneumas, with the gradual development of music, grew into the great stave of eleven lines, the clefs determining the names of the notes standing on the respective lines on which these indicating "keys" were placed. Mr. Ellis finds fault with the plan, but few others who have thought on the subject are of his opinion. The great stave supplied us with a ladder of steps, picturing to the eye the graduated and exact position occupied by every note that the human voice could sing; it was, in its way, as great an invention as is the art of expressing words in writing. The pictorial stave was a vast improvement on the numerous and multiform letter system of the Greeks and Romans, and on the ambiguity of the pneumas. For nearly a thousand years it has withstood all the attacks that those who are unable to appreciate its full significance have advanced against it. Justice would seem to require that we ought to be thankful, and admire the old monks who invented it, instead of terming the invention "clumsy," and glibly denouncing it as an "unscientific, awkward, accidental method," just because some complain that they find it difficult to master. There is a desire now-a-days to acquire knowledge with the least possible amount of exertion, and to grudge time occupied in continuous study. A protest may well be uttered against this mania for making everything so easy and simple; we see examples of what this feeling leads to in such announcements as "The piano taught in twelve lessons"—"How to vamp accompaniments for one guinea"—"German (or French) acquired in six months." In opposition to Mr. Ellis, it may be maintained that our staff notation is scientific, ingenious, and rational. As to being able to write "every note in the compass of the piano in five different ways," one would like to see these two notes so dealt with—without employing so inordinate a number of ledger lines that the eye could not readily take count of them—let us see these in five different ways:—

That this five-way statement is not a thoughtless piece of assertion is apparent from an after sentence (page 227), where the writer tells us that "every note of the scale must be learnt five times over, and may be looked for in any of its five various forms." On such extraneous evidence as that the early Italian musicians put their words (not notes) in detached syllables on a set of parallel lines, Mr. Ellis, speaking of the various clefs "apparently representing the same sound"—the note between the staves (C)—says, "For the invention of this ingenious muddle we are indebted to the Romans." Now, as a matter of history, the stave and its clefs, as a means of representing the absolute pitch of a note were wholly unknown to the Romans. Our writer opines that "No person in his right senses would have sat down to deliberately plan such a jumble." But there is no "jumble" or "ingenious muddle"; the great stave was designed to represent all the sounds required for vocal music, and it completely carried out its purpose. The reason why all the eleven lines were not constantly used is simple. As men and boys were not always banded together in singing two, three, or four-part music, it was not necessary to use all these lines. An appreciation of this fact supplies the clue to the whole situation. Sometimes the top portion of the stave was used, sometimes the middle, and sometimes the bottom, the three clefs were the keys (as the origin of the words tells us) to settle just what portion of the stave was in use, and the lines on which they were respectively placed ingeniously indicated the very sounds associated with the fourth, sixth, and eighth lines of the great stave. It will thus be perceived that any set of five consecutive lines could be employed, the clef pointing out just which set was in use; thus useless lines were discarded, and the eye was not perplexed with having to look at a lot of lines not required. This species of natural selection was a clever, certainly not a jumbling, one as our writer terms it. By the way, in his illustration, page 225, he places the "Alto Clef" on the fifth line of the great stave; this is wrong, it should stand upon the sixth line. In order to enforce his (or her) arguments as to the blundering of our ancestors, and the dread of innovations they have from time to time exhibited, Mr. Ellis contrasts the modern ironclads with the old ships of war with ornamental prows, rowed with oars, and asks if alterations have been made in our build of ships, why "our clefs remain the same"? He does not explain what is the necessary analogy between ships and clefs, unless indeed he considers that they both have to do with the sea (C); he is particularly severe upon this clef, stigmatizing its defenders as exhibiting "a limpet-like clinging to senseless mouldy custom." Logicians will term such a line of reasoning argumentum ad absurdum. At page 228 we meet with the singular statement "Trombones are tuned in three keys," a piece of information likely to prove a crux to our students in orchestration. On the difficulties of reading a full score owing to "the practice of scoring the lines for transposing instruments in the keys in which they appear to the performer," Mr. Ellis dilates at considerable length; he expresses much pity for "the unfortunate conductor who is called upon to translate C into E flat, A, B, &c., in pursuit of his transposing horns." He makes merry over the process recommended by Dr. Marx for facilitating the reading of these transposing scores, characterising it as "a large order for the imagination when carried out for various instruments through the thirty (sic) major and minor keys." In conclusion, he declares that "the subject is involved, and between the transpositions and the clefs any attempt at a lucid explanation is as likely to fail as an illumination in a pea-soup fog." "As regards the clefs, let them be abolished for ever; we have outgrown them." The employment of the word "fog" is suggestive. Musicians will ask what is the necessary connection between clefs and crooks; and why players on instruments of the mutation type should be specially aggrieved at having to read all their music in one set key. That the necessary transposition on these instruments is mechanical, and not a mental effort, seems to have escaped Mr. Ellis's consideration. Musicians well understand the value of the identical fingering of the transposing brass and wood-wind instruments; their peculiarity presents no valid reason why this feature should be advanced as an argument for "the abolition of musical clefs."

Mr. Ellis's commiseration for conductors who, besides "carving the air with a bâton," have to "read and understand simultaneously twenty-two parts," is quite touching; these unfortunate persons will doubtless be as much surprised as a Chinaman must be over his denunciation of "the obscure Chinese typography of their terribly complicated letters"; and our Teutonic friends will be amused at his censure of them:—"Though the Germans are a degree more enlightened than the Chinamen, they cannot bring themselves to accept the Roman alphabet. Its introduction would seriously damage the spectacle trade, and, as a protectionist country, Germany no doubt feels herself bound to guard the interests of that deserving industry." Many more extracts from this article might be culled if unlimited space permitted, but it is necessary now to proceed to examine Mr. Ellis's proposal of what to do when we have got rid of the "obscure, hieroglyphical clefs."

At the outset it may be stated that his scheme is not original, nor is it workable. In the first part of his article he prints from Knight's Encyclopædia, 1861, a short extract giving a brief account of a reform attempted in the reign of Charles the Second, by a distinguished mathematician, the Rev. Thomas Salmon, M.A., of Trinity College, Oxford, and rector of Mepsall, Bedfordshire. This proposal was violently opposed by musicians of the day, and so this "simple feasible plan and rational attempt to remove much of the difficulty attending the practice of music was strangled in its birth." That is nearly all that Mr. Ellis says of this scheme, the evident prototype of his own; but a few more words as to what took place may be added here. Salmon, in the title of his essay, stated that his object was "the casting away the perplexity of different clefs and uniting all sorts of musick in one universal character." He laid down the thesis that the lowest line of every stave should be called G, and in order to distinguish the relative places of the several parts of a composition, he marked the treble with the letter T, "the mean" with M, and the bass with B. He permitted the occasional use of a few ledger lines, but if there were many notes together above or below the staves, he put them on the lines and spaces of the same name, prefixing the appellation of the octave to which they belonged. For Salmon's book, published by J. Carr, in 1672, John Birchensha, a notable musician of the time, wrote a preface recommending the method—which, by the way, the Royal Society seems to have approved of. The scheme attracted the attention of Matthew Locke, who issued a small octavo, "The present practice of music vindicated against the exceptions and new way of attaining music lately published by Tho. Salmon." Here the proposed plan was proved to be untenable; it was shown that it would introduce more difficulties in music than it would remove, and that in some cases it could not possibly be put into practice. Salmon replied in "A Vindication," and was then attacked by J. Phillips in his "Duellum Musicum," and reduced to silence, a letter of Playford's closing the dispute, which was marked throughout by the intemperance of language and personal abuse characteristic of the contentions of the day. Copies of these publications are to be found in the old Sacred Harmonic Society's Library, now attached to the Royal College of Music. Thus ended the first notable amateur effort to abolish the clefs. Space would fail to cite all the attempts that have been made to tinker musical notation. A few only may be mentioned. Thomas Delafond, in 1725, suggested the exclusive employment of the F or bass clef. In 1811 S. Rootsey, in an attempt to "simplify notation," discarded all clefs. About the year 1840 Miss S. A. Glover, of Norwich, wrote a pamphlet advocating the Tetrachordal method, and essentially ignored the clefs. The eventual outcome of this was the Tonic Sol-fa system, which is practically a modification of the old Roman and later letter tablature plan; it was not designed to abolish clefs, but for a very different object. Galin-Chevé and the Belgian Meerens methods both modify the clef signs. According to a report issued a few years ago by a learned society at Zurich, there are some fifty systems of musical notation. Those interested in this question will find further historical particulars and suggestions in the published papers that have been read before "The Musical Association" by W. Sedley Taylor, John Hullah, Dr. W. Pole, Sir John Stainer, Rev. T. Helmore, Mr. Arthur Hill, and others.

Among other systems mentioned, one author refers to "the chromatic or keyboard stave . . . brought out in a special number of a musical magazine some two years ago, together with the portrait of a nameless gentleman in a beard (sic), presumably the inventor." As to which it may be observed that the method in question was invented by a Mrs. L. Reid, that an instrument cleverly constructed to work with this plan was shown in the Paris Exhibition of 1867, and that an account of it, with a drawing, appeared in the Musical Standard in the November of that year.

Now for Mr. Ellis's plan. He proposes the addition of one line to the great stave, claiming for this scheme that "every note on every part of the piano [why the piano only?] would be represented by a single sign which could not be mistaken or altered for another by any preceding figure; . . . one note would mean one thing in any octave instrument or key." This thesis is not particularly clear, and some statements are open to dispute, but let us examine the illustrations furnished in support of his scheme. Here they are:—

EXAMPLE 2.—THE SEVEN PIANOFORTE OCTAVES WRITTEN ON ONE STAVE.

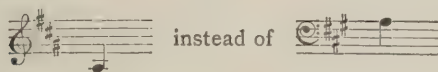

The first thing that strikes one in glancing at this "perfected" system is that the staff has at its head one of the much abused clefs, the G; next, that in Example 1, a multiplicity of "confused fumbling ledger lines" is still employed, and thirdly that the various octaves being represented by the same signs occupying identical positions on the five-line staff, it has become necessary to mark off these different octaves by a series of figures placed above or below the staff, as the case may be. Now what has been gained by "the adoption of this universal character," as Mr. Ellis terms his proposed system? He claims that "instead of learning two sets of notation the beginner would need to master but one, and children fighting with their rudiments would be spared their confused fumbling between the upper and lower staves"—which reminds us that children have to learn a good many things more difficult than the names and positions of the notes on our staff. For instance, they have to "fight" until they acquire a knowledge of the difference between the shape of the capital and small letters of our alphabet, both as to written and printed characters, amounting to 104 in all. We pay no attention to the complaints of the stupid and lazy as to the trouble and difficulty they experience in acquiring this necessary knowledge; they must fight with their ignorance and wrestle with their fumbling until they have succeeded in mastering this commencement of a civilised education. But alarming as may be this embryotic condition of the rudiments of learning, it is as nothing to the after prospect of those boys and girls who go on to acquire German, Greek, and possibly Hindostanee, and who will have to hold in their mind some 500 characters! Such unfortunates ought doubtless to be objects of the deepest commiseration. By the way, dilating on the "obscure, terribly complicated Chinese typography," our author writes:—"Any attempt at printing with ready-cast letters, as we do it in Europe, would in that language be beyond the powers of a compositor." This is, indeed, a strange assertion. The Chinese print plenty of books in their peculiar characters, and Mr. Ellis will no doubt be surprised to learn that our British and Foreign Bible Society issue from the Mission press at Shanghai several portions of the Scriptures in Chinese, and the setting of their type characters appears to be quite within the powers of our London compositors. However all this may be, it is impossible to admit that there is any net gain in the adoption of Mr. Ellis's plan; indeed, besides the tiresome foisting in of figures, there is a distinct loss. One great advantage of the linear system of notation is that it presents a ladder of sounds; the eye perceives in a moment whether the progression from any note to the following is up or down. Now, if the entire compass of sounds is to be cut up into octaves, apparently repeating themselves, and all identical in position on the five lines, being only distinguished from one another by certain letters or figures, and if a passage is so constructed that it goes through two or more octaves in its course, under this new plan its picturesque progression becomes lost, and we may get a downward motion on paper, whereas the melody really ascends. This is just what happens now when the music dodges about among the ledger lines; surely it would not be a gain to amplify and perpetuate this exceptional feature of our present custom! Mr. Ellis does not explain his plan very clearly, so we may be mistaken in supposing that for the transposing instruments in a score he proposes to use some novel shaped clefs, calling them by some unpronounceable names. What analogy exists between such queer words as "Uyir, Txhhg, Swggp, Rvffo, Zmqxsvme, Xkevgtkc, and Wjdupsjb," and our three clefs, and what illustrations they furnish to indicate the difference between the written and the produced sounds by instruments, transposing or not, it is impossible to perceive. Mr. Ellis fails to describe or illustrate his scheme so fully as he might have done, and so the old warning applies, "Brevis esse laboro, obscurus fio." He prints the impressions of some conductors whose opinions he invited over his improvement. Dealing with these in a perfunctory manner, he declines to accept the dictum of such accomplished artists as Sarasate and experienced teachers on the ground that "they are practically incapable of throwing back their mind to the primitive blank state when they were first made aware of the clef's existence"; but he contents himself with dedicating his method to beginners in their first three weeks, who, he believes, will "welcome his proposal with tears of joy." Possibly Mr. Ellis may be a believer in the wisdom which a certain authority instructs us is to be found in the mouth of babes and sucklings; such a contention only serves to amuse an unregenerate world. However, in this country we do not consult children as to what system of education they prefer to adopt and what text-books they deem proper to study.

By way of showing Mr. Ellis's system as applied to a full score, he is satisfied to give two bars of illustration. The first of these he terms "an imaginary octave of A," a vague description, but which, when we look at the imaginary octave, seems to be the four A's from the first ledger line above the treble stave to the second space of the bass stave, allotted to various instruments. It suffices to say that all the parts are written on the treble stave, the various octaves being indicated by figures, and no heed is paid to the exigencies of the transposing instruments. Despite his condemnation of ledger lines the tenor trombone appears—

while the bassi part is written—all of which we are expected to accept as a much needed improvement. Then he gives us in score the first bar of the concluding Prestissimo of Beethoven's "Choral Symphony"— which, as he naïvely observes, "is not exceptionally complicated." The "Present Method" and "Proposed Method" are printed side by side; the new treatment is like that already commented on above; all the notes, both for voices and the orchestral instruments, are in the G clef, their respective octaves being indicated by figures underneath. It looks odd, not to say anomalous, to note that the tenor is placed an octave higher in the stave than the alto, thus but, of course, the new figure sign 1 that the inventor imposes on his followers sets the matter quite right, and renders it all delightfully simple and easy.

These are all the illustrations Mr. Ellis ventures on, and wisely. There is not much difficulty in making people understand a simple fragment of melody in alphabetical, linear, figure, or whatever system it may be written. But as to the elaborate pianoforte and organ music of to-day he is silent. We ought to have some examples as to how such complicated music would look in this, both-staves-alike, and sectionised octave scheme, and then we should be in a better position to judge of the vaunted improvements. And examples might be given of such pieces as, e.g., Schumann's Novelette in F and the "Nachtstücke," Mendelssohn's "Rondo Capriccioso," Thalberg's "Home, sweet home," Moszkowski's "From Foreign Parts," Grieg's "Ballade," some of Liszt's Studies on octaves and tenths, Best's Organ Fantasia in D, Jensen's "Wanderbilder," Chopin's Impromptu in A, a fragment of Wagner's instrumentation, or his "Rhapsodie Hongroise," and the full score of the opening movement of Sullivan's "Golden Legend." The putting of these into intelligible notation will test the feasibility of the scheme. Mr. Ellis asks that "finished musicians should unlearn a little for the benefit of generations to come"; he appeals to someone of influence in the musical world to take up his "universal notation," and considers that an "institution like the Academy, the Royal College, or the Guildhall in England, or some Conservatorium on the Continent—or better still in America, where innovations are not looked upon as inventions of the devil—ought to insist that every pupil should play only from the new method." He then indulges in a prophetic rhapsody as to the eager publishers who would speedily enter the field to supply the best standard works in the new notation, and believes that certificated teachers would spread the reformed system over the country and win adult converts. As he pathetically puts it, the reform must come from the powerful, for "infants of seven years when they are beginning the piano cannot issue newspapers or hold public meetings." But before all this glowing success can take place, Mr. Ellis will have to demonstrate the advantage of his system, and must convince the experts and authorities in the musical world that it is feasible under all conditions, and an improvement on the system which has stood the test of well nigh a thousand years' use. Until he has done this we shall regard his plan as yet another outcome of zealous faddism, and relegate it to the limbo where rest many such crude and impracticable experiments of the past.

Although in olden times the clefs were moved about to suit various compasses and instruments, they are now definitely settled. Musicians appreciate the clef system as an ingenious method for extending a limited stave, and defining the precise compasses of the various tone-members of the complete orchestra, whether they be instruments or voices. Granted that it requires intelligence, study, and practice fully to appreciate and master the scheme, in the absence of any better plan there is little likelihood that so useful and exact a system will be abolished.

GLOUCESTER MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

THE stewards of the Festival, which begins at Gloucester on the 3rd inst. (166th meeting of the Three Choirs), are to be congratulated upon having drawn up a most excellent and interesting programme—one which combines in happy and just proportion works that are classical with others of recent production, among which are two novelties. Let us at once mention the classics, and so have done with them. They are "Elijah," Rossini's "Stabat Mater," the first two parts of the "Creation," Gounod's "Messe Solennelle," the "Last Judgment," and "The Messiah." These call for no remark save that they belong to the list of works which have a strong attraction for the general provincial public, who know them by repute or observation, and may be expected to answer their powerful call. Readers of THE MUSICAL TIMES will naturally take more interest in the less familiar compositions, which include Dr. Parry's "Judith"—an Oratorio chosen, we may well believe, for its own inherent worth, rather than because its author has connections with Gloucester of an intimate character. The list comprises, also, Sullivan's "Prodigal Son," an offspring, so to speak, of the Three Choir Festivals, since it was written for a celebration at Hereford; Dr. Mackenzie's "Dream of Jubal," produced at Liverpool in February last; and Sullivan's ubiquitous and inevitable "Golden Legend." All these, it will freely and frankly be admitted, have a right to be heard on such an occasion, and form a distinct and powerful attraction. Sir Arthur Sullivan's great successes gained since the now distant day in which the "Prodigal Son" was written, invest that work with renewed interest, while making it a subject of curiosity. It has been so seldom heard—for reasons which a consideration of its character do not explain—that the "Prodigal Son" now comes before the public, certainly before the Gloucester public, as practically a new thing, to be heard and judged afresh. With regard to the "Dream of Jubal," novelty of character and treatment alone suffices to justify its presence and to form its recommendation. We congratulate the gifted Scottish composer upon the fact that his beautiful work has a place in a Festival programme. It will now receive the widespread attention which a detached and casual performance is seldom able to obtain.

We now approach the new works to which reference has already been made. One of them is a setting—termed, for want of a better name, a Cantata—of some verses by Mrs. Hemans. In her "Elysium," for soprano solo, orchestra, and chorus, Miss Ellicott, daughter of the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, puts forward a claim to be considered not only as a conspicuous representative of female composers, but a no less prominent and satisfactory champion of amateur talent in a high walk of art. The nature and limits of Miss Ellicott's subject did not allow of very ambitious flights, and on that account it was, perhaps, the more suitable, while in her handling of the theme the composer took wise counsel with herself as to the avoidance of effort in excess of its fair demands. The result is a satisfactory piece of music, expressive of the sentiments of the poetry, technically good, and æsthetically attractive. Contrast and variety are well secured without exacting demands upon the performers, and we shall be much surprised if Miss Ellicott's piece does not obtain a liberal amount of favour with choral societies, to whose general requirements it is exactly suited.

The second and larger novelty has been supplied by Mr. C. Lee Williams, Organist of Gloucester Cathedral, and takes the form of a "Church Cantata," largely after the model supplied by Sebastian Bach's numerous examples. The librettist, Mr. Joseph Bennett, selected as his theme the last visit of our Lord to the house of Martha and Mary (hence the name of the work, the "Last Night at Bethany"), and thus brought the Cantata within the scope of Lenten and Passion Week observances, which now so frequently include an elaborate musical service. In outline the book is a reading of the sacred text with interpolated meditations. It opens with an expression of desire (chorus) for the Saviour's presence among His people, couched in unrhymed verse:—

Sweet Lord and Saviour come!
Without Thee life nor light
Hath this poor world.
Our hearts are dark and cold,
We dwell in gloom profound,
When Thou'rt afar, &c.

The Scriptural passage, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock," &c., is then recited by a baritone, followed by a choral—

Sweet promise of a heaven below,
When Christ with us a guest shall dwell!
Such condescension who can know?
Such love and pity who can tell?
But how unworthy we Beneath our roof to see
The Lord whom angels praise through all eternity!

This completes an introductory section, and now a contralto voice begins the narrative, telling of the visit to Bethany and the supper prepared by Martha, Lazarus being "one of them that sat at meat with Him." The meditation upon this begins with a tenor solo, "O God, most merciful and gentle," expressive of a fervent desire to share the marriage supper of the Lamb in heaven. The chorus takes this up—

O Master, let us in,
O Saviour, let us in,
Throw wide the door.
We come in lowliness,
In humblest guise, prepared
The feast to serve.

At this point the congregation, as representing the Christian church, joins in the well-known lyric from Hymns Ancient and Modern, "The Heavenly Word proceeding forth"; thus giving a mystic meaning to the idea of the supper. At its close, the Narrator tells of the anointing of our Lord's feet by Mary, whereupon a representative meditator (soprano) dwells upon the unworthiness of the costliest gift that man can offer—

All that I have is Thine, my Lord,
And I am Thine, O Saviour, King,
Yet what unworthy sacrifice
The best that to Thy feet I bring? &c.

Another verse of the narrative records the exclamation of Judas about the superior claims of the poor to the cost of the unguent. Here the chorus sharply intervenes—

The poor! O Man of sorrows!
O Wanderer, faint and weary!
Who is so poor as Thou? &c.

The words of Jesus, ending with "But Me ye have not always," suggest a new idea to the meditators, who appeal for the continued presence of the Lord—

By the good that Thou hast wrought,
By the fight that Thou hast fought,
Counting pain and sorrow nought,
Blessed Saviour, stay! &c.

The short and simple story is now told, but the work has not ended. Soft orchestral music suggests that night has come and the Son of Man is sleeping. It is once broken by the words, "For so He giveth His Beloved sleep," sung in four-part harmony by supposed angelic voices. The chorus now contemplates the Saviour's rest, and calls upon nature to silence her voices—

Calm ye, O winds around Bethany blowing,
Hush all your voices, O waters loud flowing,
No sound arise
From earth or skies,

Till 'gain in the East morning splendours are glowing, &c.

The sleeping Lord is next invoked—

In slumber gather strength, my Jesus,
For all the pains that lie before Thee—
The faithlessness of friends,
The traitor's shameless kiss, &c.

the whole ending with the triumphant thought of the Resurrection.

With reference to the music with which Mr. Williams has clothed the moving story, we shall not anticipate what will have to be said in a critical review of the performance. But our readers may accept an assurance that the composer has met the chief requirement of a work intended for Church use. His music is profoundly devotional, tenderly expressive, and in harmony with the best traditions of sacred art. Nothing in it seems to be there for its own sake, but rather because the subject demands it, and we hear in the music the very voice of the situation or the sentiment. This is high praise, but it is certainly deserved, and will be accorded by every one who takes the words and their setting as "one and indivisible." It need scarcely be added that, in his solos, Mr. Williams has made no concessions to mere display. Grave and tender, they demand from the performer a religious expression, and can tolerate no other. The structure of the choruses, and the treatment of the harmonies, accord with the method of English church music, and we see every reason to believe that the English church will find in the "Last Night at Bethany" a welcome addition to its répertoire. The foregoing is all that need at present be said.

Turning to the personnel of the Festival, we find about 180 stewards, among them the Dean of Gloucester, who will, on Tuesday morning, plead for the connected charity. The vocal soloists engaged are Mesdames Albani, Williams, Brereton, Wilson, and Morgan; Messrs. Lloyd, Nicholl, Foote, and Brereton, with Mr. Charles Fry as reciter. Dr. Colborne (Hereford) and Mr. Done (Worcester) are organists, Mr. Carrodus leads the orchestra, and Mr. C. Lee Williams conducts. Sir Arthur Sullivan, Dr. Parry, and Dr. Mackenzie direct the performance of their respective works, and by their presence supply the Festival with a valuable measure of personal interest. The chorus and orchestra are of the usual strength and quality.

There remains only to add that, at the full Choral Service on Friday evening, the "Hymn of Praise" will be performed, and that the prospects of the Festival at the time of writing are unusually good, as, indeed, they ought to be.

ELSEWHERE in our columns we call the attention of our readers to the serious attack with which English composers and proprietors of copyright works are threatened from abroad at the hands of our Canadian cousins. It may surprise many to learn that an onslaught of similar character, but far more difficult to cope with, on account of its insidious nature, is already being persistently delivered upon the same class of bread-winners by a considerable section of our own brothers and sisters. We allude to the practice, which is growing every day more pronounced, of reproducing in manuscript copyright works. This danger obviously more directly affects the musical interest than any other of the similarly protected arts; and, on that account, it becomes a fit subject for comment in these columns. The young lady of to-day has barely completed her purchase of a copyright song before she proceeds, with the very best intentions, to copy it for the use of her accompanist; or she magnanimously lends it to her friends, one after another, who do not return it until they have called into existence so many more copies, with results varying according to the skill and experience of the copyist. The parson purchases a Book of Chants, an Anthem, or a Service; and, jealous though he be of his interests in his own sermons, forthwith devotes himself to copy, and re-copy, the work he has purchased, until he has duly provided for the necessities of each member of his choir. Careful expounder, as he is, of the eighth and other commandments, he does not hesitate to chant the "Kyrie" from a manuscript copy, the unlawful production of his own hand. The enthusiastic organiser of local Concerts is no less enterprising in the interests of the art he loves; but it is at the expense of the composer of the works honoured by his selection; not unfrequently his victim is the librettist, whose verses are furtively incorporated into the improvised programme, a whole staff of organised copyists being specially retained for the purpose. If he is very case-hardened, he goes so far as to employ the local printer; when, however, the printer is admitted to a share in the spoil the risk run is considerable, for the chance of detection is very much enhanced by the greater circulation thus given to the pirated copies, and is not always counterbalanced by the prospect of the profit to be obtained by their sale. But the manuscript copying almost defies detection, and being, therefore, very difficult to combat, is much more generally resorted to. The young lady, the parson, the local enthusiast, and other similar practitioners are all very good and upright people in their way; to accuse any of them of pilfering, not to mention theft, would kindle within them a spontaneous feeling of righteous indignation and resentment. The animus furandi, in most cases, probably is not present; but culpable negligence, amounting to an absolute recklessness concerning the property of others, or to an almost wilful disregard of the distinction between meum and tuum, predominates to so unmistakable a degree that they are equally guilty of an offence against the law and are no less blameworthy when tried by the code of honour. By the law of the land "Copyright" is construed to mean "the sole and exclusive liberty of printing or otherwise multiplying copies of any subject to which the said word is applied"; consequently any copy of a copyright work, whether it appears in print or in manuscript, is an infringement of the rights which the law confers upon authors, and which it protects not only for their benefit, but also for the encouragement of their art, from which the public in its turn derives both benefit and pleasure. Obviously the sale of the copyright work in the hands of the composer or his publisher must be taken to be prejudiced precisely to the extent of the number of copies thus unlawfully called into existence, and any unlawful reproduction is an encroachment upon the composer's rights of property which he is at liberty to resist by legal proceedings, or by seizure of the pirated copies wherever they may be found. When culprits of this class are brought to book the excuses usually offered are that they did not know that copying was an offence, or that they did not know that the work was copyright, or that the law "is absurd" and ought to be rectified. To the first excuse the composer may justly reply that ignorance of the law is no excuse, and that, if it were, the law of conscience and commonsense cannot be so complacently evaded; to the second he may, with equal justice, reply that all works are to be assumed to be copyright until the fact that they are non-copyright is established, by appealing to the publisher or otherwise; and that those who take no trouble to ascertain ascertainable facts are least of all justified in pleading their own ignorance; to the third he is not called upon to reply at all, so long as this country can boast of a Legislature which has power to make laws and to alter them. It cannot be too generally known that anyone who copies a copyright work, whether in manuscript or otherwise, does so at his peril, and that if his fraud is undetected it is none the less a fraud upon well-established rights.

IN an interesting and amusing article in the first number of the Sligo Young Men's Magazine, on the subject of the "Popular Appreciation of Music," reference is made to "The last rose of summer," which the writer assumes to be the production of Carolan. Writing from the country where the tune originates, the assertion may be made upon some authoritative basis. If so, we shall have to abandon the belief that the melody is by R. A. Millikin, of Cork, who adapted it to his words "The Groves of Blarney," which was a burlesque upon the efforts of a wandering minstrel who visited the mansions of the well-to-do and wrote ungrammatical but complimentary songs upon their houses and grounds. One of the most famous of these efforts was "Castle Hyde," the music of which was inserted in Smith's Collection with polished words. The old words are still printed as a broadside ballad. The "weaver poet"—as he was called—wrote in earnest, Millikin in jest; but the chief charms of the air of the exaggerated song "Castle Hyde" could not be destroyed even by means of a parody, as any one who will take the trouble to compare the two melodies can satisfy himself—

CASTLE HYDE.

There is no need to give the air of "The last rose of summer," or, to call it by its original title, "The Groves of Blarney." It would be interesting to learn whether the melody was known before the year 1790, the date of the production of "Castle Hyde," what title was given to it by Carolan, who died in 1738, and whether it was ever associated with other words.

THERE are certain musicians, English and American, who desire to have all musical terms and expressions in their native tongue rather than in Italian. They believe that the dictionary would supply all that is necessary, that the language is sufficiently copious to meet all needs. The Germans have done much to show their independence in the matter by the employment of Teutonic phrases. These, however, do not always supply all that is required, and the force of association is too strong to make any change from established custom thoroughly effective. Italian words, which are undoubtedly the best for musical purposes, have served the convenience of those who are particular concerning the performance of their music since the days when it became the fashion to indicate intention by the use of approximate expressions derived from foreign sources. Many English composers were content with the employment of a very few words to convey their ideas. These were confined to such words as "fast" or "slow," "loud" or "soft." In course of time these general directions proved insufficient, and expression became subject to more and more subtleties of refinement. The meaning of the composer was painfully set down, and, as some contend, was unduly elaborated. Hence arose the wish to return to primitive practice, and the abuse of the thing prompted measures for sweeping reform. In France, as in Germany, and afterwards in America, it became the custom to give the titles of operas in the vernacular. Some enthusiasts propose to continue this practice, and to offer English equivalents not only for musical terms, but also for musical titles as far as possible. Thus, "La Sonambula" is to become "The sleep walker (female)," and "Don Giovanni" is to be "Lord John." The programmes (outlines) of musical performances arranged after such a plan, while they would be completely intelligible to the unlearned, would at the same time afford a large amount of curious information. To be thoroughly consistent, the names of the performers should also, where possible, be translated. Instead of "Batti, batti," by Madame Patti, obbligato for 'Cello, Signor Piatti, to read, "Beat, beat," by Mrs. Compacts, with compulsion for the little, Mr. Plates. To avoid such obvious absurdities the universal retention of Italian words should be insisted on, so that there may be one language only employed throughout the world for musical terms.

GERMAN opera conductors of the present day have occasionally been found fault with on the score of their inability to appreciate foreign artists. From this reproach they may fairly be relieved, so far as the recent performances at Bayreuth are concerned, where a Belgian singer, Mr. Blauwaert—whose fine voice and effective declamation created a most favourable impression on the occasion of the performance of Benoit's Lucifer in the Albert Hall—has won the suffrages both of the public and the cognoscenti as represented by so distinguished a critic as Herr Lessmann of Berlin. But an even more welcome instance of this capacity to recognise that talent is not a matter of geography is forthcoming in the tidings that Herr Levi, the General Director of the Bayreuth Festival, has offered a two years' engagement at the Hof-Opera, at Munich, to Mr. Plunket Greene, the young Irish bass, who has already established himself in the popular favour in London and the provinces. The compliment is a remarkable one, and its significance is further enhanced by the fact that, so far as we are aware, Mr. Plunket Greene has hitherto had no experience on the boards. His commanding presence, however, his excellent enunciation, and the dramatic feeling which he always throws into his singing afford the best guarantee that the experiment will be crowned with success. It is further stated in the German papers that Madame Wagner, who expressed a desire to hear Mr. Greene sing, was greatly impressed by his performance. And yet Ireland declares that she is the least favoured country in the world. It would be interesting to know how many natives of Great Britain have won acceptance on the German operatic stage since Kelly—also an Irishman—in Mozart's day.

ON another page is a reference to the Salmon and Locke controversy. The abuse the combatants shower on one another is astonishing. If only certain rabid journals, who have long ago used up their store of vituperation, could get these books, they would probably be able to start afresh. In one place, Locke speaks of Salmon's "illiterate absurdities for which it was necessary to bring him to the bar of reason," and goes on to call him "A purblind, copper-nos'd, sparrow-mouth'd, goggle-ey'd, hunch-back'd devil. A half-witted mountebank, a universitie chicken with a long maggot in his young skull." The other retorts that Locke "only possesses a ricketty embryo of a kickshaw brain, and is a Jackanapes and little wriggling p— (Popish?) maggot." John Phillips, who styles himself "a gentleman," goes at the mathematical parson, whom he banters over his "Trinitarian loins." Here is his introduction to the little volume:—

As Marsyas, though by Minerva taught,
While with insipid Novelties he thought
Great Phœbus of his lustre to deprive;
Was for his bold presumption flea'd alive;
So while our Locke, th' Apollo of our age,
This Musical Phanatick doth engage;
He both o'ercomes and punishes his pride,
Though he Fleas not his skin, he Tanns his Hide.

If the law of libel had existed at that period, there would have been plenty of work for the courts of justice, and an abundance of copy for the daily papers.

MR. F. H. COWEN'S new Cantata, set to words by Mr. Joseph Bennett, deals with an Old English subject. The superstitious observances connected with St. John's Day, in Midsummer—namely, the bonfires, the sowing of hempseed, the eating of bread and cheese, the plucking of the rose at midnight and concealing it until the following St. John's Day at Christmastide, when, if it maintains its freshness, it will be plucked from the bosom of the wearer by "him who will her husband be," all form piquant details in the unfolding of a story in which the love incidents are strong and dramatic. Mr. Cowen has succeeded in imparting to his music a thoroughly English character. Not only the songs, but the choruses and the dances are full of tunefulness, and the subject is so ably treated that it will probably become as popular as Bennett's "May Queen," one of the very few good Cantatas on English subjects now existing. It will probably be heard in London for the first time during the course of the ensuing season.

A CORRESPONDENT has suggested that the names of the authors of the words of songs should be given, in addition to the names of the composers, in those programmes of musical performances which do not contain the verses fully set forth. This would, doubtless, answer very well in certain cases, and the union of such names as Shakespeare and Arne, Scott and Bishop, Burns and Mackenzie, would add to the artistic interest of the selection. But as many programmes now-a-days are made up of songs in which the higher canons of art and the lower rules of grammar are either ignored or despised, the most merciful thing to do, next to suppressing the song altogether, is to conceal the author's name, and look with a pitying and charitable eye upon his delinquencies.

ARCHDEACON FARRAR, in a speech which he recently made at the opening of the Westminster Art and Industry Exhibition, told a rather amusing story of the late Earl of Beaconsfield. At a former Exhibition of the sort held some ten years ago, the Conservative leader consented to give away the prizes. Amongst the exhibits was a violin, the handiwork of a blacksmith, "but it was unfortunately made of metal, and when he (the Archdeacon) pointed out to Lord Beaconsfield the mistake—viz., that metal interfered with the resonance of the strings, his Lordship replied that he should always think of his friend, Mr. Smith, as the harmonious blacksmith."

FACTS, RUMOURS, AND REMARKS.

WOMEN'S Rights again! A lady professor writes to a musical contemporary in a high state of indignation, because members of her sex are not eligible to join the Royal Academy of Music Club. "Pray," she asks, "do we not also stand in need of sympathy and help, and fresh sources of information, just as much as our male brothers in art? Do not we ladies have to teach, to play and sing in public for a living just in the same way as you do? Of course we do, and so we ought to have just as much consideration extended to us. I call it a shame we should be so ignored." We should, perhaps, seriously discuss this feminine outburst if the facts made it worth while. Let it be known to the aggrieved sex that the R.A.M. Club is simply an association for the purpose chiefly of dining together once a year. The lady professor adds: "We don't want to attend grand banquets such as the gentlemen went to at the Holborn Restaurant last week; we should be satisfied with tea." This settles the question. Let there be another R.A.M. Club, meeting once a year to drink tea, and with membership confined to ladies.

IN the course of an essay on "Modern Singers and Singing," read by Mr. John Towers, of Manchester, before the National Music Teachers' Association at Philadelphia, the following illustration appeared: "Only a short while back I heard a prima donna, with an annual income which was nothing if not princely, warble forth the astounding information that two lovers, concerned in the ditty, could not breathe. This was repeated ad nauseam, until the impression became confirmed that it was a decided case of asphyxia. Had the singer only pursued the phrase to its logical issue, it would have been found that the hapless pair had only found a trifle of difficulty in breathing that 'tender, last farewell,' and thus a very painful state of suspense, on the part of the hearer, would have been happily averted." The phrasing, even of great singers, is sometimes atrocious. We can all remember the time—it is past now—when Adelina Patti sang: "An exile from home splendour—dazzles in vain; O give me my lowly—thatched cottage again!"

MR. W. J. HENDERSON, who is the musical critic of the New York Times, has recently been among us taking notes, and sending them home to be printed. Among other things, he compares operatic performances in London with those in the Empire City, and remarks: "We hear no such choruses, no such orchestras, and no such conducting. . . . There was a general smoothness, delicacy, and unanimity of sentiment about the work of the fine body of musicians (Covent Garden orchestra) that we seldom hear in New York. The best work of our excellent orchestra at the Metropolitan does not quite equal it in expressiveness and significance of shading. The chorus, too, was never ragged, and never out of tune, but always precise in time, exact in pitch, and correct in expression."

THE Richter concert audience will hardly recognise itself in Mr. Henderson's description: "An exceedingly brilliant audience regarded the proceedings (performance of a scene from 'Götterdämmerung') with a sort of amused curiosity, and went away, no doubt, more convinced than ever that Wagner's later operas consisted chiefly of discordant shrieks." He adds that Richter's patrons, after years of Wagner culture, would "need several courses of Walter Damrosch's explanatory lectures before they would awake to a consciousness of what it was all about." But Richter's conducting has been "a revelation to these Londoners," poor benighted creatures, whose opportunities are infinitely fewer and less valuable than those enjoyed by cultured and refined New York. "Happy New York and still happier Boston!" exclaims Mr. Henderson.

A WEEKLY contemporary quotes the following from the Baltimore Sun:—"Ice Cream Matinée, Saturday.—The Thompson Opera Company will sing 'The Bohemian Girl' at Harris's Academy of Music, Saturday afternoon, when every one in attendance will be served with ice cream and souvenir napkins." This paragraph is said to be "refreshing in its originality"; but, with the exception of the "souvenir napkins," the idea is not original, for, several years ago, at the establishment in London then termed the "English Opera House," an ice was promised to each member of the audience in the boxes; the project, however, was eventually abandoned, we believe, in consequence of a clamorous demand for some sliding scale of refreshment for the occupants of the pit and gallery.

A BLIND fiddler was playing at a wedding party in a rural district. He kept the dancers well and happily at work, and so admirably did he handle the bow that he excited the wonder of a musician who was among the guests. At the conclusion of one of the dances our musical visitor stopped before the performer and said, "I am delighted with your playing, which to me is all the more wonderful because you cannot see. Tell me, how do you manage to remember the tunes and the variations? Do you play by the ear, or how?" "Well, sir, to tell you the honest truth, I have never made a contract for so long a period as to play by the year. I generally play by the night."

A WISH having been generally expressed that an endeavour should be made to establish a permanent memorial of the late Carl Rosa, and it having been suggested that the foundation of a Musical Scholarship to bear his name would be a very appropriate mode of carrying out the desire, steps are in progress to carry it into effect. An influential London committee will be formed, with sub-committees in the chief provincial cities and towns which are visited by the English Opera Company founded by Mr. Rosa, and subscriptions will be invited from those who desire to assist in affording another opportunity for musical education.

THE Examiner in Music to the Society of Arts, in presenting his report to the Council, takes occasion to quote certain of the answers made by the candidates to the questions set on the last examination paper. "In the question asking for explanations of the meaning of certain Italian expressions in very common use, some of the answers given were instructive. For instance, the term Volti Subito, which means turn quick, was variously said to mean subside willingly, leap under, continue without stopping, in a quiet, submissive style, quietness in an undertone, and giving free marching substance or style."

"A STILL further astonishing amount of peculiar information is given in the answers to the History questions. The first which was set forth was, 'Give a list of eight English composers in chronological order who were living before the year 1820. Mention one work by each.' This question allowed much latitude, in the hope that it might bring out the knowledge of the names and works of our native musicians up to the second decade of the present century. The answers proved that the scope allowed was not considered sufficient by all. The statements made showed a comprehensive and patriotic grasp of the subject."

"THE names of Beethoven, Grann, Clementi, Andreas Romberg, Gade, Schubert, Mozart, Wagner, Stephen Heller, Bezet, Liszt (often spelt Lizst, or Lizts), Brahm, Spohr, Anthon Rubinstein, Hadyn, Piccini, Glück (sic), Weber, Chopin, Hérold, Monte Verde, Mendelssohn, Lully, Gounod, Ambrose Thomas, Carissimi, Rameau, Donizetti, with Barnby, sometimes called Branbey, Dr. Bridges, meritorious organist, Cowen, and such remarkable composers as Cerney, Mechencie, Divoke, Cotch, Dr. Harn, Percel, Juskin du pres, Mucann, the composer of "Calirrhoe," and Summicheal Costa, were given all among the English composers."

"SOME of the works attributed to native musicians are worthy of mention. Bull wrote 'Rule, Britannia!'; Arne wrote 'Able'; Barnbey, 'Hezekia'; Chopin, 'Les deux journées'; Balfe wrote 'La Sonnanbula' and the 'Boheimain Girl'; Handel wrote 'Idomeneo'; Liszt wrote 'Regatta Venezuila'; Back wrote 'Fuguis' and 'Dido and Inias'; Bennet, a 'Barchoral'; Arne wrote anthems and church music, Goss wrote masses, and Beethoven wrote a waltz. Many of these 'facts' are derived from the inner consciousness of the writers, some may be traced to the 'meritorious text-books.'"

"THE answers to the question, 'Who was Rossini? What influence did he exercise over the art of music in his time?' brought to light much curious and interesting intelligence. His nationality was various. He was 'a German by birth, but was born at Pesaro in Italy'; 'he was born in 1670 and died in 1826'; he was a 'Frenchman,' 'a noted writer of the French,' the place of nativity was 'Pizzarro in Genoa'; he was 'an Italian, and made people feel drunk with the sparke and richness of his melody'; he composed 'Oberon,' 'Don Giovanni,' 'Der Frieschutz,' and 'Stabet Matar.'"

"He was 'an accomplished writer of violin music and produced some of the prettiest melodies'; it is 'to him we owe the extension of chords stuck together in ar peggio'; he was 'the founder of some institution or another'; 'the great aim of his life was to make the music he wrote an interpretation of the words it was set to'; he 'broke many of the laws of music'; he 'considerable altered the stage'; he 'was noted for using many instruments not invented before'; in his 'composition he used the chromatic scale very much, and goes very deep in harmony.'"

"He was 'the first taking up the style, and therefore to make a great change in music'; he was 'the cause of much censure and bickering through his writings';

he 'promoted a less strict mode of writing and other beneficial things'; and, finally, 'Giachono Rossini was born at Pezarro in 1792. In the year 1774 there was war raging in Paris between the Gluckists and Piccinists. Gluck wanted to do away with the old restraint of the Italian aria, and improve opera from a dramatic point of view. Piccini remained true to the old Italian style, and Rossini helped him to carry it on still further by his operas, 'Tancredi,' 'William Tell,' and 'Dorma del Lago.'"

ENCOURAGED by the success of the Festival at Hanley last year, the managers have determined to persevere with their enterprise, and give another series of performances in 1890. The proceedings, we learn, will continue through two days, and in their course a new cantata, "Fair Rosamund," the work of the late Desmond L. Ryan and Dr. Heap, will be produced for the first time. Poor Ryan! The "log" he kept on his voyage to Australia shows how gallantly, in the midst of much discomfort, and spite of weakening health, he laboured at his last libretto, which will ever have a melancholy interest for those who knew the author.

CLERGYMEN and others who advertise for organists allow us no peace; and sometimes we really do not know whether to laugh at or cry over their offers. A Rector, who comes from a seaside town, but cautiously gives a London address, recently made known his want of a musician willing to play for the sum of £20 per annum, the tuning to be thrown in. We do not fail to see that tuning is better than looking after a reverend gentleman's horse; nor do we overlook the Rector's comforting assurance that there is "a good opening for music pupils." There need be a supplement to the eight shillings a week.

LETTERS recently to hand from New York contain, it is stated, some interesting news concerning the proposed doings of Mr. Abbey and his Operatic Company in America—how that Madame Albani will take the part of Desdemona in Verdi's "Otello," Tamagno playing the title-character; how that the season will open in Chicago, continue in Mexico and San Francisco, and end in New York, &c. We did not need letters from New York to tell us this, inasmuch as the information appeared in a London daily some weeks ago.

At Brussels, we hear that a Society has been formed for the study and practice of instruments once in general favour, but now almost unknown in our Concert-rooms, such as the Clavi-cembalo, the viol da gamba, the viol d'amore, &c., and that the members of this body have already given historical Concerts with much success. As many of these instruments are freely used in the works of Bach, Handel, Couperin, Rameau, &c., it is to be hoped that performances of such deep interest to musicians may be shortly heard in the metropolis.

ENGLISH opera as a principle is much belauded, and all due encouragement is given in this country to every worthy effort to place it upon a basis of respectability, if not of honour. But English operas have little monetary value. Balfe's last opera, "The Talisman," was recently sold for one hundred pounds, and the other day the score of Macfarren's opera "Helvellyn," with all rights, was knocked down in the auction room for five-and-twenty shillings, and it is not yet five-and-twenty years old.

THE Chicago Indicator exclaims: "Aha! 'tis as we thought! the infant phenomena are not only increasing in number, but decreasing in age"; and then proceeds to tell how Master Johnnie McKeever, aged 3, plays the violin. "His version of 'Pop goes the weasel' is said to be surprising enough to warrant any expectations." Our contemporary pertinently suggests that Master Johnnie should learn the art of playing the fiddle and holding a bottle of milk at the same time.

DR. HORATIUS BONAR, Minister of Grange Free Church, Edinburgh, who was well known as an author and a popular hymn-writer, many of his pieces having been translated into several languages, died in Edinburgh on July 31, in his eighty-first year. His beautiful verses "I heard the voice of Jesus say," "I lay my sins on Jesus," "The Bridegroom comes," and many others are familiar to the congregations of all churches whatever be their creed.

IN the notice of a Concert given by the South London Musical Club, a musical contemporary says: "Indeed, the members of the Club throughout the evening managed, by excellent performances, to raise the hope that they will do much to rescue part-singing from the miserable state into which it has sunk in the metropolis." Is not this somewhat rough upon those conductors who have zealously worked for years in our London Choral Societies, and innocently believed that they had produced highly successful results?

A POLITICAL meeting with "music between the speeches" is a decided novelty; but a local paper informs us that not only has such an event lately taken place, but that the vocal and instrumental solos were "most welcome, as adding the ever delightful charm of variety." This, we think, will scarcely be accepted as a compliment, for it seems to imply either that the speeches required to be propped up by the music or the music to be propped up by the speeches.

SOME of the musical journals in America love each other very much. One speaks of a contemporary as a "corrupt and putrid organism that purports to be a journal, and to represent the music trade in this country. Inadvertently wherever it appears it carries with it its fetid atmosphere and proclaims its own rottenness. It is the courier only of its own moral disease." Surely the writer must have been reading the Eatanswill Gazette!

It is satisfactory to find that the pianoforte which was lately cast up on the beach at Goring proved to be one of Collard and Collard's make. Had it been the manufacture of one of our advertising firms, we might have had a tale woven around the incident, with even, perhaps, a fanciful allusion to the effect its exquisite tone produced when first heard by the mermaids. A waterproof pianoforte is as fertile a subject for advertisement as a fire-proof safe.

THE Australian craze for "protection" seems to be extending to matters musical. We read in the Sydney Herald of "an agitation against securing the services of the premier organist of the day for the opening of the largest organ in the world." This movement is, it seems, based upon "Australia for the Australians." Such crass folly is well-nigh past belief.

BUENOS AYRES appears resolved to set an example which deserves the warmest recognition from all music-lovers; for, following closely upon the announcement that a Conservatoire of Music is about to be established there, we meet with the following advertisement: "Organist wanted, for Church in Buenos Ayres. Double manual, 24 stops. Salary, £100."

In a recent advertisement of "Six Lieder ohne Worte for the Piano," the publisher says, "These must not be mistaken for Mendelssohn's, but are six original pieces, published at 3s. each." If there should be any chance of these compositions being "mistaken for Mendelssohn's," the danger would surely have been lessened by giving them some other title than the one adopted by that composer.

GENTLEMEN who "do" weddings for provincial journals should so far look up the subject of music as to secure themselves against sentences like the following:—"Miss Hutchence presided at the harmonium; and very efficiently played 'In nature worth' by Haydn, 'Loegrin' by Wagnal, and 'Roman march.'" "Loegrin' by Wagnal!" And such is fame!

THE worship of bigness goes on. Miss Augusta Holmes (or Holmès) has composed a Symphonic Ode for soprano solo, chorus of 2,000 voices, and four complete orchestras. Her work is to be performed, we are told, in the great hall of the Paris Exhibition, at a cost of £12,000; the orchestras engaged being those of Colonne, Lamoureux, the Opéra, and the Conservatoire. Shade of Berlioz, you are not "in it."

DURING their next series of Concerts, Messrs. Paterson and Sons, of Edinburgh, will produce Dr. Mackenzie's "Cotter's Saturday Night" and a new Cantata, "The Cameronian's Dream," by Mr. Hamish MacCunn. In each case the composer will conduct. The managers are to be congratulated upon their spirit of enterprise, and, not less, upon their encouragement of home productions.

In our last number we alluded to the improvement in the music provided for promenaders at open-air gatherings; but that this change is at present not very general is shown by a paragraph in a contemporary, which informs us that at a recent fashionable garden-party the music consisted of "solos and duets on the banjo, mandolin, and guitar."

In Mr. Justin McCarthy's novel "My Enemy's Daughter," one of his characters is made to say, "My dear madame, do you really suppose there is one note, one half-note, of this music that is not familiar to me as the letters of the alphabet?" Would so clever a man as the author of this work thus show his want of knowledge of any other art than music?

THERE is some talk among American protectionists of preventing the landing of Mr. Nikisch, the newly-appointed Conductor of the Boston Symphony Concerts. Mr. Nikisch will arrive in America, it is assumed, under a contract, and the contract labour law forbids all and sundry such immigration. But surely the Musicians' Protective Union will let the matter end in talk!

It may be interesting to those who are concerned in the adoption and retention of the title of Professor to know that at Monaco there is a Professeur de Roulette, in Ostend there is a Professeur de Santé pour les Chiens et Chats Malades, and even in Paris there is a Professeur of writing, reading, and all things in general.

THEY are making a hash of Weber's "Sylvana" at Kroll's Theatre, Berlin. Mr. Ernest Pasqué has "modified the book" and Mr. Ferdinand Langer has added to the music several pieces from the master's other works, including the "Invitation à la Valse" and the first Allegro of a Pianoforte Sonata. We now wait for the next case.

AN American journal, referring to the work which Mr. Gilbert and Sir Arthur Sullivan have in hand, describes the authors as "the cynic and the peer." A Frenchman might so have written in good faith, but not an American, surely. Still, if there be a joke, we do not see where it comes in.

MAYOR GRANT, of New York, has been thinking about putting his foot down on street musicians. "Taking all the complaints together," said Mayor Grant, "they convince me that the wandering minstrels make considerable of a nuisance of themselves. I propose to have the nuisance abated."

AN Arion Sängersfest party recently travelled from New York to Wilkesbarre. "Just before the train reached Mauch Chunk the beer gave out, and the 150 noble singers, twenty-five musicians, and twenty ladies, cried in bitter anguish. Some of them wanted to return to New York at once."

It has been stated that Mr. Burnand will write the English version of Messrs. Bisson and Planquette's new opera for the Prince of Wales's Theatre. We sincerely hope that he has measured the difficulty of the task before him; else there may be surprise, not to say disappointment.

MISS EMMA ABBOTT has come over to Europe on business connected with her next operatic tour. She lays great stress on the fact of having ordered thirty new dresses, and the good news was sometime since cabled to the States by fascinated interviewers.

As country reporters evidently think that, in noticing a meeting, it is tame merely to record that a band was in attendance, is there no writer with sufficient spirit and independence not to say that it "discoursed sweet music"?

THE REV. DR. HAVERGAL, Prebendary of Hereford, is preparing a small volume of Reminiscences of the late Sir Frederick Ouseley. It will contain a number of interesting anecdotes, written by many of the personal friends of the lamented Professor.

A MICHIGAN woman has exhibited extraordinary perceptiveness. She pitched her "parlor organ" into the yard and made a bonfire of it on the plea that it was a device of the Evil One.

FLUTE-PLAYERS should rejoice to hear that Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel have published four volumes of music composed by that eminent flautist, Frederic the Great.

VICTOR WILDER, the well-known musical critic of Gil Blas, has received the cross of Chevalier de la Légion d'honneur. They manage some things very well in France.

Two new French books may be recommended to musical students: Tiersot's "Histoire de la Chanson populaire en France," and the fourteenth volume of the "Annales du Théâtre et de la Musique."

A TRANSATLANTIC journal prints the following dialogue, which is, no doubt, very old. Missionary: "Are you a Christian, young man?" Young Man: "Oh, dear, no! I'm a choir singer!"

THE young pianist, Eugène d'Albert, still keeps his name before the public; but this time the news from Berlin merely informs us that he has become a vegetarian.

It is reported that Mr. F. Cliffe has been asked by the Philharmonic directors to compose an orchestral work for their next series of concerts. Good.

MR. JEFFERSON BRICK has gone into the musical profession. He calls himself Professor Frankenstein, and is just sixteen years old.

LUIGI CANEPA, the composer of several Italian operas, has abandoned his profession and gone into business as a baker. What a useful example!

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

ON Saturday afternoon, July 27, at St. James's Hall, Piccadilly, the Lady De Grey distributed the prizes gained by the students of the above Institution during the past session. There was a large attendance of ladies and gentlemen, and nearly 500 students were present on the platform. After a solo by Miss Minnie Kirton, which was much applauded, Dr. A. C. Mackenzie, Principal of the Academy, delivered an address. He congratulated not only the Board of Directors and the Committee of Management, but his colleagues and professors upon a highly successful session. The large number of students—bordering on 500—had, he need not say, taxed their energies to the very utmost. Their scheme of local examinations throughout the country, hitherto conducted alone, would in future be carried on in combination with the Royal College of Music; and the Prince of Wales had consented to act as President of that very desirable union. The examination of the students had been conducted in the most searching—he might almost say severe—manner, with the strictest impartiality, and those who had been fortunate enough to gain awards might certainly attach a deep value to them. During the past session the students had carried out their work with great spirit; and he would remind those who were now leaving the Academy to seek their fortunes in the outer world, that upon their shoulders rested very much the good name and fair fame of that Institution. Lady De Grey then performed the ceremony of presenting the prizes, the successful students being loudly applauded. Dr. Mackenzie proposed a vote of thanks to Lady De Grey, and the proceedings terminated with the singing of the National Anthem.

THE BAYREUTH FESTIVAL PLAYS.

PERHAPS the most remarkable feature of the recent series of these performances, which came to an end on Sunday, the 18th ult., was the largely increased measure of public support accorded to them. The Bayreuth Theatre is no longer a temple of art solely for the limited number of fanatical worshippers of the deceased master. The larger world of rational music-lovers has become interested in the work carried on there. The poet-composer has taken his place by the side of the other great masters, and there is no further need to employ special advocacy of his claims to consideration, while, on the other hand, to persist in denying these claims has become ridiculous. These thoughts came uppermost in the mind as one surveyed the heterogeneous crowd, gathered from all parts of the world, which assembled in front of the Bayreuth Theatre every afternoon during the late festival. As the works given this year were merely repetitions of those produced on former occasions, there is no occasion to speak particularly as to the manner of performance. Let it suffice to say that to hear "Tristan und Isolde" and "Die Meistersinger" under the most favourable conditions, it is necessary to journey to the little Franconian town, while of course "Parsifal" cannot be heard at all elsewhere, and there is happily no chance of this wise rule being abrogated. Naturally those who regard the Wagner Theatre as a valuable institution for inculcating the purest principles of art will be glad to learn that the lofty standard previously observed in the performances has been, on the whole, well maintained, though at the same time there are causes for anxiety as to the future. We refer more particularly to the supply of young artists worthy to take the place of those who have become veterans in the cause. On some of the latter the hand of time is already apparent in diminishing vocal ability and other qualities necessary for the ideal interpretation of Wagner's heroes and heroines. Mr. Vogl preserves the nobility of his style, and is still unapproachable as Tristan, but his voice begins to show signs of wear. Again, Madame Materna, although she maintains her natural powers in a manner that may be regarded as astonishing, cannot much longer prove an acceptable Kundry. Madame Sucher's Isolde continues to develop in queenly grace and in the expression of intense womanly passion, but her extreme upper notes are beginning to fail, and Miss Theresa Malten's voice is also on the wane. On the other hand, Mr. Gura as Hans Sachs and Mr. Betz in the same character, and also in that of Kurwenal, are still without flaw. Turning to the younger artists, the only two who may be spoken of in the highest terms, as being thoroughly fitted for the duties they have undertaken, are Mr. Friedrichs as Beckmesser and Mr. Hofmüller as David. The former is a comedian of the first rank, and the latter produces his pleasant light tenor voice in the best and purest manner. He has evidently been trained in a good school. The striking success of Mr. van Dyck in the rôle of Parsifal has been due rather to his great dramatic intelligence and his fine appearance than to any special vocal excellence. His voice is powerful, but it is not perfect in quality, and whether it is under complete control or not it is difficult to say, as Parsifal is hardly a singing part. Neither Mr. Grüning as Walter nor Miss Dressler as Eva can be regarded as thoroughly satisfactory, the former being indeed inferior to Mr. Gudehus in the same part.

As regards the general presentation of the works, perfection has been approached if not actually attained. Mr. Levi's reading of "Parsifal" is far brighter and more effective than that of Mr. Mottl last year, while, on the other hand, the Carlsruhe conductor has thoroughly mastered the intricacies of "Tristan und Isolde," and the performance under his baton amounted to a revelation even to those familiar with the work. As to the interpretation of "Die Meistersinger," under Dr. Richter, it need only be said that, as compared with the tamely correct performance at Covent Garden, it was a genuine treat, all the piquancy and delicate points, in which the score abounds, being brought out with masterly skill. The chorus was better in all departments than that of last year, and the perfect unity of method in the Grail scene, in the flower-maidens' chorus, and in the last scene in "Die Meistersinger" was very remarkable, not less so being the delicious quality of tone when the entire force was singing mezza voce. It is now settled that "Tannhäuser" will be the next production in 1891, and several of the details are already arranged. A more difficult question will be the selection of artists for the three principal characters, and it is understood that this matter is under the most serious consideration.

THE COLOGNE CHORAL UNION AND CHORAL MUSIC IN ITALY.

THE recent tour of the celebrated Cologne "Männer Gesang-Verein" in Italy constituted a musical event of unusual interest, not only because the appearance of that Society on Italian soil was an absolute novelty in itself, but also because the fact of this peaceful and artistic invasion from the North being hailed everywhere with satisfaction, affords eloquent proof of the present remarkable receptivity and eagerness of the educated musical mind of Italy, as compared with the time, not so very long ago, when, musically speaking, Italy lived almost entirely on her traditions, and rested on the faded laurels of her bygone supremacy. The strides which musical education has made in Italy during the last decade or two, more especially in the field of lyric drama, are enormous; and the change and development of style and treatment amount to little less than a revolution, which is in no small degree due to the country being brought nearer to, and in touch with the culture of its Northern neighbours—to wit, Austria, Switzerland, and Germany; in other words, to the essentially masculine and Gothic influence of Teutonic music. Thus, "Lohengrin" has taken root on all the leading stages of Northern Italy, while such advanced works as Wagner's "Nibelungen" have penetrated South as far as Rome, and "Tannhäuser" has lately enjoyed a series of performances even at the San Carlo Theatre of Naples, where formerly Bellini and Donizetti reigned supreme. In the matter of classical instrumental music, and of sacred works by Northern composers, too, there has been an advance no less considerable and significant; and Mendelssohn's oratorios, formerly almost boycotted, are now quite familiar to Roman audiences. In the Eternal City these achievements are mainly due to the initiative taken by such enlightened and cosmopolitan musicians as Signori Pinelli and Sgambati; and their laudable efforts are nobly seconded by the cultured Queen of Italy, who never omits an opportunity of promoting and encouraging every class of art in its best form, no matter whence it comes. In Florence it is Signori Sbolci and Buonamici, the latter one of Dr. von Bülow's most distinguished pupils, who have done much towards reviving the languishing taste for classical music; while in the North, notably in Milan, Turin, and Bologna, the very proximity of Austria and Switzerland, as well as the more constant relations with Germany, and the naturally more robust taste and keen appreciation of high-class music, have long since enabled the Teutonic Muse to sow her seeds and establish a permanent home.

The latest importation of Northern art has been the vocal music for male chorus for which the three great Choral Unions of Cologne, Vienna, and Zurich have already acquired fame in other countries besides their own; and the Concerts recently given by the first-named of these Societies in Milan, Turin, Bologna, Florence, and Rome elicited the more curiosity and interest, and evoked, particularly in the Northern cities, the more enthusiasm, as that class of vocal music—to wit, four-part songs for tenors and basses—has hitherto been practically unknown in Italy, where the only form of choral music executed by male voices is that performed by the Cathedral choirs. I shall not attempt to dwell on the excellence of style and the other peculiar merits of the Cologne Choral Union, seeing that with these English audiences have long been familiar; but it may not be without interest to give a short outline of the impressions the performances of that Society, as well as the music which forms its specialty, produced on cultured Italian musicians; and to that end I cannot do better than give an abstract of some of the exhaustive notices published on the subject by one or two of the leading musical critics in Italy, whose authoritative opinion is the more instructive because it throws a flood of light on the defects and the present unsatisfactory condition of choral music in what formerly claimed to be the land of song.

After pointing out the deplorable want in Milan of a Concert Hall, properly speaking, which, if not as vast as the Albert Hall of London, should at least be of an adequate size for such performances as that of Beethoven's Choral Symphony, of the programme of the Cologne Choral Union, and of classical and choral works generally, the eminent musical critic of the Corriere della Sera says:—

"In an audience composed of over 2,000 persons crowded into an unsuitable hall, it required all the earnestness of execution characteristic of a Society which justly claims the palm among kindred Associations to prevent the religious attention of the listeners from flagging. Nay, it is a pleasure to be able to state the extraordinary fact that for once silence reigned in an assembly which is always ready to chatter whenever there is music to listen to. On this occasion it was possible to enjoy the best parts of the programme and to applaud them with profound conviction. Would that the enthusiasm displayed that evening were destined to bear practical fruit in the city of Milan! It is sad to see how little interest the upper as well as the lower classes in Italy take in such choral institutions, which are a true source of artistic enjoyment, of culture, and of refinement, and offer to amateurs infinite scope for initiating themselves into, and becoming imbued with, the beauties and merits of compositions, and of enjoying them with an intensity which perhaps no other form of art admits of. Italy gave birth to Palestrina, Marcello, and Lotti; choral singing reached a high degree of perfection, and choral schools—first sacerdotal and later on secular—were founded everywhere; but now all this is gone, and Italy is far behind other countries. It is sad to think that, whereas in London alone there are 130 flourishing Societies for the cultivation of instrumental and choral music, in Milan there have been during the last ten years but two choral Societies which, after languishing for some time, were obliged to amalgamate, and that a year or two ago even this one Society came to an end for want of support and vitality. The memory of the great masters of figurative art is perpetuated by preserving and exhibiting their works in museums and galleries; but such jealous custody is not to the advantage of musical compositions which, to be perpetuated, must be performed, and thus rendered accessible to the ears of the public. To an infinitesimal extent this tribute is rendered to the departed masters by the Cathedral choirs; but how poor and sterile is in Italy generally the reverence due to her great composers of the past!

"The Cologne Union has for its motto 'Durch das Schöne stets das Gute,' and seeing how worthily it acts up to this motto, the great success it has achieved in Milan is not surprising. The excellence of its performance was, moreover, attested by Verdi himself, who is notoriously averse to paying compliments; but who, having been present at the Concert, told Dr. Zöllner, the distinguished leader of the Union, that he had never listened to a more perfect execution of choral music than that by the Cologne Society.

"The success obtained in Milan is certain to accompany the Union throughout its tour in Italy, more especially if Dr. Zöllner will convince himself of the advisability of varying his programmes by suppressing some of the all too numerous Lieder and substituting some of the best among the classical compositions of Bach, Marcello, Lotti, and others—in this respect he can never err on the side of being too classical. The Lieder are intensely characteristic of Germany, for it is in them that both poets and composers know how to portray every phase of life, every shade of feeling and sentiment, moulding them into a chain of songs which may be said to accompany the sons of Arminius from the cradle to the grave; but, on the other hand, it cannot be denied that the almost uninterrupted succession of so many compositions all belonging to the same genre is liable to become monotonous. This piece of advice the distinguished director of the Society will do well to lay to heart, for other audiences in Italy may, in this respect, be less considerate than the audience he had in Milan.

"Like all great artists, the Cologne Union, considered as an artistic unit, is fond of showing its strength, and hence it is liable to err on the side of extreme contrasts. Thus, justly proud of the imposing sonority of its fortissimi and of the marvellous finish of its pianissimi, which in Italy are altogether unknown, the Cologne Union seems to despise the mezza-forte even when it would be appropriate to use it and when it ought to be used. But, on the other hand, what perfect intonation, what almost faultless precision in the attack—that rock on which amateurs habitually split—and what a pleasure to the ear not to hear those “tail-ends” which, in phrasing, often produce the most excruciating discords; the Cologne Union finishes every phrase with the utmost precision and at a mere hint of the beat. The voices are admirably balanced both as regards register and quality, and the tenors excel in head notes of rare softness, as was shown more particularly in the rendering of one of Sgambati’s four-part songs, as well as in the song “Guardati,” by Girschner, in which the ritornello is sung to the title-word, and the effect produced by the choir was that of genuine pizzicato passages. The massiveness of the basses and the purity of intonation were admirably shown in such songs as Schumann’s “Lotosblume” and “Troubadour,” as well as in Schubert’s “Gondolier” and in Kreutzer’s “Canto domenicale,” in which the choir produced some smorzati passages with admirable effect. The same may be said of the chorus by Palestrina, in which the various timbres were so marvellously blended that they seemed like long-sustained organ chords.”

Such, then, is the verdict of Milan. That of Rome, as expressed by Signor d’Arcais, the eminent and well-known musical critic of the Opinione, is somewhat different, though no less interesting and instructive:—

“Rome,” he says, “occupies a special place among Italian cities in relation to choral music. The ‘Società Musicale Romana’ and the ‘Società Filarmonica’ have given choral performances which can never be forgotten. In no other country is it possible to hear anything to equal the execution of Handel’s ‘Messiah’ under Mustafa’s direction. In Rome, therefore, the Cologne Society had to face serious competition.” After stating his opinion that in its performances the Cologne Choir displays all the merits and shortcomings of Northern races—viz., precision, minute attention to details, discipline, but a want of dash and little variety of effect—Signor d’Arcais points out that the reception of the Union in Rome would have been more enthusiastic if its enormous vocal powers had been devoted to the production of classical and sacred compositions instead of making a specialty of Lieder, and then goes on to observe:—

“It should, however, be borne in mind that Italians, as a rule, have an inadequate idea of these German Choral Societies and, what is more, of their aim and object. In Germany, even if they do not rise above the average, they are, as it were, a manifestation, a popular form of the art of music, and have a répertoire prescribed within certain limits. For the performance of great classical works there are in Germany other special Associations, and it is therefore a mistake to compare these Choral Unions with the Philharmonic Societies of Rome. The great and principal utility of these Choral Unions consists in their being diffused all over the country. The Cologne Society has attained perfection and prosperity in a remarkable degree, and is undoubtedly one of the best; but in Germany there is not a town, village, or hamlet that cannot boast of having its Choral Union. Choral singing forms an essential and compulsory part of education, beginning with the elementary school and ending with the University. From the statesman and general down to the working man or peasant, everyone has passed through the course of choral singing. The example of Germany has been followed by nearly all the civilised nations. Choral singing forms part of the public education in England, Sweden, France, Russia, and the United States, and in the last-named country it is being diffused in an extraordinary degree.

“Italy, on the other hand, has as yet hardly taken the first step in that direction. In Rome and Turin, there are one or two noteworthy choral associations, but choral singing is not diffused among the masses or even among the different classes of society. Some attempts have been made, but they failed because they were half-hearted and without a well-defined object. If the Italian Government now proposes, as appears probable, to promote and regulate choral singing in public schools, it should bear in mind that such choral teaching should not be too scientific. The choral course is not intended to produce professional musicians; it is not like the course in a College of Music whose pupils are trained for the Concert-room or the stage.

What is wanted is an essentially elementary and popular course of teaching; and it is hardly necessary to enumerate the immense benefits which the diffusion of choral singing would confer on all classes of Society. For this, if for no other reason, Italians should be grateful that the Cologne Choral Union has come among them, because it has shown them that if they cultivated art as it is cultivated by other nations, they would soon regain their ancient reputation as a musical people.”

It will be seen that, while both these distinguished critics point out, with praiseworthy modesty and straightforwardness, the low ebb at which the art of choral singing at present stands in Italy, the Milan critic shows a much keener and also more just appreciation of the performances of the Cologne Union than his Roman colleague. Signor d’Arcais’s opinion that the performance of Handel’s “Messiah” by Mustafa’s (the Vatican) Choir beats the record, would assuredly not be endorsed by anyone who has heard that Oratorio at the Handel Festival at the Crystal Palace, at the Albert Hall, or, for that matter, at any of the provincial musical festivals, not to speak of similar performances on a smaller scale in different parts of the Continent. Nor would impartial judges be disposed to agree with Signor d’Arcais as to the general excellence of the Vatican Choir conducted by Mustafa. The performances of that Choir are generally marred, not only by frequent want of precision and by the inevitable falsetto soprani and alti (be it noted that one of Signor d’Arcais’s objections to the singing of the Cologne Choir is precisely the frequent employment of falsetto notes by the tenors, whereas in the Vatican Choir he seems to admire them), but also by what may be called the vulgar side of the Italian school, to wit, excessive tremolo in the soloists, and by that inveterate habit of many Italian Conductors of marking the down beat of every bar by striking the music-desk or score before them audibly, and at times violently, with the bâton.

Moreover, both critics fall into the error of recommending to the Cologne Union, being a chorus of male voices, the cultivation of sacred music, such as the works of Bach, Palestrina, Cherubini, &c., forgetful of the fact that all these works are almost exclusively written for mixed chorus, and would therefore have to be transposed for the purpose of adapting them to tenors and basses only. It is well known that by being so transposed such compositions generally lose much if not the whole of their effect; and this was noticed by Italian critics themselves with reference to Palestrina’s Motet “Bone Jesu,” which had been transposed for the occasion—viz., to admit of its being sung by the Cologne Choir. On the whole, the Italian tour of the Cologne Union has been a triumphant success, and by opening the public mind, by stimulating discussion and criticism, and by fostering the spirit of emulation, has conferred a lasting benefit on the art of music in Italy, as it has done by its tours in other countries. OBITUARY.

THE death of MADAME GIACINTA PUZZI, at the age of eighty-one, took place at her residence in Harley Street on the 18th ult. She married Giovanni Puzzi, a celebrated horn player, and settled in England about fifty years ago. She was at one time favourably known as a vocalist and as a teacher. Madame Puzzi, then Giacinta Toso, made her first appearance as an operatic singer in London at Her Majesty’s Theatre in 1827. She achieved a greater success at the private concerts of the nobility than upon the boards, and after she married she devoted herself to teaching and abandoned the stage. She had great judgment and sound knowledge and experience. Her opinions upon the merits and potentiality of voices were received by many managers as official. She was acquainted with nearly every known artist of the day, native or foreign, and her assemblies were often among the most interesting in London.

MR. LOUIS MEYER, one of the most prolific and popular of American composers of light music, died at Philadelphia recently, at the age of 55. He was a native of Germany, and was born at Eisenberg. At the age of six he was taken to America, and became errand boy and clerk in a music warehouse. He devoted his spare hours to the composition of songs and pianoforte pieces, concealing his identity under some fifteen assumed names. His "Series of Household Songs," "Summer Holiday," and the "Golden Band" series attained an enormous sale in the United States.

The name of M. VASLIN, who died at the age of ninety-six, on the 5th ult., at Saint Julien-sur-Sarthe, is strange to the present generation. Thirty years ago he retired from active life, after serving as a professor at the Conservatoire for thirty years. He officiated as violoncello soloist at the opera in 1814—a few months before Waterloo was fought.

It is with much regret that we have to announce the death of Mr. ROBERT AUGUSTUS ATKINS, Organist of the Cathedral of St. Asaph. He was born on October 2, 1811, and was appointed to the post he held with so much credit to himself in the year 1834. He died on the 3rd ult.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW AND THE WEST OF SCOTLAND.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

THE recent graduation ceremony at the Glasgow University, when Dr. Joseph Joachim received the Degree of LL.D., served to remind musicians hereabouts of a question of some import. A couple of years ago the Glasgow Society of Musicians instituted a movement to approach the Scotch Universities on the subject of Degrees in Music. The matter was taken up with considerable enthusiasm, a large and influential Committee was appointed to further the interests of the scheme, and communications were opened with the authorities in St. Andrew's, Aberdeen, Edinburgh, and Glasgow. Principal Donaldson showed warm interest in the subject, as might, indeed, have been expected, seeing that his own University is already in possession of the powers to grant Degrees in Music honoris causa. Little encouragement was forthcoming at Aberdeen, a centre where the musical art flourished to no uncertain extent a couple of centuries ago. In point of fact, the granite city representatives turned the coldest of shoulders to the proposition. The Edinburgh Senatus Academicus had been quickened into action of a sympathetic complexion, due mainly, we believe, to the efforts of Sir Herbert Oakeley. His musical graduation scheme had, indeed, the approval of the Senate, but, unfortunately, as many may think, the Chancellor had something of consequence to say, and hence the following communication, which appeared officially in the newspapers on February 22, 1887: "The Court having obtained the opinion of the Chancellor of the University, that under the present statutory powers it is doubtful if the University has the power of conferring Degrees in Music, and having in view the prospect of early legislation as to the Universities of Scotland, resolve to delay further procedure in this matter for the present." Glancing briefly at the reception accorded the Degrees question at Gilmorehill, many months elapsed before the official reply came to hand. It was polite and complimentary, and to the effect that the Court did not consider that it would be advisable to institute a Degree in Music, "inasmuch as it would be somewhat anomalous to grant degrees in a subject which is not part of the University curriculum." Further, it was suggested that the Glasgow Society of Musicians should take up the foundation and endowment of a Chair of Music in the University. This is futile, for the Society just-named cannot possibly assume the paternity of such an important scheme. Rightly or wrongly, it has several other projects in hand—a Benevolent Fund, a Prize Competition Scheme—already referred to in THE MUSICAL TIMES—a Library Fund; and Club House proposals are not unlikely to be again submitted to the Society. Reverting, however, to the question of musical graduation at the Scotch Universities, the protracted measure of legislation, recently under the review of Parliament, is barren, so far as known to us, of any provision relating to Degrees in Music. Such provision may or may not be necessary. Judging, indeed, from the action of the Edinburgh University, in conferring Degrees in Science—although no faculty in Science exists—it may be inferred that the Senatus have a precedent for instituting Degrees in Music. The power to grant Degrees in Science has not, at any rate, been challenged, Current reports indicate a busy musical season hereabouts. The Glasgow Choral Union scheme has not yet been wrought out in full detail, but it may be taken that Mr. August Manns will return to the scene of many artistic achievements, and that his band will again include the best talent that can be induced to migrate north of the Tweed during the winter months. The orchestral programmes cannot, of course, be referred to, but the following choral works will be found in the scheme:—"The Messiah," Beethoven's Mass in D, MacCunn's cantata "The Lay of the Last Minstrel," and "The Cameronian's Dream." The last-named work, from the pen of the young Greenock composer, has been commissioned by Messrs. Paterson, of Edinburgh. It is for chorus, baritone solo, and orchestra. A choral ballad in the shape of a new setting of "Ye Mariners of England" will also be brought out by the Choral Union. The composer, Mr. Duncan, is regarded as a promising musician. Other new works by local musicians are on the stocks, or absolutely finished, and these include cantatas on sacred subjects by Mr. Allan Macbeth and Mr. Fred. Turner. The smaller choral societies in and around Glasgow are now making their arrangements for the ensuing season.

The Glasgow and West of Scotland Conservatoire of Music will shortly be opened. In his prospectus the Principal, Mr. Julius Seligmann, states that such an institution is wanted in this neighbourhood, and there is, in fact, a distinct need of a place where students may cultivate the art with all the advantages of musical life and atmosphere, and where every branch of a musical education may find its natural stimulus and complement in the simultaneous study and practice of the other branches. Mr. Seligmann will be assisted by Messrs. Allan Macbeth, Swanston, Cole, Walton, Berger, Bradley, Heap, and other well-known musicians, and the prospects of the new venture are regarded as exceedingly good. The best wishes are expressed that Mr. Seligmann may meet with success.

MUSIC IN WALES.

THE chief features in last month's musical doings have been Eistedfoddau and Choral Union meetings. Of the former the most important has been that held in Llandilo, where the prize for the principal choral competition, "Ye nations offer to the Lord," was won by the Llanelly Choral Society, conducted by Mr. R. C. Jenkins. English amateurs having from time to time expressed their interest in such competitions, and the consequent adjudications, will probably be interested in the following remarks which accompanied the award. One of the adjudicators, in delivering judgment, said: "The chorus is one of Mendelssohn's best works, but there were not many marks of expression in the chorus, and a good deal in bringing it out depended on the Conductor. There was a fugue in the first movement. The second fugue was worked out in five expositions. The choir hastened towards the end of the second fugue, and were rather confused in time. In a fugal work the time must be attended to. No. 3. A good attempt was made to give due expression. On the word 'might' there was a want of harmony, but there was real desire shown to get grandeur and warmth. At 'D' the singing was clear and steady, but there was a lack of warmth. The tenors kept good time, but the intonation was misty. At 'G' the time was good, but sopranos not clear in the higher B, but very melodious, though with due effect and sublimity."

In the evening a grand miscellaneous Concert was held, the artists being Madame Williams-Penn and Miss Marion Silas Evans, sopranos; Miss Eleanor Rees, contralto; Mr. C. Videon Harding, tenor (in the place of Mr. Maldwyn Humphrys, who was unavoidably prevented from attending), and Mr. R. C. Jenkins, bass. There was a very good programme, which was well rendered throughout.

At Cardigan, on July 29, a novelty was produced in the shape of a Water Concert. Under the patronage of Colonel Picton Evans, and the officers of the Cardigan Rifle Volunteers, the Band of the Company gave a Concert of instrumental music on the River Teivy, proceeding up stream with the tide to Cilgerran Castle. About fifty boats, well laden with the "audience," accompanied the boat in which the band was placed. The music was very good, and the trip seemed to be much enjoyed.

The annual Festival of the Church Choral Union of the Archdeaconry of Carmarthen was held in Swansea Church, on July 31, when the vocal complement was made up of the choirs of twenty parish churches. Mr. Hey, Organist of St. James's, Swansea, presided at the organ, and Mr. H. Radcliffe, Organist of St. Mary's, Swansea, and Organising Choirmaster of the Union, conducted. The service, which was fully choral, was intoned by Rev. E. Thomas, All Saints', Llanelly, and a very appropriate sermon was preached by Rev. D. Evans, Rector of Llanmaes. The music went very well, and the meeting was a gratifying success.

At Swansea, on Thursday evening, the 22nd ult., a grand musical evening was given by Mr. Frederic W. Griffiths, when he was assisted by Miss Maggie Davies and Miss Hannah Jones, Mr. Maldwyn Humphreys and Mr. David Hughes, vocalists; and by Miss Dora Bright, pianist; Mr. Griffiths himself being the flautist. The programme was well and judiciously compiled, the various pieces being of a much higher class than are usually heard in provincial miscellaneous Concerts. Songs by Gounod, Grieg, Sterndale Bennett, Wagner, Rossini, Bellini, and Balfe, interspersed with instrumental solos by Mendelssohn, Liszt, Chopin, W. Macfarren, &c., denoted a desire on the part of the performers to uphold the dignity of their art, and thereby to aid in the musical knowledge and taste of their audience, which we should wish to see a little more frequently displayed even by performers of acknowledged superiority. The essay on this occasion was a great success, the result being an evening's music of the most enjoyable character that we have had in Swansea for a very long time. The vocalists were most cordially received, and were deservedly rewarded with constant hearty rounds of applause and frequent recalls. Miss Dora Bright is a remarkably fine pianist, and her highly finished and legitimate performances quite took the audience by surprise. Her talents as a composer too were displayed in two elegant and piquant Sketches for flute, with pianoforte accompaniment, performed by Mr. F. W. Griffiths and herself. Of Mr. Griffiths's performance on the flute it may be safely said that he has quite fulfilled his early promise, and now plays like a fine performer and an accomplished musician. It is worthy of note that, notwithstanding—or shall we say in consequence of?—the high level of the programme, the audience all remained until the close.

THIS is holiday-time, and of actual deeds done in the way of music the chronicler has perforce to be silent. All that can be done is to call attention to the musical fixtures for the near future. By the time these lines appear in print the most important of the Western meetings of the year—that of the Three Choirs at Gloucester—will be very close at hand, taking place as it does on the 3rd of the month and three following days. The scheme put forward, if not a very pretentious one, has in it at all events an essential element of popularity and success, inasmuch as the majority of the works to be performed have long ago been accepted as prime favourites by frequenters of these gatherings.

In Bristol the voice of the Divine Art is still silent, if the performances of the Bristol and Clifton Public Band be excepted. The programmes submitted by this body of musicians are of a purely "popular" kind, and whilst appealing successfully to the taste of the people, do not seem to do so in an equally satisfactory manner as regards their purses, for the amount collected at each open-air performance would seem to be in an inverse ratio to the attendance. It is not for the writer of these lines to suggest how this might be remedied; but the lamentable—it might almost be called disgraceful—fact remains that of the huge number who attend a very small minority seem to feel themselves called upon to contribute anything whatever towards the support of the undertaking.

The Bristol Musical Festival Society will give its two annual, so-called intermediate Concerts, on the evening of Friday and afternoon of Saturday, November 1 and 2. The works selected to be performed are Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream" and Gounod's "Mors et Vita." The latter work will be heard for the first time here, and is to be sung in English. These works will as usual be rehearsed under the careful supervision of the Society's Chorus Master, Mr. D. W. Rootham. There will of course be a miscellaneous selection to complete the programme when Mendelssohn's charming work is presented. Sir Charles Hallé's musicians will occupy the orchestra, and will, as on former occasions, be directed by the veteran Conductor.

If the Bristol Choral Society—lately formed there under the conductorship of the Organist of the Cathedral, Mr. George Riseley—were also to give one or two public performances during the coming season, Bristolians should no longer complain of a lack of musical attractions. But the great question that should present itself to all thinking minds here is—Will the public support two large choral undertakings? Qui vivra verra!

THE disused burial-ground fronting the church of St. Martin, Pratt Street, Camden Town, has been converted into a garden and place for recreation for the inhabitants of the surrounding dwellings. That it will prove acceptable there can be no doubt. The garden was opened by Lady Rosebery, who at the same time unveiled a memorial to Charles Dibdin, whose bones lie buried in the now closed graveyard. The Celtic Cross erected over his remains offers a more distinguished monument to one whose songs recruited the British navy with enthusiastic sailors than the plain original "oblong slab" of which Dr. Kitchener speaks in his "Life of Dibdin," or even the improved structure with a comely railing placed by the loving care of his descendants to mark his resting-place. One who was present at the ceremony alluded to above says the tomb bears, in renovated characters, the verse from "Tom Bowling," "His form was of the manliest beauty," &c., which the widow selected as her husband's epitaph. In course of time the question of further recognising Dibdin passed out of the public mind, few people, it may be, remembering even the place of his burial. It could not, however, be forgotten by local residents while the tomb remained, and to one intimately acquainted with St. Pancras parish—Mr. Eccleston Gibb—came the happy thought of combining, with the transformation of the graveyard into a garden, the erection of a further and more suitable memorial to the bard. Mr. Gibb dropped this seed into good ground. At one of the meetings held by the Kentish Town Musical Society he mentioned the matter, and had the satisfaction of seeing it taken up with enthusiasm. A committee was soon formed, with Mr. Sims Reeves and Mr. Santley as chairman and vice-chairman, Mr. Eccleston Gibb as treasurer, and Mr. J. Percy Fitzgerald as honorary secretary. The committee did their best with such funds as came to hand, and at least it can be said that a monument will for many years to come make plain that seventy-five years after Charles Dibdin's death there were men who deemed him worthy of homage, and of personal exertion in his honour. The details of the memorial are appropriate and well carried out. On the front of the shaft, besides conventional ornamentation, are sculptured an anchor and lyre, while high up in the centre of the circle drawn through the arms of the cross is the "sweet little cherub" of whom the poet sang in strains that will never pass from the memory of Englishmen. The front of the plinth bears the names of the officers and members of the memorial committee, the three other sides being filled each with a verse of Dibdin's poetry. On one may be read:—

Then farewell, my trim-built wherry,
Oars and coat and badge farewell;
Never more at Chelsea ferry
Shall your Thomas take a spell.
But, to hope and peace a stranger,
In the battle's heat I go;
Where, exposed to every danger,
Some friendly ball shall lay me low.
Then, mayhap, when homeward steering,
With the news my messmates come,
Even you, my story hearing,
With a sigh may cry, "Poor Tom."

The second verse of "Poor Jack" occupies another face of the plinth, and in homely language preaches a great truth:

When I heard the good chaplain palaver one day
About souls, heaven, mercy, and such—
And, my timbers! what lingo he'd coil and belay!
Why 'twas just all as one as High Dutch,
But he said how a sparrow can't founder, d'ye see,
Without orders that comes down below,
And many fine things that proved clearly to me
That Providence takes us in tow.
"For," says he, "do you mind me? let storms e'er so oft Take the top-lifts of sailors aback,
There's a sweet little cherub sits perched up aloft,
To keep watch o'er the life of poor Jack."

On the remaining side is the second verse of "Tom Tough":

When from my love to part I first weighed anchor,
And she was snivelling seed on the beach below,
I'd like to cotched my eyes snivelling too, d'yer see, to thank her.
But I brought my sorrow up with a Yo, heave ho!
For sailors, though they have their jokes,
An love and feel like other folks,
Their duty to neglect must not come for to go,
So I seized the capstan bar,
Like a true honest tar,
And, in spite of tears and sighs, sung out, "Yo, heave ho!"

These verses alone would commend the author to the sympathies of all, even those to whom the name of Dibdin conveys no definite notion of the widespread power his genius exercised and still does exercise.

THE following particulars concerning the examinations for degrees in music, at the University of Oxford, have been issued. 1. Second Examination for the Degree of Bachelor in Music.—This Examination will commence on Wednesday, October 16, at 10 a.m., in the Schools. In addition to the usual subjects, there will be required a critical knowledge of the full scores of Mozart's "Zauberflöte" and Mendelssohn's Overture to "Midsummer Night's Dream." Candidates are required to bring the scores with them. 2. Examination for the Degree of Doctor in Music.—This Examination will commence on Wednesday, October 16, at 10 a.m., in the Schools. Each of the above Examinations will occupy at least two days. Candidates whose Exercises have been approved, and who propose to offer themselves for either of these Examinations, are required to give in their names to Mr. George Parker, the Clerk of the Schools, on or before October 7, to pay the Statutable fee of £2, and to exhibit their "Testamur" of having passed the previous Examination. In the directions for candidates for degrees in music certain modifications have been made at the instance of the new Professor, Sir John Stainer, which will be read with interest. The literary qualification remains unaltered, but the list of books to be studied for the first Examination for the Degree of Bachelor in Music, which comprises Harmony and Counterpoint in not more than four parts, are: Ouseley, "Treatise on Harmony" (Oxford); Macfarren, "Harmony" (Cramer, London); Stainer, "Treatise on Harmony" (Novello); Bridge, "Counterpoint" (Novello); Cherubini, "Counterpoint" (Novello); and Ouseley, "Counterpoint" (Oxford). For the second Examination, which embraces the following subjects: Harmony, Counterpoint, in not more than five parts, Double Counterpoint and Canon, Fugue, Form in Composition, Musical History, and a critical knowledge of the full scores of such standard classical compositions as shall be selected previously by the Professor of Music, and duly announced after the former examination. The subjects may be studied in the following books (in addition to those already named): Bridge, "Double Counterpoint" (Novello); Higgs, "Fugue" (Novello); Berlioz, "Instrumentation" (Novello); Prout, "Instrumentation" (Novello); Burney, "History of Music" (Novello); Hawkins, "History of Music" (Novello); Hullah, "History of Modern Music" (Longmans); Hullah, "Transition Period of Musical History" (Longmans); Naumann, "History of Music" (Cassells); Ouseley, "Treatise on Form" (Oxford); and Parry, Article on "Form" in Grove's Dictionary (Macmillan). For the Degree of Doctor in Music.—The Candidate must in the first place compose, and send in to the Professor as before, an Exercise. It must be a vocal composition, either secular or sacred, containing real eight-part harmony, with good eight-part fugal counterpoint, in really good style, as a work of art, with an accompaniment for a full orchestra, in length of performance from forty to sixty minutes. The subjects of examination are as follows: Harmony, Eight-part Counterpoint, Double Counterpoint and Canon, Fugue, Form in Composition, Instrumentation, Musical History, a critical knowledge of the scores of the standard works of the great composers, and the elements of Acoustics. The last-named subject may be studied in—Helmholtz, "Sensations of Tone" (Longmans); Dr. Pole, "Philosophy of Music" (Trübner); Dr. Stone, "Scientific Basis of Music" (Novello); and Sedley Taylor, "Sound and Music" (Macmillan). The Candidate must have his Exercise publicly performed in Oxford before the Vice-Chancellor, the Professor of Music (or their deputies), at the University, with band and chorus, and at his own expense; the number and constitution of the band to be submitted to, and approved by, the Professor. Before being presented for his degree, he must deliver the bound MS. full score of his Exercise to the Clerk of the Schools to be deposited in the library of music. He must be furnished with a "Testamur," as before, on coming to be presented for his degree. This "Testamur" will not however be given if the performance should (owing to carelessness or inaccuracy) be calculated to bring discredit on the Faculty. The regulation concerning the number and constitution of the Band, and that of withholding the "Testamur" in the event of an insufficient performance, will greatly help to augment the value of the degree. The Professor further states as a protectionary measure that no information of any kind can be given to Candidates as to the cause of their failure in Examinations or the rejection of their Exercises.

A RECENT movement amongst the past gentlemen students of the Royal Academy of Music has resulted in the formation of a club, having for its object the maintenance of a friendly intercourse between its members. The present scope of the club, which is modelled upon those in existence at the Universities and at many of our great public schools, is limited to two social meetings and a dinner in the course of the year. There is no intention of giving concerts, or of bringing the club in any way under public notice. The President for the first year is Dr. A. C. Mackenzie. The list of original members will remain open until October 1 next. Any old student wishing to join should communicate with the Hon. Secretary, Mr. J. Percy Baker, Willemsley House, Old Charlton. An Inaugural Dinner was held on July 27, at the Holborn Restaurant, Dr. Mackenzie being in the chair. Over eighty gentlemen were present, and speeches were made by the Chairman, Messrs. Cummings, W. Macfarren, and others.

THE following passed as Associates at the recent College of Organists' Examination: E. Barnes, W. Batley, P. C. Buck, A. Buckley, W. J. Burbridge, H. S. Chipperfield, C. T. Davis, M. Davison, W. Dunning, G. C. E. Evers, A. E. Fisher, C. Green, T. H. Goodwin, H. W. Hare, J. B. Heavyside, H. Hodge, F. G. Hollis, R. Knight, Mrs. E. Latimer, B. Lofthouse, C. E. Miller, C. E. Millner, S. A. Mosdell, S. Moore, B. A. Moss, J. W. Muirhead, W. Musgrove, J. H. Newton, H. Nutter, R. J. Pitcher, H. Rowcliffe, A. W. Smith, and J. Whiteside. The diplomas were distributed by Dr. J. F. Bridge. The Examiners were Dr. J. F. Bridge, Dr. Gladstone, Mr. Walter Parratt, Dr. G. C. Martin, Mr. W. S. Hoyte, Mr. E. H. Turpin, Mr. James Higgs, Dr. C. W. Pearce, Dr. C. J. Frost, Dr. Keeton, Dr. C. Warwick Jordan, and Dr. H. Walmsley Little.

THE Queen and Royal Party, while on their visit to North Wales, stayed at Palè, and attended divine service in the hall of the mansion, on the 25th ult. The Bishop of St. Asaph conducted the service, and preached a short sermon; the music was rendered, without accompaniment, by Messrs. Charles Tomkinson, Walter Williams, and Felix C. Watkins; Masters Frank Williams, Alan Williams, and Dan Hughes, members of the St. Asaph Cathedral Choir.

At the Examinations in Music of the University of Trinity College, Toronto, recently held in London, the following honours were awarded: 1887—gold medal, A. E. Tozer; silver medal, O. A. Mansfield and F. Williams-Williams; 1888—gold medal, J. Bryant; silver medal, J. C. B. Tirbutt; 1889—gold medal, W. H. Maxwell; silver medal, H. W. Weston.

MR. CLARENCE EDDY, of Chicago, gave a Recital upon the organ built by Messrs. Cavallé-Coli for the Exhibition in Paris, on the 2nd ult., with great success. His programme included compositions by Bach, Handel, Guilmant, Widor, Dubois, Louis Thiele, J. V. Flagler, and Dudley Buck. Mlle. Caroline Chaucherau and Miss Nielson, of Chicago, were the vocalists.

The following students were successful at the last Examination for certificates of proficiency at the Guildhall School of Music: Pianoforte—Adie Curtis, Florence Rosenthal, Arthur Barclay Jones, and Walter Van Noorden; solo singing, Emily E. Taylor (who obtained the first certificate granted in this school for solo singing).

REVIEWS.

Pisně milostné. Liebeslieder für eine Singstimme mit Begleitung des Pianoforte. Von Anton Dvorák. Op. 83. [London: Novello, Ewer and Co.; Berlin: N. Simrock.]

THE rich vein of beautiful melody, which distinguishes all the songs of Dvorák already known in England, will be found in all its purity in this new collection of love songs by the gifted Bohemian composer. They are, moreover, constructed upon the plan which marks the majority of his works, perfect in originality, and yet perfect in their natural sequence. There is nothing in any one of them of that set form which is the slave of rhythm. Still they are distinguished by measures of their own, each of which, while imparting a special peculiarity to the song, does not embarrass the singer nor hinder the flow of the melody. The tenderness of the expression which should be looked for in all love-songs forms the strong point of each of these ditties. This is so ingeniously contrived that no small effect can be produced by the mere mechanical execution of them; while those earnest singers or players who have the power of grasping their poetical meaning will find in them a wealth of artistic capital. The first of the eight songs, to distinguish it by its English title, "Never will love lead us," has a graceful and tuneful theme; the second, "Death reigns in many a human breast," is no less interesting, for its voice has a restless arpeggio accompaniment in character with the theme; the third, "I wander oft past yonder house," is marked by that peculiarity of cadence which appears in all the composer's music, and, like the fourth and fifth songs, entitled respectively "I know that I am, my love, to thee," and "Nature lives peaceful," bear the stamp of genius in their construction and plan. The sixth, "In deepest forest glade," is simple and of a folksied type," while in the seventh, "When thy sweet glances," and the eighth, "Thou only dear one," the artist's individuality, which is never absent in any one of the songs, is asserted with stronger power and energy. The accompaniment in each song is replete with power and piquant quality, suitable to the theme and helpful to the singer. There are three sets of words, the original by G. Pfleger-Moravsky, the German by O. Malybrok-Stieler, and the English by Mrs. John P. Morgan, of New York. The latter, which has received the approval of the composer, is very good, and will greatly help to popularise the songs among all English-speaking people.

New Songs. By Various Composers.

The Four Songs of the Stuarts. By Mary Carmichael (Stanley Lucas, Weber and Co.). "I hae nae kith, I hae nae kin," "Weel may we a' be," "The Blackbird," and "Charlie's landing," are clever and spirited settings of Jacobite songs, which may be taken as appeals to the sentiments of those who entertain a partiality for historical associations connected with the last branches of the Stuarts. There is an old-world character in the melodies which will make them acceptable for themselves. The best of the four is perhaps that called "The Blackbird," though the melody will be found to some tastes inferior to the old tune still associated with the words whenever they are sung.

An Album of Eight Songs, by Sebastian Schlesinger, issued by the same publishers, is a dainty collection of ditties, which will find much favour with children, and with those who love the little ones. The first, "The sleepy little sister," has some very pretty words, and a good melody and accompaniment; the second, "Work while you work," is perhaps less spontaneous in character, but is nevertheless very effective. "The song of the night" is a perfect little gem of a song; "The woodcock and the sparrow" has a bright melody, such as children would readily learn to sing. The poetical treatment of "My little sister" makes a strong contrast to the droll humour of "Seven." "Wake, darling, wake," is a beautiful song, elegantly written; and "My fairest child" is a worthy setting of Kingsley's words, with an accompaniment as artistic as any in the set. It should be mentioned that each song has several very clever drawings illustrative of its sentiment, and that the whole of the pages are beautifully printed.

A Second Set of Six Songs, by Henry Festing Jones (Weekes and Co.), is no less interesting for the selection of the words to which they are set, than for their happy association with music. The first three, "Content," "Dear, if you change," and "When thou must home," are from Wilbye's Madrigals, Dowland's songs, and Campion and Rosseter's airs, but the modern music is in true accord with the spirit of the poetry. In the second three, the music to words by Thomas Hood, Shakespeare, and Victor Hugo is none the less commendable. Hood's words, "The stars are with the voyager," are admirably set, and although the rhythm of the Shakespearian song, "O, mistress mine," appears at first to be a little forced, the ingenuity which characterises the air helps to relax the stiffness of the form in which the composer has selected to express his ideas. The song by Victor Hugo, "Mes vers fuiraient," is very neat and attractive.

Dr. Hubert Parry's song, Why does azure deck the sky? (Alfred Hays), has already won its way into favour with those who can appreciate a good thing well presented; it is therefore only necessary to call attention to this new edition of it. Dr. Spark's song, "My love has come," will doubtless find admirers, and so also will "The fair garden," by J. Cliffe Forester, though in the first the accompaniment is somewhat laboured and in the latter the melody for the voice is subordinated to the accompanying harmonies. C. Woolhouse is the publisher of both.

The Rev. Ernest Whelan's setting of the hymn for those at sea, Eternal Father, as a song (London Publishing Company), shows an earnest desire to unite sentiment with melody, in a manner which is not without a successful result.

Music for the Harmonium. By August Reinhard.

[Berlin: Carl Simon.]

IT is a matter worthy of special note that until quite recently harmonium players have had to be content with a limited literature for the instrument of their predilection, the best of which were chiefly by writers of the English School. Our native musicians hold supremacy in the matter still, but it is gratifying to observe that artists abroad are turning their attention to the capabilities of the instrument and have so far developed its artistic powers that they have succeeded in awakening a large interest in it. In Paris Mlle. Marie de Pierpont, one of the most accomplished performers on the instrument in France, has given for the last four years, at the Salon Pleyel, a series of "Auditions d'Harmonium," at which she has performed a variety of pieces written by herself and other eminent French musicians. The effect has been to increase the number of its admirers and students. In Belgium the progress of the harmonium, or rather of the Mustel organ, received a temporary check with the death of the Chevalier Lemmens; but it is now reviving, and Germany has at length taken up the study with characteristic seriousness. A School or Instruction-book (Harmonium-Schule), with German, French, and English text, has been written by August Reinhard and published in two forms. The second or popular form is now before us. It contains a capital description of the instrument, the use of the stops, the pedals, the keys, and other matter of a like nature. The Exercises are illustrated by pieces selected from the works of various composers, and the book is most useful. In the "Anthologie, am Harmonium," Op. 21, will be found an excellent selection of pieces by various composers, arranged for the instrument, and in the Opus 34 a series of fifty judiciously written Hymn tune preludes, which cannot but prove most valuable as a help to those who cannot depend upon their own powers of invention. That the instrument is in the eyes of our composer capable of higher efforts than the performance of short introductions to Chorals, and so forth, is shown in the three capably designed Sonatas in C major, F major, and A minor, in which the peculiarities of the harmonium are well provided for. On the whole the works of August Reinhard will be found to be no inconsiderable addition to the literature of an instrument which has a large circle of admirers, and they may perhaps be the first fruits of a growth which may prove to be worthy of cultivation.

My Jubilee; or, Fifty Years of Artistic Life. Written by Sims Reeves.

[London Music Publishing Company, Limited.]

A FEW months ago we called attention to a book entitled "Sims Reeves, by Himself," in which the great English tenor gave a few particulars of his life and his artistic career, enclosed within a series of the most thrilling and sensational stories. Near the end of that book he took a temporary leave of his readers, stating—"Whatever I may yet do in the domain of song, I purpose during the jubilee year 'of my professional career as a vocalist—1889—to enlarge these reminiscences, with, I hope, increased interest to my friends." This promise is fulfilled in the volume now under notice. The story of the life of one who has been an ornament to the musical profession for so many years has a particular interest in itself. The interest is increased by the fact that it is autobiographical. The reader is brought face to face, as it were, with the relater; and had it been possible to have included a phonograph among the illustrations, the voice of the speaker might be as faithfully reproduced as his facial appearance and figure are presented by the photograph.

The early life, the education, the struggles, even the boyish fun, as well as the aspirations of the young musician are told with a gusto of enjoyment which the reader cannot fail to share. His career after his voice broke, his apprenticeship to a music-plate engraver, his first essay on the stage, and like matters, will be read with great interest, even though the relater has forgotten one important matter without which no biography, self-told or otherwise, can be complete. He does not state at the outset either the date or the place of his birth; and as these matters are often made the subject of enquiry and contradictory statements, it would have been as well to have given them in order that his official announcement, as it were, would set the questions for ever at rest.

All the later particulars of his life are well known and have been told in the former book from his pen. These are repeated, in many instances word for word, so that in his "Jubilee" Mr. Sims Reeves, "by himself," is himself again. The biography affords an almost singular example of popularity sustained with unimpaired strength for a period which ordinarily represents the average life of man.

Serenade für Streich-Orchester. Componirt von Ferdinand Thieriot (Op. 44). [Leipzig: Alfred Dörfel.]

THE composer of this Serenade has produced a large number of works in times past, many of which have attained a considerable share of popularity on the Continent. As a pupil of Brahms he displays a partiality for moulding his thoughts in music after the pattern observed by his teacher. As a Director of Public Concerts in Hamburg, the place of his nativity, at Leipzig, at Glogau, and at Graz, he has had many opportunities of knowing what is best calculated to suit popular taste. He has evidently designed the present work in accordance with his views in that regard. The melodies of the various themes are good, and are so set out as to obtain the best possible effect from the material employed. There are four movements, or rather four divisions, for the term "movement" implies sections independent of each other. In this, however, the ideas are arranged so as to possess a certain homogeneity represented by the repetition of sundry passages in the several movements, so that all appear to be more or less connected by a similarity of design. The opening portion is not, strictly speaking, the form of a first movement, but it has several ideas duly recognisable in the subsequent portions. The second (Poco adagio) has a charming melody for the first violin accompanied, chiefly in pizzicato, by the other strings. Certain parts of this the strings are divided with a notable effect. The third portion, an Intermezzo, is well written, and the Finale, full of spirit and attractive figuring, dash along joyously, and ends with a Coda formed of the theme of the opening subject of the first movement. There are many orchestral Societies who would be glad to know the existence of this clever piece of writing. It will repay study, as the several parts are interesting for players, and the whole would be very attractive in a public performance.

From the same publisher we have received two other well-written works. One, a Scene für Violine und Pianoforte, by Alexander Winterberger, which is full of brilliant music for the two instruments, though they require well skilled hands for their interpretation. The other is an Allegro Brillant für Violoncelle mit begleitendem Pianoforte, by Gustav Battig. This is a splendid solo and is well worthy of the attention of violoncello players. In search of a good show piece constructed on original lines yet capable of displaying the graces of the instrument and the technical ability of the executant.

A Key to "Parsifal." Translated from the German by Hans von Wolzogen. By Mr. Ashton Ellis.

[Chappell and Co.]

THE guides or keys to the later operas of Wagner Hans von Wolzogen are well known to students acquainted with the German tongue, and it is possible that the information they give may not be unacceptable to those who can only read works of like kind "in the speech wherein they were born." This seems to have been the reason for the origin of the present work. The translator has accomplished his task with such painful fidelity that the force of the original German prosody is preserved; and the reader is often compelled to work out the linguistic problems, and re-convert them into idioms more readily appreciable to himself and more in conformity with customary uses. The translator is so thoroughly impressed with the sentiments and modes of expression of the text that he has so carefully converted, that even when he is speaking on his own account in his introduction, he is apparently unable to shake off the fetters with which he has voluntarily bound himself. For instance, he says "This motiv-hunting, however, I would strongly deprecate in any who visit Bayreuth for the first time, as it is too apt to destroy the effect of the appeal of the music to the heart, by substituting head-knowledge for heart-enjoyment. But after one or two visits the head also claims its share, in the appreciation and only by appeasing its demands can the heart regain its sway; while the knowledge of the reason of the employment of this or that motiv passes over at last into that half-conscious realm where analysis exists only in its torso result, and understanding merges into intuition. The ear is then no longer troubled by the keen attempt to recognise every motiv as it wells forth from the music, but each phrase seems to whisper in half-hushed voice its meaning in unison with the æsthetic pleasure of the sound." As this tends to show most forcibly the sympathy of the translator with his work, and the fitness of his qualification as an exponent of Wagnerian theories in the happy lucidity of expression customary with the adherents of the craft.

Review of the New York Musical Season 1888-1889. By H. E. Krehbiel. [New York: Novello, Ewer and Co.]

IN this the fourth volume recording the prominent events of the musical season in the chief city of America, we have a continuance of those excellent compilations and abridgements which have distinguished the previous volumes of the series. English readers may or may not endorse all the views of Mr. Krehbiel concerning the merits of certain works which are familiar on both sides of the Atlantic, but they cannot fail to admire the fearless honesty of his statements and his clear, incisive, and keen method of dealing with his subjects. The reader feels that he is in the presence of one who has read much and has thought more; one who possesses acute powers of observation, and who is a master language in which to express his thoughts. His views broad and comprehensive, not restricted to the impressions of admiration for matters which have no relation to the advancement of art in general, even though they be of native origin. There is a graphic and interesting account of the successive attempts to establish choral services in New York, and we find many notices of works by resident musicians, which, having some reference to the endeavours made to elevate art, are certainly worthy to be recorded and commented upon. One of the most interesting essays on the history of music in New York, à propos of the Washington Centenary, occupying several pages in the record for April, 1888, will be read with eager interest by those (whether English or American) for whom the history of music is most active from a personal side. The book contains an admirable retrospect of German opera, a valuable list of first performances in New York during the season, comments on the recitals of Dr. von Bülow, a survey of choral work in many American cities, and an admirable index to the whole of the pages. Although the character of the record recommends itself chiefly to Transatlantic readers, yet in the descriptions of all the works, and in the comments thereupon, English musicians will find much to excite thought and interest.

Twenty Sacred Songs. Composed by Johann Sebastian Bach. Selected from the Schemell Collection, and arranged for Voice and Pianoforte Accompaniment, by Robert Franz. English version by the Rev. Dr. Troutbeck.

We have often in our reviewing columns drawn attention to the difference between sacred songs and songs set to sacred words; and those who desire to test the truth of our remarks cannot do better than possess themselves of the book before us, a selection of vocal gems, in each of which the deeply religious feeling of the text is faithfully reflected in the music. Of the twenty songs contained in the volume it would be indeed difficult to do more than record the names of a few which we have especially lingered upon. If, therefore, we mention No. 1, "Wherefore, O Lord, so long in returning"; No. 2, "Come, let us all day"; No. 5, "Passion-tide"; No. 9, "Blessed is he who thinks on Him"; No. 15, "The third day He rose again"; No. 17, "O spotless Lamb," and No. 19, "I faintly know, ere life shall cease," it is only in the hope that others will share with us the pleasure these beautiful pieces have given us, and will diligently search in this volume of treasure with the conviction that its wealth is not exhausted. We need only add that the English version, by the Rev. Dr. Troutbeck, is most sympathetic with the original words, and that the pianoforte accompaniments of Robert Franz are such as could only be furnished by so consummate a master of the art.

Three Trios for Female Voices. By Oliver King. Op. 42, Nos. 1-6. (Novello's Collection of Trios, Quartets, &c., for female voices. Nos. 210-215.)

[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

MR. OLIVER KING in these six Trios for female voices displays all the characteristics of an earnest musician and instincts of the teacher. His music is full of melody, capable of the best expression, while at the same time good enough to be able to assert its own value even though it be not performed with all the care which is necessary for its true exposition. The waltz rhythm of "May," the graceful suavity of "Sweet flowers of Spring," the "Sing, sweet birds," the picturesque style of "Ebb flow" and of "Fair Luna," and the joyous entrain "Come, rosy morn," this last being especially effective in its sprightly figure in the accompaniment, are each all of that quality of music which makes, as it were, its friendships. The trios appeal with force to all, but particularly to those who bring to their interpretation the qualities of intelligence and sympathy. Singers will delight in the sweetness of the vocal parts; pianists cannot but take pleasure in the beauty of the accompaniment; hearers will not fail to enjoy the combination of musical devices, and others will give them hearty welcome as most valuable to their own labours.

O perfect love. Wedding Anthem. Composed by Joseph Barnby. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THIS beautiful little composition was written expressly for, and was performed at, the wedding of the Duke of Fife with the Princess Louise of Wales. As a musical composition, it possesses charm enough to fit it for general use in the marriage service, and as the words, written by Dorothy Blomfield, emphasise the teaching of the greatest of Christian virtues, it may be used with good result at other times of the Church's seasons. Mr. Barnby has on many occasions in his compositions for the church shown how happily and effectively he can write for voices, and how also his music displays an earnest endeavour to express the meaning and intention of the words by appropriate musical phrases. His anthems, services, and especially his fine hymn-tunes are models of their kind in church music, and form a valued nucleus in the repertory of the several choirs in which they have been adopted. The new Wedding Anthem is distinguished by all those qualities which should ensure its introduction as an adjunct to the Service of Matrimony. There are no difficult passages, the parts flow smoothly, the words are well set, and the character of the whole Anthem may be further described as possessing both sweetness and dignity.

The Pamphonia. Roedel's Patent, 1888. Manufactured by Henry Brooks and Co.

THE Pamphonia is the name of an instrument invented by Mrs. J. L. Roedel, of Clifton. It is a wooden model of the great stave of eleven lines, and is so constructed that any line or lines may be easily swung off so as to show from what part of the great stave it or they are taken. It is designed to teach the use of the stave with whatever clef it may be "armed." Therefore it is not only likely to be most helpful to young children (who may use it as a toy), but also to those students who desire to become familiar with the use of the stave of five lines with the C clef at the head. Thus it will serve as a means of preparation for those who, for the purposes of examination or duty, are called upon to make themselves acquainted with the power of the old soprano as well as with the alto and tenor clefs. On this ground it will be useful as an introduction to the mechanical part of the study of harmony. It is so far likely to strengthen the hands of teachers, by agreeably shortening the drudgery of the elementary stages of musical tuition, that it should be employed in all rudimentary classes in public and private schools.

Suite for Violin Solo and Orchestra. By C. Villiers Stanford, Mus. Doc. Arrangement for Violin and Pianoforte.

[Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THIS Suite was performed in its original shape, with orchestral accompaniments, at one of the Concerts of the Philharmonic Society during the past season, by Dr. Joachim, to whom it is inscribed. The composer has taken the titles of his movements of the Suite from those variously attached to divisions of like kind in the works of Corelli, Bach, Handel, and others. The first is called an "Overture," and the following movements are distinguished by the titles of an "Allemande," a "Ballade," a "Tambourin," and a "Rondo finale" (Gigue). Unlike the older writers, Dr. Stanford has not written his movements in one key, and in the construction and form of the several portions he has further exhibited independent views. The solo portions of the Suite are full of those technical difficulties which might be expected to appear in a composition written for so great a master of the instrument as Dr. Joachim. If the work is presented in separate movements it is not unlikely that the "Ballade" will be found to possess more of that element which appeals to the popular and uninstructed world at large.

Three New Vocal Compositions.

THE first, Give me thy heart, by Henry J. Edwards (Novello, Ewer and Co.), was written for, and is dedicated to, the Eglesfield Musical Society, Oxford, a well-known body of male voices. It is well laid out for effective use for equal voices; the melody is pleasing, the harmonies varied and natural, never forced or thrust in, but all most ably devised and thoroughly interesting from first to last.

The second (published by Stanley Lucas, Weber and Co.), a setting of Shakespeare's words, Hark, the lark, by Kellow J. Pye, is an ingenious application of the form of a Rondo to a Madrigal, for five voices. It is smoothly written, and therefore very singable, and may be recommended as well worthy of study by choral societies. As an additional point in its favour, it may be mentioned that it gained the third prize offered by the Madrigal Society in 1888. The third is a clever piece of musical humour, by Bertram Luard Selby, entitled The owl and the pussy cat (Boosey and Co.). It opens, it is true, with a phrase which has already done good suit and service in other musical compositions in times past, but as a whole there is much that is thoughtful and musician-like in the work, and much that is well calculated to interest the singers who study it.

The Musical Year Book of the United States. By G. H. Wilson. Volume VI. [Boston (U.S.): Alfred Mudge.]

MR. G. H. WILSON'S Musical Year Book of the United States has in former times commanded attention from the lovers of the art for its faithful record of work done in all the principal localities of American civilisation, which in turn radiate round Boston as a centre: the record of musical doings in that city, both vocal and instrumental, as here related, shows how great an amount of artistic sympathy exists in the place. There is no attempt in the pages to offer criticism upon the several performances. It is a plain unvarnished tale of work done. Special attention is called to those compositions which were heard for the first time in the country or were introduced as novelties in particular places. A table of contents and an index of titles furnish the means for easy reference to the matters contained in the pages, and the whole book, taken by itself or in connection with the five previous volumes, offers a valuable and trustworthy record of music culture and progress in the United States.

Bal Masqué. Scènes de danse pour piano à quatre mains. Par Percy Godfrey. [Augener and Co.]

UNDER the title of a "Bal Masqué" Mr. Godfrey has written nine pieces of attractive music as pianoforte duets, which will be found most serviceable as well for pleasure as for study. They are removed out of the category of terpsichorean music by an evidently classical aim in their design. The passages are well under the hands of the players, and not only in spirit, dash, and an undeniable quality of fascination in their invention, but in execution, they show a considerable amount of promise which it is hoped may be realised and extended in future works from the same hand. A "Valse caprice" by the same composer, though distinguished by less originality of melody, is very well set out as a pianoforte piece, and like the "Bal Masqué" may be employed with profit for the purposes of teaching.

Romanesca (Op. 24) and Meditation (Op. 25), for Violin. By G. Saint-George. Dedicated to Dr. Joachim. [Charles Woolhouse.]

THESE are pieces in which violinists will delight. They are exceedingly well written for the violin, and the accompaniments are excellent. The "Romanesca" is quaint and original, and the "Meditation," which demands some skill in the performance of the pianoforte part, is fascinating and attractive. They will be heartily commended as valuable contributions to the list of short pieces for home or concert use. The second piece (Op. 25) is also arranged for the violoncello. Only one fault can be found with the writing of the "Romanesca," and that consists of the ineffective consecutives in the tenth and eleventh bars of the accompaniment. This inelegance might have been easily avoided by contrary motion.

Due Romanze per Mezzo-Sop. o Baritono. Poesia di L. Stecchetti; Musica di Rosa Guerini (Nata Wilberforce). [G. Ricordi and Co.]

BOTH these Romances are melodious and vocal, although so trifling as to give but small opportunity of judging of their composer's powers. "Quando cadran te foglie" is by far the better of the two, and could certainly be made effective by a good vocalist. We may say, however, the last chord in bar 8 (usually known as the "Italian G") looks somewhat strange with the A♭ in the bass written G♯.

Forty-three Historical Programmes. Compiled and arranged by A. Hughes-Hughes. [Arlliss Andrews.]

IN this excellent series of model programmes, arranged in historical sequence in order to illustrate the progress of music from the thirteenth century to the time of Wagner, the amateur and the student will find many admirable examples of the various styles of composition, the principles and study of which can scarcely fail to be profitable. The selection was made for an amateur society, and might have been imitated and extended by other like bodies, as well as those public associations which desire to blend amusement with instruction.

Moment Musical. For Violin and Pianoforte. By Harrison Frewin. [Charles Woolhouse.]

THIS, the latest composition of Mr. Frewin, is a tender expressive air with an exceedingly appropriate accompaniment. It presents no difficulties of any description, either for pianoforte or violin; and, as the whole melody of solo instrument is in the first position, it will be found an effective piece for violinists of moderate attainments.

The Service for Holy Matrimony, as used in Westminster Abbey. [Novello, Ewer and Co.]

THIS includes a single chant, adapted from Beethoven's Turle, for the Psalm, an arrangement of Tallis's Fusus for the responses; the hymn, "Father of Life," by Rev. S. Flood Jones, set to a tune by Turle; and Bridge's simple but effective Anthem, "The blessing of the Lord."

FOREIGN NOTES.

THE programme of the Musical Festival to be held in Hamburg, from the 9th to the 13th inst., under the direction of Dr. Hans von Bülow, will be of a very representative German character, including works by Philipp Emanuel Bach (Symphony in F major), Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Meyerbeer (Overture, written for the inauguration of the London Exhibition of 1862), Wagner, Brahms, and Johann Strauss (two waltzes, "Volkslied" and "Phönix-Schwinger"). The interesting scheme thus set forth, the popularity of the Conductor, combined with the well-known hospitality of the Hamburgers, cannot but attract a cosmopolitan audience of music-lovers to the flourishing Hansa town on the occasion in question.

Lortzing's opera "Hans Sachs," which had been successfully revived last season at Regensburg, is now in course of being mounted at Nuremberg, the home of the historical cobbler-poet, where, as in Wagner's "Meistersinger," the dramatic incidents of the opera are supposed to occur. Our contemporary, Die Neue Zeitschrift für Musik, in referring to the above revival, is however mistaken in calling "Hans Sachs" a "Jugendoper," a youthful production of its composer, since it was written in 1840, when Lortzing was in his thirty-seventh year, had already composed his "Czar und Zimmermann," an opera upon which his fame chiefly rests.

A series of public lectures on musical subjects will be delivered at the Berlin University during the approach winter term, including Professor Bellermann's discourse "The Music of Ancient Greece" and Professor Spitta on "Chamber Music after the Death of Beethoven," widely divergent subjects, to be handled, however, by most competent authorities.

Among the novelties to be produced during the season at the Royal Opera of Berlin, will be Ponchielli's "Gioconda" and Heinrich Hofmann's charming opera "Aennchen von Tharau."

The idea of presenting Wagner's early opera "Novize von Palermo" at the Munich Hof-Theater has been abandoned. The work was tried in private recently, was found to be written entirely in the old-fashioned style of Italian opera, and full of reminiscences—altogether devoid, in fact, of individuality.

Mr. Arthur Sullivan's "Mikado," sung in German, has been a great success in Berlin that a new series of performances has just commenced at the Friedrich Wilhelmstadt Theatre of that capital.

Heinrich Vogl, the eminent Munich tenor, has accepted a three months' engagement at the German Opera of New York during the coming season, at a monthly salary of $1,000 dollars.

A comic opera in three acts, "Des König's Schwert" ("The King's Sword"), the libretto by Herr Franz Bittong, of the Hamburg Stadt-Theater, the music by the Bremen Cellmeister, Herr Theodor Hentschel, is to be brought to the stage shortly at Hamburg. Another one-act comic opera, "Der Amerikaner," has met with great success upon its first performance at the Wilhelm Theatre, of Görlitz. The libretto is from the pen of the well-known dramatic author, Herr Gustav von Moser, the music being by Herr Hermann Grönecke.

The important collection of musical instruments of the late Mr. Theodore Steinway (of the well-known firm of piano-manufacturers) has become the property, by bequest, of the Municipal Museum of the town of Brunswick. The collection comprises over 100 instruments, some of them very ancient date, and contains, in addition thereto, a number of highly interesting engravings and photographs in connection with the subject.

Victor Wilder has completed his French version of "L'Or du Rhin" under the title of "Götterdämmerung," which will complete M. Wilder's rendering of the entire trilogy of "Der Ring des Nibelungen." M. Wilder, who is an able and conscientious writer in the field of critical history and criticism, has just had the Cross of the Legion of Honour conferred upon him by the French Government.

Ambroise Thomas's opera "Hamlet" was produced for the fiftieth time last month at the Imperial Opera of Vienna, while at the same institution Wagner's "Lohengrin" has just met with its 250th performance.

The forthcoming performances of classical plays at the Odéon Theatre will include Shakespeare's "Merchant of Venice," with music by M. Gabriel Fauré; "Twelfth Night," with music by M. Widor; "Much Ado about Nothing," with music by M. Benjamin Godard; also the "Egmont," with Beethoven's music. M. Lamouré will be the Conductor.

Two violins belonging to the late eminent violinist, M. Adami, have just been sold in Paris—viz., a Stradivarius for $1,000, and a Stainer for £260.

M. Benjamin Godard has just completed a new opera, "L'Or du Rhin," the libretto by M. Blau, which will shortly be brought out by the Paris Opéra Comique.

Camille Saint-Saëns, who was prevented by severe rheumatism from attending the revival at the Paris Opéra of his revised version of his "Henry VIII.," has been prevailed upon by the doctors to pass some months in the South to recruit his health.

Ernest Reyer, the gifted French composer, is putting the finishing touches to the score of a new opera, "L'Or du Rhin" (founded upon M. Flaubert's book of the same name), which is to be first produced at the Théâtre de la Monnaie, Brussels.

A new opera, "Flavia," the music by M. Souvinet, has met with a very favourable reception on its recent first performance at the Donna Maria Theatre, of Lisbon.

Edle. Baude, a young lady of eighteen, has recently been awarded the first prize for violoncello playing at the Conservatoire, to the discomfiture of seven other competitors of the opposite sex.

Luigi's "Orfeo" has been given some twelve times lately at the Teatro Nuovo of Naples, the success of the presentation being due in no small degree to the splendid interpretation of the title part by Signora Giulia Ravogli.

The municipality of Crema, the native place of the late Signor Bottesini, have started a subscription list for the purpose of erecting a monument to the memory of the deceased virtuoso.

The late Signor Bottesini is said to have left the complete sets of four unpublished operas, entitled respectively, "L'Or du Rhin," "Cedar," "Graziella," and "Bohème"; also an interesting collection of autographs, including a series of letters from Verdi, concerning the production of "Aida" (the first on any stage) at Cairo.

Edvard Grieg, the genial Norwegian composer, has just set to music a posthumous drama from the pen of his countryman, Björnson, entitled "Olaf Trygvanson." The work takes the form of a dramatic cantata for chorus, orchestra, and solo voices, and its impending first performance is looked forward to with eager interest in Norwegian musical circles.

A monument is, at last, to be erected to Mendelssohn at Leipzig, for the great reputation of which town in matters musical the composer of "Elijah" did so much. Herr Werner Stein, a talented young sculptor, a native of Brunswick, has been entrusted with the execution of the work.

Franz Rein, for many years the highly esteemed organist at the leading church of Eisleben, one of the founders of the Allgemeine Deutsche Musik-Verein, and able composer for his instrument, died on July 31, at the age of seventy.

Gustav Lange, the popular composer of pianoforte pieces, pièces de salon, &c., died on July 20, at Wernigerode, Prussia, aged barely fifty-nine, he having been born at Erfurt, in August, 1830.

The death is announced at Brunswick, on the 5th ult., of Dr. Carl Hohnstock, a violinist of great attainments, who, during his artistic tours in company with his sister, an excellent pianoforte player, made himself most favourably known some thirty or forty years ago, both in this country and in the United States, since which time, however, the artist has lived in almost complete retirement.

We have to record the death, on the 12th ult., at Oberstdorff (Bavarian Alps), whither he had gone for change of air, of Carl Amand Mangold, one of the most gifted members of a family distinguished for its musical talent for generations past. Carl Amand Mangold was born in 1813 at Darmstadt. His operas "Gudrun," "Das Koehlermädchen," and "Dornröschen"; as well as his oratorios "Israel in der Wüste" and "Abraham," and the cantatas "Frithjof," "Barbarossa's Erwachen," have all been successfully performed both at Darmstadt and elsewhere, while his male quartets are known and sung all over Germany, and have been said to rival those of Mendelssohn.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—I have read with interest several of the letters in your columns on the above subject. At the beginning of this year we adopted a uniform dress for the ladies of our choir, and I am glad to say we have found it a complete success, and not only our own congregation, but strangers, clergy, and others from all parts are greatly pleased with the effect. We have sixty-two members (all voluntary)—viz., sixteen ladies, fourteen boys, and thirty-two men. Surplices for the males were adopted three years ago. The ladies have long ulster cloaks of fine French grey wool, lined with red silk, and black velvet hats, something like a college cap, but not so stiff. They take their places prior to the procession of the male members, and occupy the first ranks of Decani and Cantoris sides. I am told that a similar dress has been in use at Driffild Church many years, and I hear they are going to adopt it at the Trinity Church, Hartlepool, after a copy of ours.

We have a full choral service and anthems every Sunday, and have to depend upon our ladies for leading the musical portion of the service and most of the soprano solo parts, which we find in every way far superior to boys' singing, both as to volume of tone, devotional rendering, and expression. Besides, most of your readers know that except in Cathedrals or Churches, such as Leeds Parish Church, where daily choral services are given and special funds provided for that purpose, it is quite the exception to keep up a reserve force of well trained boys to supply the gaps perpetually occurring by the breaking of voices of the elder boys and those who have to take solos. I have had about forty years' experience myself in choirs and Choral Societies, and am quite convinced that it is the proper thing to have ladies in choirs. As for the remark of one of your correspondents about St. Paul's injunction for "Women to keep silence," he must know perfectly well that that alluded to "preaching," and if we are to take it literally women should not audibly join in the Service at all—whether in the choir or not. I think your correspondent would hardly like to go so far as that. Surely women's voices were given them for something higher than singing to amuse concert goers, and what nobler use could they be put to than in the worship and service of God?

I am, Sir, yours faithfully,

SAMUEL DAY, Hon. Choirmaster.

St. John's Church, Wakefield,
August 10, 1889.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—I have very carefully followed up the correspondence in your valuable and instructive paper upon the above subject, and I think the most absurd objection that has been put forth as yet is the one in the current issue, where your correspondent says, "The dictum of St. Paul—'Let the women be silent in the church'—covers the whole question." Now, Sir, my humble opinion is that those words of St. Paul do not even touch the question, let alone cover it. I have looked at the passages in the Bible and I do not think St. Paul in any way referred to singing. It seems to me that the writer of the passage (St. Paul) meant that women were not to preach in the church. If your correspondent will turn to 1 Cor. iv. 34, also to the 1st epistle of Paul to Timothy, ii. 11, 12, I think he will admit the truth of my statement above.

Looking at another side of the question, I would like to ask, does your correspondent wish us to think that it is wrong for all women in a congregation to uplift their voices in praise of God? Are they to go to church simply to listen to others praise our Lord? I think he must have written his opinion without having given the subject due thought.

Again, I cannot see the objection to having ladies in a church choir any more than in a chapel choir; and I do not think it is possible to find one chapel in a hundred where there are not ladies in the choir.—Yours faithfully,

August 10, 1889.

TEMPO.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—I have read with considerable interest the correspondence which has been recently carried on in your columns on the subject of "Ladies' Surpliced Choirs." The letter in the current number, which appears over the signature "Geo. Dixon," should surely not pass unnoticed. The writer, in a lordly and off-hand manner, settles the whole question to his own satisfaction by quoting (not very accurately either) the well known direction of St. Paul concerning women speaking in the church. He should, however, complete the quotation and not mutilate it to serve his own purpose. The verse runs thus:—"Let your women keep silence in the churches; for it is not permitted unto them to speak." The Apostle, as the context shows, obviously refers to preaching, and I challenge your correspondent to point out a single passage in Holy Scripture forbidding women to sing praises to the Almighty either in the church or out of it. If Mr. Dixon has a logical mind and follows out his own argument to its legitimate conclusion, he must forbid women to take any part in the Psalms, hymns, and responses.

If this view be correct we had better at once revise the instructions in the Prayer Book, and instead of "The people shall answer," &c., write "The men only shall answer," &c.

Mr. Dixon asks, "What authority has a nineteenth century clergyman to invent a new ecclesiastical vestment?" Why not ask at the same time, "What authority had a nineteenth century tailor to invent the present style of dress coat?" The authority in either case, I should think, is the very commonplace (and commonsense) one of modern requirements. I cannot call to mind any passage in the writings of St. Paul, or any other of the Apostles, which gives directions as to the use of cassock, surplice, alb, cope, stole, &c. If these are the inventions of man's wisdom, unaided by the authority of Holy Writ, why should it be such a heinous offence to invent other "What man has done, man may do," is an old saying which is true in more senses than one.

In conclusion, I should like to ask Mr. Dixon by what authority he arrogates to himself the right to reprove the views on this or any other subject of "Any member of the church, male or female."—Yours truly,

J. HENRY HOWEL.

Rock Ferry, Cheshire, August 21, 1889.

MUSICAL DIPLOMAS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—I beg to address you on a subject which I have not yet seen referred to in your columns—namely, the multiplication of colleges, &c., professing to grant diploma music after examination.

It seems one of the special delights of the present day to be examined and to add letters after one's name; and I suppose it is only to satisfy this craving that new examination machinery is set going, and so in time, at the present rate, we shall be the most "examined" nation on earth.

Besides the Universities, College of Organists, Royal Academy, Trinity College (which one would think would be sufficient), we have lately seen added the "Guild of Organists" and the "Church Choir Guild." I should be glad if you could inform me of the value of the diploma given by these two concerns. They are not training institutions. One thing about them seems rather funny to me. The Secretary of the Organists' Guild (according to information to be seen in your columns) was dismissed for insubordination, and in revenge he sprung on an unofficial profession an opposition shop called the "Church Choir Guild," and elected himself (he must have done it himself) manager, or, as he calls it, "Warden."

If an unknown man can do this, surely there is nothing to prevent me and other unknown men from setting up an Examination concerns, until the country is flooded with them, and there is no one left to be examined, and then we presume that the evil will cure itself.

I admit that examinations in music, when conducted by a body of musicians of high rank attached to a bona-fide institution, do good service to scholastic musical art; when Tom, Dick, or Harry set up in examination business the thing seems a trifle ridiculous.—I remain, yours truly,
August 12, 1889.

M. KINGSTON.

NOTATION.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—I am glad to see your remarks in THE MUSICAL TIMES (page 400), on music in elementary schools, and the effect of Notation on orchestras. The management of these schools is guided by a code of regulations, the spirit of which is to implant, if possible, in each child, sufficient knowledge and power of communication to make him a useful member of society, whilst developing in him sufficient mental ability to secure him a fair start in the hiliarating race for life's prizes. With these ends in view the Code has been made to refuse exclusive recognition to a decimal system of computation, with its attendant advantages of sublime ease to the teacher, since such a system completely fails to maintain commercial intercourse, and, again, for somewhat similar reasons it has refused exclusive recognition of phonetic systems. Now framers of the Code are not generally musicians, therefore in musical matters have been compelled to act in accordance with the advice received from musical men. The proper moment Tonic Sol-faists pressed their claims on the attention of the Education Department; the musical profession, much to its detriment, made no reply, and we have had duality in Notation established. When it was secured Mr. S. Curwen stated that within ten years a complete musical revolution would be accomplished among the masses of the people. We are nearing the end of the period. Can Mr. Curwen point to any promise of the fulfilment of his prophecy? I am fully persuaded that he cannot, and that his failure to do so is to be attributed to the fact that his second Notation fails to put its disciples in communication with musicians. But this is the purpose of Notational teaching, and yet, probably for want of organisation, English musicians have neglected their simple duty, and the interests of what they are pleased to term their divine art, and have, without remonstrance, allowed the expenditure of what may ultimately become millions on the teaching of a Notation which altogether fails in its purpose, and which, for its inutility, should have been rejected without one moment's hesitation.

No doubt the difficulties of Staff teaching were at one time very considerable, but as a result of experience its teaching has been rendered so rapid that Mr. Curwen with just one lesson of ten minutes, and, if I recollect rightly, in one case of five minutes, has been able to teach children who had never before attempted anything beyond Sol-fa to sing perfectly from the Staff. Here is most conclusive and satisfactory evidence that the inherent difficulties of the Staff are not insurmountable. Many of us, however, are inclined to doubt the general marvellous results of this one solitary lesson; but we feel deeply that for want of Staff teaching the music results in elementary schools are not satisfactory, since all the boys are leaving school with a knowledge of vocal notation only, whereas they are unable to use their voices for two, three, or four years, at the end of which time their musical knowledge and zeal will have evaporated. With an acquaintance with the Staff thousands at this very susceptible age would be flocking to teachers of instruments with whom they would have been put in communication, and thus the one purpose of Notation being fulfilled we might hope for the multiplication of orchestras and music in the people's homes in addition to the simple creation of a few choirs such as are the possible present result of a very immense expenditure.

I am, Sir, faithfully yours,

FRED. W. WAREHAM.

South Norwood, July 13, 1889.

PIANOFORTE FINGERING: A PLEA FOR GREATER UNIFORMITY.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—I do not suppose that teachers will ever agree about the fingering of irregular passages—such as cannot be referred to any one technical head. But with scales in single and double notes, and arpeggi—matters of technique, pure and simple—the case is quite different. Here uniformity would be a boon indeed, and to this end may I suggest a few points which cry aloud for settlement. First, with regard to scales. The principle of Kalkbrenner, Plaidy, and Hallé was to finger every scale, whether commencing on the tonic, mediant, or other degree, like C major wherever possible. Tauzig, an essentially modern authority, favoured this view, which, nevertheless, is generally supposed to have been exploded when Herz put forward his rule of "the same finger for the same note, whatever degree the scale may begin with." The latter is doubtless the easier to remember, but this advantage is more than counterbalanced by the awkward positions of the hand which it induces. Herz's system is adopted by Messrs. Lebert and Stark in their "School," and with petty modifications, which destroy its characteristic feature, by Messrs. Macfarren and Pauer. Here then we have a practical issue. Which system is best? Is that of Herz generally adopted? If so, has it been adopted from a conviction of its merits, or merely from fashion? The relative advantages of the two systems should be discussed and threshed out. Were a consensus of opinion on this and kindred points obtained from celebrated players—Madame Schumann, Messrs. Brahms, von Bülow, de Pachmann, Reinecke, Henselt, Rubinstein, and Saint-Saëns would make an excellent jury—a system might be established which should command the assent of every reputable professor, and thus put an end to the multiplication of muddle which now goes on.

Then in the matter of arpeggi, there is a point which wants settling. Should all common-chord arpeggi, major and minor, which begin on a white key be fingered 4 3 1 + in the first position (left hand)? Plaidy says they should, but Mr. Macfarren fingers 4 2 1 + in the arpeggi of D, A, E, B, and F sharp; and, alternatively, in A flat, E flat, and B flat. Lebert and Stark make still more use of the second finger. This point is considered trivial by some teachers; others again lay great stress upon it.

Next, with regard to "double" scales. These are much practised now-a-days, and rightly so. They are the best of all technical exercises. Yet here the different manuals present most glaring discrepancies in fingering. These scales cannot be played absolutely legato. "Es genügt wenn in aufsteigender Scala beim Uebersetzen der obere, in absteigender Scala der untere Ton des Doppelgriffs gebunden wird" (Lebert and Stark). At best there must be an auricular illusion. Then why not go a step further, and allow the use of the thumb on consecutive keys in executing double thirds? In actual practice it is often so employed by very good players. There is a wide field here for scientific discussion. Previous to Chopin, double thirds and sixths were not much written except in Toccatas and Studies. Even in Beethoven's Sonatas I can call to mind no extended scale passage of this kind.

Another moot point is the fingering of the chromatic scale in double minor thirds. Comparing Tauzig's fingering of these with Mr. Macfarren's, I can only wonder.

Just a word on the melodic minor scale. A crotchet has got abroad that this should not be practised in thirds, in sixths, nor in contrary motion. The opinion of the best authorities, from Clementi downwards, has ever been that they should be so practised. I must protest against the dogmatism and assumption of infallibility which prevail among the authors of technical studies. I contend that no teacher has a right to set forth new fingerings without adducing reasons for discarding the old.—I remain, Sir, yours faithfully,

WALTER BROOKS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—It is the custom now-a-days to give, on a Concert programme, the name of the composer only of a song, and no acknowledgment whatever of the author's work is made. Now I think it may be fairly acknowledged that the words of a song are of as much importance as the music, so why should not the author's name as well as the composer's be given?

A song written in collaboration would be given in the programme thus:—

SONG "Star of Bethlehem" .. { F.E. Weatherly.

the first name being that of the author and the second that of the composer.

A song written and composed by one person would be given thus:—

SONG "Ehren on the Rhine" .. { M. Hutchinson

with the name in the middle of the bracket.

I hope, with your assistance, to induce Musical Directors of Concerts in future to give authors due credit for their labour.—I am, Sir, yours faithfully,

12, Pier Head, Wapping, E.,

MUSICAL SIGNS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE MUSICAL TIMES."

SIR,—I should feel obliged if you would correct an error in relation to my Organ piece mentioned in your July number. Your writer says that I dispensed with the clefs. I have not done so, but I have given the original correct meaning to those signs which have been so absurdly corrupted in the course of centuries that it is difficult now to recognise in  and  the letters G and F. The G clef has gone through about nineteen changes and the F clef at least twenty-seven since their use. Now as these hieroglyphics express letters, why not give them in an intelligible manner? Surely the learner of music has quite sufficient difficulties, and sometimes even absurdities, to contend with; why should the right representation of such important signs be withheld from him? For a long time I have used real letters and also omitted the superfluous repetition of signatures. In a long composition, say with five sharps or flats, the engraver has several hundred, thousands in some cases, of these signs to engrave without benefit to any one except to those deprived of memory. If the repetitions can

Some publishers have refused my changes because they look strange—a fine reason! People are such slaves of habit that they prefer an old absurdity to a reasonable amelioration, and any one who has the most trifling improvement at heart must expect violent opposition accompanied by the most one-sided and stupid commentaries. I hope writers who prefer continuing the old ways will do so by all means if it gives them pleasure; but every composer should have the right and facility to publish his works in his own way and not be opposed by blind and obstinate prejudice.—I am, Sir, yours truly,

E. SILAS.

BRIEF SUMMARY OF COUNTRY NEWS.

We do not hold ourselves responsible for any opinions expressed in this summary, as all the notices are either collated from the local papers or supplied to us by correspondents.

ASHTABULA, OHIO.—On Trinity Sunday, in St. Peter's parish, the boys of the choir were for the first time vested in cassocks and cottas, and seated in their proper place in the chancel. At the morning service, they sang Macfarren's Te Deum and Woodward's setting of the Communion Office, with great precision. Mr. A. A. Aylward, late of St. Thomas's, Salisbury, England, is the Choirmaster. He has given several Organ Recitals at the Church, which have been much appreciated.

CHESTER.—The second annual Diocesan Choral Festival was held at the Cathedral on the 1st ult., when thirty-five choirs were present, representing nearly 1,000 voices. Dr. Payne, Bishop of Chester, presided at a luncheon held previously to the Festival, and in proposing "The Health of the Queen," mentioned as a curious fact that Her Majesty was a prebendary of St. David's Cathedral. The Cathedral was crowded. At the Festival Dr. Bridge presided at the organ, and the Precantor, the Rev. C. H. Hylton Stewart, conducted. Stainer's Anthem, "Lord, Thou art God," was effectively rendered, and the entire musical service was a great success.

GUERNSEY.—The organ at St. Stephen's Church has been entirely overhauled and enlarged by Messrs. Wedlake. The instrument now contains upwards of fifty stops and is the largest in the island. On the 4th and 11th ult. Recitals were ably given by Mr. C. E. Juleff, the Organist and Choir Director, to large congregations, the programme comprising selections from the works of Bach, Handel, Mozart, Mendelssohn, Haydn, Wagner, Silas, Lemmens, Ouseley, and Richmond. The Rev. S. Raystondage, of Steeple Aston, Oxford, sang Mendelssohn's "If with all your hearts" (Elijah) and "Be thou faithful" (St. Paul).

HEREFORD.—Mr. Henry Leslie has resigned the post of Conductor of the Herefordshire Philharmonic Society, after having held it for twenty-seven years. In recognition of his valuable services a testimonial fund is to be raised; and with the intention of still giving his kindly help in the direction of the Society's welfare, Mr. Leslie has accepted the office of President, vacant by the death of Sir Frederick A. Gore Ouseley.

MARGATE.—Mr. John C. Ward gave an interesting Organ Recital at St. Paul's, Cliftonville, on Wednesday evening, the 21st ult. His programme included "St. Ann's Fugue" (J. S. Bach); Recit. and Air "Deeper and deeper still" and "Waft her, Angels," by desire (Handel); New Grand Prelude and March, "Wedding Chimes" (John C. Ward); Recit. and Air "My heart is sorely pained" and "O for the wings of a dove" (Mendelssohn); Symphony No. 5, in F, "Allegro vivace," "Allegro Cantabile," "Andante quasi Allegretto," "Adagio," "Toccata" (Ch. Widor); Duet "The King of Love my Shepherd is" (Gounod); "Persian March" (J. Strauss). The vocal pieces were sung by Mr. John C. Ward and his daughter, Miss Clementine Ward.

PULBROUGH.—At the conclusion of Evening Service on the 4th ult., an Organ Recital was given in the Parish Church. The executant was Mr. W. H. Pitt, of St. John's, Highbury, N. The principal features in the programme were Haydn's Sonatas in D, E minor, and A flat. The performance was highly appreciated by a large congregation.

SHEFFIELD.—The Scots Guards band played at the exhibition of the Nether Edge Floral and Horticultural Society, on the 19th ult. Mr. E. Holland, the bandmaster, was presented with a beautiful penknife at the conclusion of the performance. In acknowledging the gift, Mr. Holland said his present visit to Yorkshire was more pleasant than the last, when, being judge at a brass band contest at Keighley, he was mobbed after giving his decision. Curiously enough, the bands to which he awarded the three first prizes were the bands which won like honours at the competition at the Irish Exhibition last year at Olympia.

SOUTHSEA.—The Southampton May Choir, under the direction of Mr. J. F. Sharp, made their third appearance this season at the Pier Pavilion Concerts, on the 8th ult., and won for themselves great praise for their fine rendering of several male part-songs. The choir consists of sixteen voices. On this occasion they sang "Comrades in arms," Hutton's "Tar's Song," and Gounod's "Soldiers' Chorus," from Faust. Several encores were given during the evening.

WESTON-SUPER-MARE.—Two excellent Concerts were given in the Victoria Hall, on the 9th ult. The vocalists were Madame Elise Gordon (who made her debut in public on this occasion), Madame Belle Cole, and Mr. Franklin Clive. Mrs. Albert Barker gave some recitations, including imitations of the "American Bobalink." Mr. Johannes Wolff (violinist to the King of Holland) contributed some selections on the violin, and Signor Carlo Ducci was the pianist and accompanist.

ORGAN APPOINTMENTS.—Mr. J. W. D. Pillow, Organist and Choirmaster to New Parish Church, St. Mary, Portsea, Portsmouth.—Madame Emily Lawrence, to St. John's Church, Wembley.—Mr. Samuel Warren, Organist and Choirmaster to St. James's Episcopal Church, Leith, N.B.—Mr. W. RUTH

EDWARD OXENFORD

MUSIC BY

ALFRED R. GAUL

THANKSGIVING SERVICES.

"The Biblical story of which Ruth is the central figure lends itself with remarkable suitability to an illustration of a harvest celebration. The country landscape, the ripened corn, the sturdy reapers, the standing sheaves, the active gleaners, and the busy farmer, all combine to fill the mind's eye with a pleasant scene of excitement. Set to music by a competent composer such as Mr. A. R. Gaul, the narrative of Ruth's eventful episode lends itself to a pathetic, picturesque, and pleasant performance. The bereaved and sorrowful trio of women on whom the calamity of poverty and famine has fallen, as if to give intensity to their greater grief, and the unexpected and happy influence of patriarchal benevolence displayed by the mighty Boaz, who so quickly transforms sorrow into joy, are all introduced and aptly take their allotted place in the melodious music of Gaul's interpretation of the tale."—Gloucester Citizen.

"The work, like the 'Holy City,' is full of beautiful orchestral passages, while the vocal score abounds with charming numbers."—Bucks Herald.

"Ruth' is a work of sterling power; its musical form is that of perfect tunefulness combined with simplicity and strength. . . . The composer has grasped his theme in a thoroughly sympathetic manner, and has produced a work which is worthy of the subject."—Bradford Observer.

"Bright, tuneful, fresh, and musicianly—this work will be a great favourite, and will add to Mr. Gaul's reputation."—Birmingham Weekly Dart.

"Ruth' has been set to music by several composers; none, however, has become so worthily popular as the Cantata under notice. . . . It contains some charming music, and is highly characteristic of the story it so vividly illustrates."—South Wilts Express.

"Full of flowing melody."—Salisbury Times.

KING ARTHUR

A DRAMATIC CANTATA

JAMES SMITON, M.A.,

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

JOHN MORE SMITON.

(Op. 15.)

PRICE 2s. 6d. BAND PARTS ON HIRE.

SCOTSMAN.

"This beautiful work will enhance the reputation won for its composer by his similar composition 'Ariadne.' It shows a charming gift of melody and no small musicianly skill in its merely technical qualities. It may be recommended to Choral Societies as well worthy of study."

SCOTTISH LEADER.

"The work opens with a charming prelude in sacred style, which sets the mind admirably in tune for the drama which is to follow. In the first scene the Romance sung by the King is a little gem, and would make a beautiful song even apart from its surroundings. In the third scene, the wedding of Arthur and Guinevere gives rise to a whole suite of characteristic novelties. No. 15, which introduces a hymn sung by maidens, is perhaps the finest thing in the whole Cantata; and an effective epilogue brings the work to a striking close. 'King Arthur' will certainly add to the reputation of its gifted composer, and will be welcomed by all lovers of music."

DUNDEE ADVERTISER.

"We began by congratulating Mr. Smiton on the excellence of the libretto, and we conclude with our equally hearty congratulations to him on the excellent use he has made of it. We cordially recommend 'King Arthur' to the notice of choral societies desiring a work which would make their practising a pleasure and their performances a public benefit."

DUNDEE COURIER.

"The whole of 'King Arthur' shows a great power of construction, a wide range of melody, and while there is not a dull or unattractive number in the book, there are several items which stand out pre-eminently as beautiful beyond anything the composer has hitherto achieved, and which are already being sung widely both by professionals and amateurs."

Conductors of Choral Societies should see this highly interesting and beautiful work.

"It is not often that we have derived so much genuine pleasure from the perusal of a new work as was the case with that at present before us."—Newcastle Journal.

"It is not often that an audience is roused to the pitch of enthusiasm that greeted the production of Mr. Hamish MacCunn's 'Bonnie Kilmeny,' given last night with the full orchestral setting which was requisite for the full development of its full beauty. If Mr. MacCunn had written nothing else this work would stamp its author as a master whose name will be classed with those musicians whose creations have formed epochs in the past."—Edinburgh Evening News, January 22.

"Mr. Shinn is well known as the author of several Cantatas and other compositions, all of which are written in a style at once musicianly and popular. 'The Captives of Babylon' may be highly commended as an interesting and valuable addition to our shorter Oratorios and Cantatas. The work contains several solos of much beauty; also duets, quartets, and choruses in great variety."—Sunday School Chronicle.

"Mr. Shinn is well known as the writer of many popular pieces for choral societies; but this is certainly the best thing he has produced."—Nonconformist Musical Journal.

"In our judgment no better work of the kind has yet been published. It is brimful of pretty melodies, and the harmonic effects show the skill of a painstaking and talented musician."—Free Methodist.

"It is cleverly written, and in an attractive style. The music is of a varied and pleasing character, so that it is likely to become very popular."—The Portsmouth Evening Mail.

"Mr. Shinn is well known, and deservedly so for his musical talent. Continuity of design and freshness of conception are apparent throughout the work. It contains many effective solos and choruses, and the music is not difficult. There is no doubt that the Oratorio will become very popular."—South London Press.

"By the production of these Trios our townsman, Mr. A. R. Gaul, has made a valuable addition to the many beautiful and useful compositions he has formerly given to the public. Mr. Gaul's music is unfailingly charming, the voice-parts being so disposed that they may be easily learnt, and the accompaniments are as characteristic as they are pretty. Each separate piece is so good that we cannot make references to special favourites. Young ladies who take pleasure in part-singing will find variety in the collection, and both in the home circle and in the school class Mr. Gaul's new work is sure to be heartily welcomed."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

OPINIONS OF THE LONDON AND PROVINCIAL PRESS

ON

A. R. GAUL'S CANTATA
"JOAN OF ARC"

PRODUCED WITH GREAT SUCCESS BY THE BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ATHENÆUM.

"An advance on the earlier work, 'The Holy City.' . . . The choruses are written with much knowledge of effect, and an 'Ave Maria' and the final chorus of the 'Spirit Voices' may be named as really charming."

LONDON FIGARO.

"Bound to be widely taken up, doubtless to attain which end the composer has employed but three soloists, and has given a more than usually large degree of importance to the choral work. . . . The 'Ave Maria' is singularly beautiful."

"Obviously written with a special view to the requirements of choral societies, and likely to become highly popular."

REFEREE.

"Calculated to delight performers and listeners, being full of melody and taking effects."

WESTERN TIMES.

"The Exeter Oratorio Society last night achieved a brilliant success, and it may safely be said, without fear of exaggeration, that never before have they performed a work more satisfactory to themselves or more interesting to the audience than 'Joan of Arc.'"

THE SHIELDS DAILY NEWS.

"One of the most delightful Concerts ever given by the South Shields Choral Society was that of last evening, when the principal piece was 'Joan of Arc.' We cannot speak too highly of Mr. Gaul's work, which is of the most interesting description, and will doubtless soon be a favourite with choral societies."

LEAMINGTON SPA COURIER.

"St. Paul's Choral Society brought their season to a close with a performance in the Town Hall of 'Joan of Arc.' The Cantata, both in verse and music, is essentially fascinating and contains all the elements necessary to make it one of the standard works for performance by musical societies, the choral writing and orchestration being simply charming."

TEWKESBURY REGISTER.

"The Conductor of the Philharmonic Society is to be congratulated on his selection of a Cantata possessing such attractive music as that which goes to make 'Joan of Arc' what it undoubtedly is—viz., the best work I remember having heard in Tewkesbury."

NORWICH DAILY PRESS.

"By the invitation of the Head Mistress of the High School, a large company assembled to hear a performance of 'Joan of Arc.' There is probably no living English composer who has obtained more popularity with provincial choral societies than Mr. A. R. Gaul. His sacred Cantata, 'The Holy City,' is more extensively known than any other modern English composition of a similar character, and 'Joan of Arc' has already been successfully performed in London and many of the largest provincial towns. Mr. Gaul's writing is characterised by the most perfectly neat workmanship and spontaneity, combined with a never-failing resource of melodic invention."

CRYSTAL PALACE REPORTER.

"The music throughout is of a very high order, and full of beauty and interest, so much so that it is hardly possible to single out any numbers for special praise. The various movements are widely contrasted in style, in some considerable dramatic power being manifest, but all overflow with melody, and there is a happy absence of the restlessness of tonality which disfigures so many modern works. The vocal parts, whether for soli or chorus, are written within the range of average vocalists, and are therefore grateful alike to the singers and hearers. The Cantata is a credit to English art, . . . one of the most interesting works yet given by the Anerley Society."

STRATFORD-UPON-AVON HERALD.

"In 'Joan of Arc,' particularly in the latter part, there are some exquisite passages—some charming descriptive pieces. The lovely 'Hark! thy spirit voices call,' carried one away in the spirit into veritable realms of dreamland, and the chorus, 'Fret not thyself to-day' is picturesquely beautiful, graceful, and effective."

THE WESTERN NEWS, December 6, 1888.

"Few cantatas are as rich in chaste melodies, charming choruses, and exquisite orchestration as Alfred R. Gaul's 'Joan of Arc,' performed for the first time in Plymouth by the Vocal Association in the Guildhall last evening."

THE WESTERN DAILY MERCURY, December 6, 1888.

"Proved an unqualified success, . . . the bulk of the Cantata is allotted to the chorus. In fact, the choir of this Association has seldom had such a good opportunity for giving their sterling worth a good display."

LEEDS MERCURY, November 7, 1888.

"Drew forth enthusiastic plaudits. . . . Of the Cantata, as interpreted last evening (in the Town Hall, Leeds, with a band and chorus of 250 performers), it is impossible to speak in terms of anything but praise. Solos and choruses alike are full of melody, while the orchestration is descriptive to a degree. For each of the principal vocalists there is one song that singles itself out, and each received an encore."

HERTS AND CAMBRIDGE REPORTER.

"The theme is one of the most romantic in the pages of history. In the earlier and poetic passages there is something of the charm of Sir Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen.' The last chorus is set to music which would be not unworthy of the great masters."

LIVERPOOL COURIER.

"Must enhance the high reputation of its composer."

HUDDERSFIELD EXAMINER.

"The inspiration of a highly-refined musician, . . . The Cantata is even a more masterly and beautiful work than 'The Holy City.'"

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE DAILY CHRONICLE.

"No more charming Cantata than 'Joan of Arc' could have been chosen. It abounds in delicious music. There is not a tedious note in it."

BRADFORD OBSERVER.

"Gives the listener a vivid and realistic impression, its attractiveness being continuous instead of spasmodic."

BIRMINGHAM DAILY TIMES.

"It would not be surprising if it attained to even the almost phenomenal popularity of 'The Holy City'; contains a similar wealth of melody and effective part-writing."

BIRMINGHAM DAILY GAZETTE.

"Reading the score convinces us that it is our townsman's greatest production. . . . Could have been originated by none but a born melodist."

BIRMINGHAM DAILY POST.

"A distinct advance upon Mr. Gaul's previous work in cantata form. . . . A constant flow of exquisite melodies and effective choral writing."

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

"A thoroughly melodious work, and should find favour with choral societies. It is not difficult to sing, and contains sufficient variety to keep up the interest to the end."

THE CHRISTIAN PILGRIM

COMPOSED BY J. E. NEWELL.

PREFACE.

The growing custom of performing complete works in places of public worship has led the Composer of "The Christian Pilgrim" to hope that his Cantata may be found acceptable in choirs, where the larger and more difficult works of the great masters are often inadmissible; it contains twenty-four numbers of Solo and Concerted pieces, and can be effectively rendered, with either Pianoforte or Organ Accompaniment.

The words are selected passages of Holy Writ and well-known Hymns, and are intended to portray the life of the Christian Pilgrim through the many trials and temptations that beset him on his heavenly way, to the final triumph of eternal life.

STANDARD SERVICES AND ANTHEMS

The Organ Accompaniments Arranged and the whole Revised

BY
W. J. WESTBROOK,
Mus. Doc., CANTAB.

In making a new Edition of these Popular Services and Anthems, it seemed well that the Accompaniments should be made playable upon the modern Organ, the old G manual having almost disappeared from churches and "places where they sing." In doing this, the Editor has been careful to make it easy to play—easier than it was before—and at the same time clear and effective. As these Services have been, and most likely will continue to be, more widely sung than any others, there can be no reason why they should remain in a fossil condition.

This Edition claims to be, therefore, something more than a mere reproduction of existing copies.

REV. S. CHILDS CLARKE

MUSIC BY

DR. DYKES, DEAN ALFORD, MR. LANGRAN,
and the Editor, MR. A. H. BROWN.

Price 2d.; Words only, 1s. per 100.

"The hymns, which include a fine Processional, are excellently written, and as suitably set; and, if music is ever to win its way, will assuredly become great favourites at harvest festivals. They vary considerably in metre; but gladness and thanksgiving are the twin keynotes of all."—Western Morning News.

"A very excellent set of hymns, and most suitable for country parishes."—Church Times.

"The tunes are much in the current vein of thought, pleasant, tuneful, and having a part-song flavour. Nos. 1 and 3, by the Editor, are fresh and effective, and No. 5, by the same composer, is elegant in its melody and smooth in its harmony. No. 6, by that man of many accomplishments, Dean Alford, has a not unpleasant flavour of mixed antique and modern thought. Mr. Langran's (No. 4), a plain note against note tune, will be found to sing well. Dr. Dykes's (No. 2) is elegant and melodious, and set in the quasi-ecclesiastical measure, six-four, a time borrowed by the Church from an early period of modern dramatic music. The tunes will not fail to please modern choirs."—Musical Standard.

"We would specially draw attention to the unusually good common metre tune 'St. Angelus,' No. 5, which might well pass for a composition of 250 years ago."—Church Herald.

REVIEW

NEW YORK MUSICAL SEASON

CONTAINING

WITH NUMEROUS CRITICISMS,

BY

H. E. KREHBIEL.

VOLUME I., 1885—1886. | VOLUME III., 1887—1888.

" II., 1886—1887. | " IV., 1888—1889.

PRESS NOTICES.

"MR. KREHBIEL is a musical critic of very high rank, not only among American writers on music, but as compared with writers of European celebrity. The introduction prepares us for a pleasure of no ordinary kind; it is written, not in American, but in English of almost unimpeachable purity, and with a degree of literary style for which we were scarcely prepared. If all English critics would get this book and attempt to imitate the writer's fearless honesty, impartiality, and, more than all, his power of forming an opinion, English musical criticism would be a different thing from what it is at present."—Musical World.

"Vom Verfasser dieser Rundschau, Herrn Krehbiel, weiss ich nicht zu sagen, ob er ein Deutscher oder ein eingeborener Amerikaner ist; sein Name war mir bisher unbekannt, sein Buch kam mir aus zweiter Hand zu. Aber seine Besprechungen habe ich mit grossem Vergnügen gelesen; sie lassen überall den musikalisch gründlich gebildeten und einsichtsvollen Beurtheiler erkennen; man begegnet fast auf jeder Seite richtigster durchdrachter Auffassung und glücklichen Einfällen. Er steht ganz auf dem Boden der neuen Anschauungen, behält jedoch immer die allgemeinen Kunstgesetze im Auge. Seine Besprechungen bezeugen gleichzeitig seine gründlichen Kenntnisse wie sein Verdienste um den Sieg deutscher Musik in New York."—Dr. Ehrlich in the Tageblatt, Berlin.

"It is a pleasure to welcome Mr. H. E. Krehbiel's third annual REVIEW OF THE NEW YORK MUSICAL SEASON, published by Messrs. Novello, Ewer and Co., of New York and London. This publication is by far the best annual record of musical activity which appears anywhere, not excepting even Paris, and the future historian of the development of American music will be fortunate in having such a chronicle to guide him. Mr. Krehbiel's criticisms are always thoughtful and often profound; he is uncommonly free from prejudice, extremely accurate, and never errs in lavishing praise at any price."—The Manchester Guardian.

"The interest and excellence of the work are immeasurably increased by the comments of the author, which are introduced wherever there is a musical event of sufficient importance to evoke them. To all who love great music and hope for the general spread of musical culture, Mr. Krehbiel's name is a tower of strength, for all know him as a strong, self-contained, unpartisan advocate of the highest and truest in the tone art. . . . It is a genuine pleasure to read a book of criticism which so fully demonstrates the author's right to be a critic. Mr. Krehbiel is quick to recognise merit wherever he finds it, and he exhibits a commendable lack of sympathy with anything approaching sectionalism or nationalism in art. Music is to him music, and he stands ready to praise or condemn it with equal dispassionateness, whether it be German, Italian, or French, solely on its merits. This ought to be true of every critic of music, but unfortunately for the progress of the art it is true of but one or two others beside Mr. Krehbiel in this country. . . . The REVIEW reveals the author, not as the salaried critic of a daily newspaper, but as a thinker, calm and well supported by study, a commentator temperate in mood and just of appreciation, an unselfish and unbiased advocate of all that is best in one of the noblest of arts."—The New York Times.

"It would not be opportune on this occasion, even if it were possible, to deal with Mr. Krehbiel's criticisms. Dissenting from them as we do in certain matters, they are unquestionably the product of remarkable independence and insight. His criticism of Madame Patti's Carmen is positively refreshing, and his remarks (pp. 201—204) on Beethoven's belief in the metronome, in connection with Herr Seidl's interpretation of the symphonies, show that a conservative antagonism to mere lawlessness is quite compatible with an intense faith in the advanced school of composers and interpreters."—The Saturday Review.

Any one of these volumes will be sent to any address, post-free, on receipt of 8s. or 6s. 6d., together with a subscription to the fifth volume, to be issued next year.

THE TIMES.

The Finale of the first act, in which the two hostile nations are brought into conflict, is masterly in design and full of impetus. . . . The Finale of the second act is again splendidly developed, but the gem of that act is its third scene, introduced by the orchestral Nocturne. . . . Here the composer has fully grasped the situation, and has succeeded accordingly.

At St. James's Hall, where such causes for local enthusiasm do not exist, the new oratorio went through a severer ordeal, from which, however, it emerged with undiminished credit, the attitude of the public during the performance being sympathetic, and in some cases demonstratively favourable.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Turning from Dr. Parry's book to his music, I am disposed to cry, "Welcome home!" as Handel is said to have done at the close of a particularly long and discursive cadenza. There was a time, not so far distant, when the composer of "Judith" appeared to me as a wanderer in the wilderness, roaming aimlessly over a pathless waste. . . . Dr. Parry has been coming back for some time past. We can trace his progress stage by stage. Out of darkness into light he has steadily advanced, till now, on the evidence of "Judith," he stands in the full blaze of orthodoxy, and has "found salvation." . . . The success of "Judith" with the audience was never in doubt, Dr. Parry being recalled and vociferously applauded not only at the close of the performance, but at the end of the first part.

THE STANDARD.

Without any preamble, let me say at once that Dr. Hubert Parry's oratorio "Judith" was produced this morning under the most favourable conditions and with emphatic success. The performance, under Herr Richter's guidance, was all that the most critical taste could have desired; and the composer (who is his own librettist) was called to the orchestra amidst prolonged acclamations, both at the end of the first act and the termination of the work.

The favourable opinion formed at Birmingham was distinctly confirmed by the verdict of last night's audience. The choral music of "Judith" is exceedingly fine. . . . Indeed, wherever Dr. Parry writes for chorus he does so with an evident mastery, not merely over technicalities, but over means of expression. We should find it difficult to point out a single instance in which his choral effects fail to convey an accurate sense of the dramatic situation. . . . In its present shape, therefore, "Judith" stands every chance of achieving wide favour.

MORNING POST.

Dr. Parry was most enthusiastically received after each part, and was honoured by a most hearty burst of applause at the end, so that the verdict of the audience was distinctly and deservedly in his favour. He has shown in "Judith" considerable powers of invention and scholarship, and a large sympathy with dramatic needs. . . . The musician who could produce such a work as "Judith," so full of power, character, and expression, has surely not said his last word.

DAILY NEWS.

That Dr. Parry is a consummate master of all the resources of the orchestra lovers of music need not be reminded, while particularly in the "Moloch" scenes he has treated the chorus in a manner which not infrequently shows a touch of true genius. His reception at the end of each part was most enthusiastic.

Very greatly owing to the magnificent singing by Novello's choir of the Moloch and other choruses, "Judith" achieved a far greater success in London than even amidst the enthusiasm of a provincial festival.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

"Judith" may be warmly praised for the general excellence of writing, which in more than one situation is really masterly, for its wealth and variety of thematic material, for its dramatic spirit, and, above all, for its clearness. Both in its martial and more reposeful elements it is one of the most taking compositions in its peculiar line produced for some time. That it will be heard again, and speedily, can scarcely be doubted.

A success even greater than that attending its introduction at the Birmingham Festival in August, was last night achieved in St. James's Hall, by Dr. Hubert Parry's oratorio "Judith; or, the Regeneration of Manasseh," with which another season of Novello's Oratorio Concerts has commenced. . . . Dr. Parry, we believe, has but to write a few works with the spirit, strength, and musical consistency of "Judith" to become one of the most popular composers of the day.

THE ATHENÆUM.

In speaking of a performance of "Prometheus Unbound" three years ago, we referred to the great skill evinced in some of the choral writing, and ventured to anticipate that it would eventually yield good fruit. This prediction has been exactly fulfilled in the Oratorio entitled "Judith," produced on Wednesday morning with every evidence of a triumphant success. . . . No finer oratorio music than this has been written for many years.

That "Judith" is an immense advance on its composer's earlier efforts must be at once conceded, and from the striking enthusiasm with which it was received last week it would seem to contain the elements of popularity.

GUARDIAN.

The success of Dr. Hubert Parry's new oratorio was of the most unequivocal kind, the audience finding it impossible to obey the printed injunctions concerning applause at the morning performances, and cheering the composer heartily after both parts of a work which will not be long in being recognised as among the highest achievements of English music.

THE DREAM OF JUBAL

A POEM WITH MUSIC

FOR SOLI, CHORUS, ORCHESTRA, AND ACCOMPANIED RECITATION

JOSEPH BENNETT

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

A. C. MACKENZIE.

VOCAL SCORE, PAPER COVER, 2s. 6d.; PAPER BOARDS, 3s.; CLOTH GILT, 4s.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

A hearing of Dr. Mackenzie's music confirms the impression conveyed by reading it, and establishes the fact that the composer has taken another step towards the perfect illustration of simplicity of form and directness of expression—qualities not less essential in the art of music than in any other. . . . There was no mere pretence of listening; from first to last the piece held the attention of its auditors, and compelled their hearty applause, which culminated at the close in an emphatic and apparently unanimous chorus of approval.

STANDARD.

It is only just to bestow very high commendation on Mr. Bennett, whose libretto is, in poetical fancy and skilful arrangement, quite equal to that of the "Rose of Sharon." . . . It may be said without hesitation, that if it does not enhance Dr. Mackenzie's fame, it deserves a place by the side of his best efforts. . . . The audience was evidently interested in the "Dream of Jubal," for the applause was enthusiastic at every opportunity.

DAILY NEWS.

The text may be accepted as a genuine invention of the librettist. . . . It is in his accompaniments to the dialogue that Dr. Mackenzie is at his greatest. Here all the resources of the orchestra are brought into play, and free use is made of "leading motives," including (in association with the idea of the Divine Power) an extremely happy quotation of the phrase given in the "Hallelujah Chorus" of "The Messiah," to the words "And He shall reign for ever and ever."

MORNING POST.

Few composers living could have written more beautiful music than that with which Dr. Mackenzie accompanies the spoken words. . . . The contrast to the simple gaiety of the scene in the fields is presented in the magnificent Funeral March and Chorus, which stands as the finest number in the work—deep in expression and strikingly original in treatment. . . . There can be no doubt that "The Dream of Jubal" is not only his best work, but it is so the best work of the kind produced by any modern composer.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

Dr. Mackenzie, it must at once be said, has thoroughly caught the spirit of Mr. Joseph Bennett's lines. The impression created upon the attentive listener is, indeed, that of a single mind having imagined and executed both words and music. Of course, this is exactly as it should be. . . . The choral writing is worthy of the composer who penned the magnificent series forming the "Procession of the Ark," in the "Rose of Sharon," whilst the instrumentation is throughout picturesque and vivid, as well as highly interesting to those who wish to go below the surface and critically analyse Dr. Mackenzie's method of workmanship.

ATHENÆUM.

It may be said at once that "The Dream of Jubal" is not a mere pièce d'occasion, which, when once heard, is quickly forgotten and can never be revived. Though composed for a special celebration there is no reason why the work should not survive on its literary and musical merits. We speak advisedly of both, because the libretto, by Mr. Joseph Bennett, is very far above the average in felicity of idea and beauty of expression.

THE WORLD.

The work is not only clever but really poetical, and so far surpasses all the previous efforts of the same author with which I am acquainted. The music altogether is distinguished, musicianlike, impressive; especially so is the first quartet with chorus, "Gloria in Excelsis," and the last, the "Invocation," with two harps.

VANITY FAIR.

For once the poet has been allowed to take his place side by side with the musician, and not, as usual, occupy a merely subordinate position. . . . Mr. Joseph Bennett has produced a work which in every way does him infinite credit—a work full of graceful imagery, tender thoughts, and poetic language. Throughout the orchestration was most charming.

SUNDAY TIMES.

There is in the poem an elegance of diction, a dignity of style, and a force of expression betraying an ardent admirer and capable imitator of Milton. From first to last the reader's lines are in the highest sense poetic. As to the accompanying music, enough that it has all the appropriateness, refinement, and melodic charm Dr. Mackenzie knew how to concentrate upon it. All Dr. Mackenzie's strength and individuality and wealth of resource come to the surface in the three magnificent concerted pieces now alluded to. . . . they attain, indeed, to as lofty an eminence as any English composer has yet reached. . . . In summing up "The Dream of Jubal" we have had no difficulty whatever as regards the estimation of its manifold beauties, poetic and musical.

LIVERPOOL COURIER.

"The Dream of Jubal" is simply a beautiful symphonic poem, accompanied by voices in the best possible manner, and the keenest insight to a judicious use of poetic recitation, combined with solo voices and grand choral features seldom grasped, and almost as rarely attempted by any other composer. During the performance the audience was spell-bound.

LIVERPOOL MERCURY.

There can be no manner of doubt that Dr. Mackenzie has for ever closed the mouths of such people as object to works written to order, and produced one fit to stand shoulder to shoulder and side by side with the noblest in the realm of music. From first to last there is not an episode of note unrepentant with interest.

LIVERPOOL DAILY POST.

It is an entirely worthy and noble conception, quite original, and of a fibre which arouses interest at the outset, and holds it enthralled until the last chord is heard.

GRAND MARCH.

COMPOSED BY

This descriptive March is very effective and at the same time not at all difficult. In the opening movement one can almost imagine the triumphal entry of a conquering army returning from battle; and the Hymn of Praise which forms the trio is a most charming movement of a calm religious character, and greatly enhances the effect of the brilliant finale.

OCTOBER 1, 1889.

MUSICAL EXAMINATIONS.

PERSONS who make it their business to observe the changing conditions of music in this country must long have been impressed by the rise and progress of musical examinations. The movement is one of comparatively recent growth, and owes its origin to the Society of Arts. The scheme of local examinations was proposed by the late John Hullah, but its successful prosecution is due to Trinity College (London), who took up the work when it was temporarily dropped by the Society, and started a system of local examinations in the chief centres of population. In all probability the claim of Trinity College to the honour of having "set the ball a-rolling" would be disputed by the Tonic Sol-faists, whose system of conferring certificates, after due investigation, through local agents, is certainly much older than any other with the same object. But, leaving the Tonic Sol-faists out of count, as here we may, then Trinity College is the admitted pioneer of an enterprise which now covers the whole land with an intricate organisation, managed from various centres, having differing standards and, we fear it must be added, by no means equal value. The Royal Academy of Music soon followed in the wake of Trinity College; other institutions fell into line with these, and, not a long while ago, we believe, the Royal College of Music had thoughts of joining the universal movement on its own account.

It may very well be that the success of musical examinations has startled even those who expected most from them. No doubt the original idea was to make them more an advertisement of the examining body than anything else. In effect, however, the system met a great desire, which had before been neglected simply because it was inarticulate. The public were found ready and eager to be examined; candidates came pouring in, and those who had dug to open a small spring found that they had let loose the waters of a great river. Local examinations were at once a source of much profit, as the published accounts of Trinity College show, and as, in all likelihood, those of the Royal Academy of Music would demonstrate, could they be obtained. Agreeable enough in one aspect, this very success had a danger under its fair outside. The temptation was, and is, to regard examinations as primarily a source of revenue for institutions and of remuneration for examiners; artistic considerations dropping into the second place. This consequence followed the extraordinary and sustained supply of examinees as naturally as re-action follows action, and could not fail of an ally in the weaknesses of human nature, from which not even directors of colleges and academies are wholly free.

Of one thing we are sure—the tendency of the present state of things, with its competing examiners, and its varying standard of qualifications, tends to degrade a system which, properly worked, would do much good. It must also drag down the value of all musical certificates and honours. The public cannot be expected to discriminate between one examining body and another, and when they see—as may any day and anywhere be seen—"passed" candidates of glaring and hopeless incompetency, the danger is that they will tar all with the same brush, and sweepingly condemn the whole thing as a mere machine for getting money. We do not say that this point has been reached, or that it is within measurable distance, but towards it the course of recent developments has certainly led, and the time has come for preventive measures.

What ought those preventive measures to be? A similar state of things on the Continent would receive heroic treatment. We should hear of an examining musical university charged with an exclusive mission and responsible to the "higher powers," all voluntary and irresponsible workers being swept out of the field. That would undoubtedly settle the immediate question, though it may eventually raise others. In England, however, we are not accustomed to such lofty measures. The time may come when we shall have an examining musical university—the sooner the better—but it will grow out of a felt necessity and not be imposed upon the unready and unwilling. For the present, therefore, we must look to voluntary effort for an arrest of the degradation of examination, and it is our duty to hail, as a promising initial step, the alliance of the Royal Academy of Music with the Royal College of Music, some time ago determined upon, and the details of which are now under consideration. The union, for examining purposes, of these institutions cannot fail of important results. So great is their united weight and influence that we may confidently expect a rush for "sittings" under their examiners, and look to see such a value set upon their certificates as will necessarily raise the standard of qualification for all others, and put a check upon the present wholesale trading in parchment. Briefly, the appearance on the scene of this solid body, supported by names illustrious in society and art, and carrying weight which all must feel, will steady the shaky and irregular system at present in vogue, and reduce to order that which is now chaotic and without guiding principles of a high and worthy kind.

We may assume the existence in musical circles of much curiosity with regard to the proposed scheme of joint examination by the two leading schools of music. That feeling we are able, in some measure, to satisfy, premising that, at the present moment, nothing has gone beyond a provisional stage. Here, also, it may be proper to observe—

I. That the examinations will be carried on under the charters of both the associated bodies, and not, as has been said in haste, under that of the Royal College only. The charter of the Royal Academy describes that institution as a society "to promote the cultivation of the science of music, and to afford facilities for attaining perfection in it by assisting with general instruction all persons desirous of acquiring a knowledge thereof." Moreover, it goes on to say: "We do further declare and grant that the Board of Directors shall have the power to make such rules, orders, and bye-laws as they shall deem useful and necessary for the regulation and management of the said body politic and corporate." These words are sufficiently elastic to cover the proposed action, and to render needless an invidious distinction between the contracting parties.

II. It is important to observe that the two institutions have come together simply for the purpose of local examination, being in all other respects independent of each other; and that the term "local examination" has no reference to the London examinations for L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M., which will, as heretofore, be carried on individually.

We now come to such matters of detail as have been provisionally settled by a joint committee, and will, in due course, be submitted to the governing bodies of the two schools for ratification.

I. Examination will take place in three subjects—(a) Theory of Music; (b) Practice of Music (Instrumental); (c) Practice of Music (Vocal). All the ground will be thus covered, while candidates may choose to compete in any one, or more, of the divisions.

II. There will be two Examiners instead of the one provided by the present system. The advantage of this change must be obvious, if only because it affords a surer guarantee of good faith.

III. Each candidate, whatever his or her subject, must work a preliminary paper on the rudiments of music. Should the candidate fail in this paper, no further opportunity will be afforded him during the year, and half (one guinea) of the examination fee will be returned. We may take for granted that this proposed rule is the result of unpleasant experience caused by a flux of candidates who, in their ignorance, do not know how little they know, and who simply give trouble.

IV. Successful candidates will receive certificates signed by the Chairman of the Associated Board, the Director of the R.C.M., and the Principal of the R.A.M.

V. The Board will be represented at the examining centres by gentlemen who render honorary service, and not, as heretofore in the case of the R.A.M., by paid professional musicians, most of whom, to their honour be it said, have offered to act in their previous capacity, although the post will no longer involve remunerative work.

So far as regards the Committee's labours up to the present. When the scheme is complete, and has been ratified by the two governing bodies, the members of the Associated Board will be formally appointed, as thus:—President, H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, K.G.; Board—Chairman, The Right Hon. Lord Charles Brudenell Bruce; A. C. Mackenzie, Esq., Mus. Doc., Principal of R.A.M.; Sir George Grove, D.C.L., LL.D., Director of R.C.M.; Professor James Dewar, F.R.S., R.A.M.; Alberto Randegger, Esq., R.A.M.; Thomas Threlfall, Esq., R.A.M.; Frederick Westlake, Esq., R.A.M.; F. Meadows White, Esq., Q.C., R.A.M.; Edward W. Hamilton, Esq., C.B., R.C.M.; C. Hubert H. Parry, Esq., Mus. Doc., R.C.M.; Professor Sir John Stainer, Mus. Doc., R.C.M.; Sir Arthur Sullivan, Mus. Doc., R.C.M.; Franklin Taylor, Esq., R.C.M.

We need only add to this preliminary notice that the complete syllabus will, it is hoped, be issued at the end of this month, and that operations will begin without loss of time. The first results are certain to engage the attention of musical people everywhere. We hope and believe that they will command approval also.

THE RIVAL EXPERTS ON VOICE-TRAINING.

THE most significant feature of Sir Morell Mackenzie's very readable paper on "Song" in the August issue of the Contemporary Review is the explicit admission that science, so far from having proved a help, has turned out to be rather a hindrance to vocal training. The rules of the singing masters, though "scientifically absurd," are admitted by one of the most eminent specialists living to be "practically useful." The physiologist can tell us what goes on in the larynx and surrounding regions, but the old empirical rules are the best guide for enabling us to produce the requisite effects. This is not merely true of quality of tone, but of such practical matters as breathing, wherein modern anatomists, so Sir Morell assures us, are fain to admit that the old Italian masters were right and the quasi-scientific teachers wrong. On the general question of vocal teaching the writer pronounces somewhat dogmatically, "There is no such thing as a self-taught singer," for he immediately proceeds to declare that singing is chiefly learned by imitation, and it is obvious that a singer may study in this way without going to a master at all. As for school and method, we must follow the Virgilian precept—antiquam exquirite matrem—and go exclusively to Italy, the ancient mother of song, for our guidance; and, above all, we are to taboo the physiological singing master. "To masters I venture to hint that they should strive to train their pupils according to the traditions of the golden age of song before the laryngoscope was invented." As to the age at which the training of the voice may be commenced, Sir Morell Mackenzie is of opinion that it can hardly be begun too early, provided the method be the right one. "Many of the finest voices have been trained almost from the cradle, so to speak." On the further and much mooted point whether vocal training should be interrupted during the so-called "cracking" period, he professes himself an obstinate dissenter from the orthodox view. As a general rule, he holds that "within certain limits, and under strict supervision by a competent person," such training may be safely carried on when the voice is in the transition stage of its development from childhood to adolescence. The means prescribed by Sir Morell Mackenzie to keep the voice in perfect condition are sensible if not original. The singer must above all be regular and unremitting in practice. He must never use his voice when it is not at its best, and he should study to preserve his general health, taking plenty of outdoor exercise and avoiding the sedentary life led by so many vocalists. On the great question of diet Sir Morell preserves an impartial attitude. A vocalist need not live like a Spartan, and it is certainly a mistake for him to feed like a fighting cock. The concluding portion of the article is devoted to a lament over the prevalent scarcity of really fine voices, and an attempt to account for this dearth. The sting of the complaint is in great measure removed, as he himself admits, by the fact that it is one which recurs periodically. Lord Mount Edgcumbe bewailed the decadence of the bel canto just before the epoch of Malibran, Pasta, Lablache, and Rubini. As early as the beginning of the last century Tosi bewailed the decadence of the vocal art. Still, it must be admitted that whether we are on the verge of a revival or not, the present age is not rich in great voices, and that in endurance latter-day singers compare unfavourably with those of preceding generations. Sir Morell Mackenzie traces our poverty in voices of the highest class to three causes: inadequacy of training, want of good teachers, and the gradual rise of the concert pitch. His remarks on the first cause are just, if severe. "Years are ungrudgingly given to acquiring a mastery of the piano or violin, and it is recognised that to excel with either of these instruments seven or eight hours of laborious practice every day are necessary. Yet many seem to fancy that the voice can be trained in a few months. How preposterous such a notion is must be evident to anyone who takes the trouble to think about the matter. In the case of the violin or piano, the instrument is perfect from the outset, and the student has only to learn to play it; the singer, on the other hand, has to develop—in some cases almost to create—his instrument, and then to master the technique of it. . . . A vocalist, nowadays, thinks that a year in England and a second year in Italy is all that is needed to equip him for a brilliant artistic career. In the 'brave days of old' singers never deemed their vocal education complete until they had given six or seven years to the ceaseless study of their art." After some sensible remarks on the pernicious results of the enhanced pitch, Sir Morell winds up by reiterating his advice to voice trainers to return to "methods consecrated by glorious tradition and fruitful of results which, as experience has abundantly proved, cannot be attained by shorter or easier ways." The whole article is in fact a laudatio temporis acti, and, coming as it does from a physiological expert, is a singular confession of the sterility of science in the sphere of art.

Sir Morell Mackenzie's strictures on the laryngoscopic method and other somewhat startling pronouncements were eminently calculated to awaken a controversy. And so, sure enough, the subsequent number of the Contemporary Review contains a rejoinder from Mr. Lennox Browne. Sir Morell informs us casually in the course of his discourse that his work "Hygiene of the Vocal Organs" has been translated into eight languages. Similarly we gather from a foot-note to Mr. Lennox Browne's article that his work "Voice, Song, and Speech," has run to eleven editions. "The Hygiene of the Vocal Organs," we may remark parenthetically, has only reached a sixth edition; but then there are the eight languages. Setting the question of editions and translations aside, we notice that Mr. Lennox Browne, in a contribution which has the commendable merit of brevity, confines himself exclusively to the consideration of three opinions in which Sir Morell Mackenzie differs from those generally accepted as orthodox. Imprimis he prefers the costal or rib breathing to the abdominal, though he admits the latter to be the natural method. Sir Morell, to support his contention, cites what Mr. Lennox Browne calls apocryphal authority with regard to the practice of the old Italian school. Furthermore, he summons the Emperor Nero as a witness. But Mr. Lennox Browne has, so to speak, already subpoenaed Nero. That eminent vocalist, it appears, used, as a portion of his exercises, "to lie on his back with a small plate of lead on his stomach." This, says Sir Morell, was probably for the purpose of checking the tendency to abdominal breathing. On the contrary, argues Mr. Lennox Browne, it was to strengthen his diaphragm. It confirms the views of Mr. Behnke, Mr. Lennox Browne's collaborateur, and the method is daily practised by Mr. Behnke to "educate" and strengthen the diaphragm. "Pupils are instructed in our book to practise all breathing lessons in the prone position, with one hand placed lightly on the abdomen, the other on the lower ribs, in order that they may feel those parts expand at each inspiration, and contract at each expiration." The late Jules Perkins appears to have had a remarkably well "educated" diaphragm. Mr. Lennox Browne bears testimony to the fact that "he could repel, simply by its action, the fist of any one, however strongly pressed, against the upper portion of his abdomen, when inflated by a full diaphragmatic inhalation." Here the Emperor Nero disappears for the time being from the controversy, but in Sir Morell's "surrejoinder"—for he is, of course, bound to surrejoin—we may look forward to the production of some more ancient and more irrefragable testimony in favour of the costal method. Surely the Egyptian hieroglyphic records throw light on the subject.

The next moot point is whether there is any natural distinction between the sexes in the mode of breathing. Sir Morell apparently thinks so. Mr. Lennox Browne contends that the difference is simply due to artificial constriction. Certainly, so far as logic goes, the latter has the better of it here. As he puts it, "It is indeed 'curious' that Sir Morell Mackenzie, having contended that diaphragmatic breathing is not the best method, and having rightly stated that the use of stays impairs that method of respiration, should finally affirm that although 'the slight pressure exercised by stays does not matter in the case of ladies who are not called upon to use their voices professionally, and who do not care to excel as amateurs, . . . in the case of the artiste it is quite otherwise; here anything which in the smallest degree diminishes the vital capacity handicaps the singer.'"

Finally, Mr. Lennox Browne joins issue with Sir Morell as to his heretical views on training voices in the "cracking" period. In order to put the matter to the test of practical experience, he and Mr. Behnke took a plébiscite, and out of 190 answers only two held it to be safe for a boy to sing while his voice was breaking. Amongst the majority were such names as those of Sir John Stainer, Dr. Bridge (of Westminster), Mr. Edward Lloyd, and others. Some of the correspondents "illustrate their convictions by recounting the ruin to their own voice or to those of others within their personal cognisance, by persistence in singing throughout the period of change." And so Mr. Lennox Browne winds up with the expression of his opinion that in the face of such overwhelming testimony it appears to him "unwise—to put it mildly—for any one not possessing musical knowledge or teaching experience to offer even a qualified opinion in contradiction of it." This then is the present stage of the controversy: the Emperor Nero and his leaden plate has been bowled over, and the weight of practical experience has been set in the scale against a dogmatic assertion as to the treatment of the voice when cracking. On the other hand, the prospect of educating our diaphragms appals us, for we suppose that a diaphragm can suffer from over-pressure as well as a brain. We accordingly await with interest the further vindication of his views by the champion of rib-respiration.

By JOSEPH BENNETT.

HANDEL resumed his public labours, after the second bankruptcy, in February, 1746, and it was characteristic of this great and just man that he cared, first of all, to discharge an obligation under which he lay to his subscribers of the previous disastrous season. They had paid in advance for twenty-four performances, but the master was able to give only sixteen. He owed them eight, and the wiping off of this debt was his instant care. A preliminary announcement to this effect appeared in the General Advertiser of January 31. It was there stated: "We hear that Mr. Handel promises to exhibit some musical entertainments on Wednesdays or Fridays the ensuing Lent, with intent to make good to the subscribers that favoured him last season the number of performances he was not then able to complete. In order thereto, he is preparing a new 'Occasional Oratorio,' which is designed to be performed at the Theatre Royal in Covent Garden." On February 8 a further statement informed the public: "On Friday next, February 14, will be performed a new 'Occasional Oratorio,' with a new Concerto on the organ. The subscribers who favoured Mr. Handel last season with their subscription are desired to send to the office in Covent Garden Theatre on the day of performance where two tickets shall be delivered to each, gratis, in order to make good the number of performances subscribed to last season." We thus see that not only did Handel acquit himself of a debt due under circumstances which the lax morality of the age would have regarded as an excuse for letting it alone, but he took care to perform the act in a most generous manner by preparing a new oratorio, when, with far less trouble, he might have revived some old compositions. It was conduct such as this that eventually endeared him to the English public and did no little to crown his closing years with wealth and honour. Amid all their faults, the English can appreciate an honest straightforward man.

Schœlcher is very angry with the late G. A. Macfarren and others on account of statements to the effect that the "Occasional Oratorio" was "written, or rather compiled, in great haste, being composed chiefly of pieces from 'Israel in Egypt,' and other of Handel's previous works, and such new matter only as was necessary to connect these selections." The Alsatian biographer exclaims, "One is astonished to meet with such statements from the pens of these erudite musicians!" and points out that only six pieces in the entire work are borrowed from its predecessors. When an oratorio contains but six "conveyed" numbers out of thirty-seven, it can hardly be called a compilation, but it may be that the writers of whom Schœlcher complains shared a general impression, and did not take the trouble to verify it. Handel's indignant champion adds: "I can only find one explanation for the vulgar error, which is that as the pieces made use of by the composer, when he had no time to finish the work, are all very popular, they have more especially attracted the attention of those critics who make but a superficial examination of the scores. But if these be abstracted, thirty-one original pieces remain, such as would create the reputation of thirty-one new composers." It may be worth while to mention here that the popular and brilliant overture to the "Occasional Oratorio" was written for the work, as was the air, "O liberty, thou choicest treasure," afterwards transferred to "Judas Maccabæus," in which piece it is best known.

Handel's venture with the "Occasional" proved no more successful than that with "Deborah" and "Hercules" had been. The season ran to its third Concert, and then stopped for lack of patronage. But the giant did not despair. Great, resourceful man as he was, another expedient remained available, and the master resolved to try it. Up to the year 1746 he had ordered his Oratorio Concerts on the plan of the opera, inviting prepaid subscriptions for the series, and appealing mainly to the higher classes of amateurs. Year after year this method had brought disaster in its train; what if he threw himself upon the masses of the people and took the chance of their favour from evening to evening? The plan was tried in 1747, and largely helped to bring about a complete reversal of former experiences. Here the run of bad luck ended, and our sorely troubled musician, taking the tide of prosperity at its flood, went on to fortune.

The change was, no doubt, greatly facilitated by the fact that Handel exactly hit the taste of the town with "Judas Maccabæus," written in July and August of the previous year (1746). Apart from the magnificent music of this oratorio, outside circumstances were favourable to its success. The Stuart insurrection had only recently been put down in blood and ruin; the passion of a critical time still ran high, and Dr. Morell, Handel's librettist, was wide awake enough to connect his book with that popular hero and saviour of his country, William, Duke of Cumberland, alias "Bloody Cumberland." The dedication to that exalted and sanguinary personage ran thus: "To his Royal Highness, Prince William, Duke of Cumberland, this faint portraiture of a truly wise, valiant, and virtuous commander, as to the possessor of the like noble qualities, is, with most profound respect and veneration, inscribed by his Royal Highness's most obedient and most devoted servant, the author." Poof! let us burn a pastille, or, failing that, some brown paper, and pass on.

"Judas Maccabæus" appealed not only to the Whigs of 1747, but also to the Jews of the same date. Mr. Rockstro writes: "The new oratorio offered an attraction which they could not resist. Handel had painted the hero of their later history in colours as brilliant as his deeds of might; and they thronged the theatre night after night, to their own entertainment and the composer's substantial profit. We can well understand the delight with which they must have listened to the magnificent chorus 'We worship God, and God alone'—not only as a masterpiece of contrapuntal skill and melodious invention, but one of the grandest confessions of faith that ever was expressed in music. Anything more striking than the contrast drawn between idolatrous reverence 'to the rude stock and sculptured stone' and the true worship of the one true God, it would be impossible to imagine, and in enforcing the point in his own resistless language, Handel preached a sermon to which neither Jew nor Christian could listen unmoved."

The upshot of all favourable circumstances was that, during the Lent of 1747, "Judas Maccabæus" had a six-fold hearing by crowded and enthusiastic audiences. Hanoverian partisans applauded, in the Jewish hero, the exploits of their own successful leader; Jews triumphed in the successes of their national champion, and many others, we may well believe, listened with growing delight to Handel's exalted and inspiring strains. The brilliant success of 1747, both as regards the novelty produced, and the system of appealing to the public at large, determined the remainder of Handel's career. We shall have to speak of no more struggles, no more "alarums and excursions." The old ship has got into smooth water, and borne along by the steadiest of trade winds, reaches port with safety and glory.

Between the Lent of 1747 and that of 1748, Handel composed "Alexander Bælus" (finished July 4, 1747) and "Joshua" (completed August 19 in the same year). The first of these works was produced at Covent Garden, March 9, 1748; the second on the 23rd of the same month. It is generally supposed that "Alexander Bælus" was an attempt to follow up the Jewish success of "Judas Maccabæus." If so, it failed, the work being given but three times during the season, while "Joshua" had four hearings, and "Judas Maccabæus" six. "Alexander Bælus" was revived in 1758, and, as far as can be ascertained, no subsequent performance of the oratorio has taken place, save one given under the auspices of the Cæcilian Society. For "Joshua" a better fate was in store. Given at least four times in subsequent seasons by Handel himself, it still remains on the active list of oratorios, and is heard from time to time, though not with the frequency deserved by its merits. In connection with this oratorio, Shield ("Introduction to Harmony") tells a story of Father Haydn which should not be passed over here: "Travelling from London to Taplow with the father of modern harmony, and having, the preceding evening, observed his countenance expressing rapturous astonishment during the Concert of Antient Music, I embraced the favourable opportunity of enquiring how he estimated the chorus in 'Joshua,' 'The nations tremble.' The reply was, 'He had long been acquainted with music, but never knew half its powers before he heard it, and he was perfectly certain that only one inspired author ever did, or ever would, pen so sublime a composition.'"

For the season of 1749 Handel prepared "Solomon" (completed June 19, 1748) and "Susannah" (August 24, same year), appending to the score of the former a memorandum of his age—sixty-three. These works were respectively performed twice and four times during the Lent of 1749. About their merit it is unnecessary to speak. Lovers of Handel know them well, and have for the magnificent choruses in "Solomon" an admiration which is almost worship.

Here we may conveniently pause in the record of oratorio, and dwell upon an interesting event which shows us Handel acting, for the last time, as a kind of Court musician. The Treaty of Aix-la-Chapelle, signed October 7, 1748, had put an end to a long and exhausting war, for the close of which everybody was grateful. Under these circumstances, what could be more natural than that the greatest composer of the age should celebrate the happy event by some exercise of his art? Handel had written Water Music; why not Fire Music also, as an accompaniment to a pyrotechnic display in the Green Park? He himself saw no objection, and set about the task, preparing an overture and five movements—two Allegros, a Bourée, a Siciliana, and two Minuets, scored for a full orchestra of strings, wind, and percussion. The new composition was rehearsed on April 21, 1749, and on the following morning the town read in the General Advertiser: "Yesterday there was the brightest and most numerous assembly ever known at the Spring Gardens, Vauxhall, on occasion of the rehearsal of Mr. Handel's music for the Royal fireworks." The Gentleman's Magazine gave a fuller account: "Friday, 21st, was performed, at Vauxhall Gardens, the rehearsal of the music for the fireworks, by a band of 100 musicians, to an audience of above 12,000 persons (tickets, 9s. 6d.) So great a resort occasioned such a stoppage on London Bridge that no carriage could pass for three hours. The footmen were so numerous as to obstruct the passage, so that a scuffle ensued, in which some gentlemen were wounded." The performance, as an accompaniment to the fireworks, took place on April 27. Regarding it we may still read in the Gentleman's Magazine:—"The machine was situated in the Green Park, 500 feet from his Majesty's library, and represented a magnificent Doric temple, from which extended two wings, terminated by pavilions, 114 feet in height, to the top of his Majesty's arms, 410 feet long. Invented and designed by the Chevalier Servandoni. Disposition of the firework: after a grand overture of warlike instruments, composed by Mr. Handel, a signal was given for the commencement of the firework, which opened by a Royal salute of 101 brass ordnance," &c. Melancholy to relate, as coming after so much preparation, the "machine" caught fire, and his Majesty's library narrowly escaped supplying a set piece not provided for in the programme of the day. A pianoforte edition of the firework music was issued by a London publisher on the occasion of peace with Russia in 1855, but otherwise the work belongs only to Handelian libraries.

Handel appears, himself, to have been well satisfied with the Firework Music, and, within a few days of its production offered a performance of it for the benefit of his pet charity, the Foundling Hospital. Some particulars of this step and its results may be gleaned from Brownlow's "Memoranda of the Foundling Hospital," where we read: "On the 4th of May, 1749, he (Handel) attended the Committee at the Hospital, and offered a performance of vocal and instrumental music; the money arising therefrom to be applied towards the finishing of the chapel." From the Gentleman's Magazine, Schœlcher quotes a record of the Concert:—"Saturday, 27th.—The Prince and Princess of Wales, with a great number of persons of quality and distinction, were at the Chapel of the Foundling Hospital to hear several pieces of vocal and instrumental music, composed by George Frederic Handel, Esq., for the benefit of the foundation. I. The music for the late fireworks, and the Anthem on the Peace; II. Select pieces from the Oratorio of 'Solomon,' relating to the dedication of the Temple; and III., several pieces composed for the occasion, the words taken from Scripture and applicable to the charity and its benefactors. There was no collection, but the tickets were at half-a-guinea, and the audience above a thousand, besides a gift of £2,000 from his Majesty, and £50 from an unknown." As a return for his generosity, Handel was made a Governor of the Hospital. The pieces specially composed for the occasion form what is called the Foundling Hospital Anthem, "Blessed is he that considereth the poor." They became the property of the institution, and, thirty years ago, remained unpublished.
